was 5.8%.

Total Mercury sales in 1985 totaled 519,059, down from 527,198 in 1984. Lincoln sales, with Town Car sales alone surging 29% to 117,606, increased to 165,138 from 151,474 despite declines for the low volume Continental and Mark VII models.

Division officials expect total L-M sales in the 700,000 range this year, with share holding at about 6%. The compact Topaz, one year older and facing tougher Japanese competition, is off 38% for the year, while Grand Marquis, with a platform dating to 1979, is off 21% from 1985 during the first four months of 1986. But improved supply of the Sable, which debuted Dec. 26, should help stabilize market share.

The key product at L-M is Sable, which division general manager Thomas Wagner has called the most important car L-M ever has introduced. The whole thrust of L-M marketing and advertising in the past three years has anticipated the new flagship model.

"The basic idea has been to establish a platform upon which to launch Sable," Mr. Riley says.

So far, Ford is selling out both the Atlanta and Chicago Sable assembly plants. Through the first four months of 1986, Sable sales stood at 26,921; the division has projected an annual rate of about 150,000 cars.

The Hermosillo car, which arrives early next year, is figured to be a Lynx replacement, although Mr. Ford says the two models will be sold side by side for "a short period."

How to market the Mexican car is still under study. L-M could present it as a sturdy world-beater, a la Escort, or as a sporty subcompact alternative to basic small-car transportation. Marketing executives also must decide whether to advertise the connection with Mazda, which is 25% owned by Ford and taking an increasingly large role in small-car product plans.

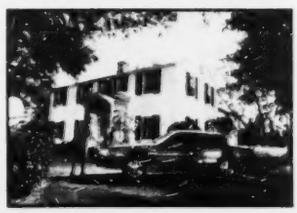
The departure of slow-selling Capri from the L-M line this fall leaves the division without a representative in the small, specialty segment.

Capri's woes exemplify the problems of a fuzzy market presence. With little to distinguish it from Mustang and short advertising shrift, Capri sales, at 15,389 in 1985, have been a mere fraction of Mustang's (157,821 sold in 1985). On the other hand, the Mercury Cougar, with its distinctive lines and youthful market orientation, has done well in relation to its cousin, Ford Thunderbird.

In its search for the ideal customers for these cars, L-M's objectives are clear cut.

"The 25-to-45-year-old age group with an income of $30,000 —that's our target," Mr. Ford says. The division does not define its market simply in terms of income and age. Mr. Riley says the baby boomers have a healthy self-image that Mercury wants for its own.

"They see themselves as keeping up with the times," he says. "They desire to be seen as very, very contemporary."



Lincoln-Mercury's tv ads featuring songs of the 1960s have been a hit with baby boomers.

Specifically, L-M wants climbers: Younger overachievers earning handsome salaries today and well positioned to do even better in the future.

For instance, when L-M set a comprehensive new women's marketing plan into motion a few weeks ago it announced yearlong contractual buys in three career magazines, Ms., Savvy and Working Woman, while bypassing the Seven Sisters.

So far the strategy seems successful. Buyers of the new Sable are younger than the average 60-year-old buyer of the Marquis it replaced.

The original target for the Sable was a 48-year-old customer; preliminary research shows buyers in their mid-50s with incomes ranging between $40,000 and $50,000, according to Mr. Ford. The average Cougar customer today is 35, compared with 44 in 1983.

To reach the baby boomer target, Mercury's current tv campaign is keyed to songs of the 1960s. Although it seems to have been part of an avalanche of oldie-but-goodie musical themes on tv, Y&R has done it differently than most, leaving lyrics intact, replicating the original record down to the last moan and shout and marrying music to slice-of-life vignettes, not product spec sheets.

The first wave, which began in September, 1984, featured eight songs of the '60s. Last fall's second set of spots offered original talent—The Four Tops' rerecording of "Reach Out," The Temptations' "Get Ready," sung by one of the group's original members, Eddie Kendricks and a Martha Reeves revival of "Heat Wave"—as well as soundalike versions of the Beatles'

"Good Day Sunshine," the Beach Boys' "Surfin Safari" and Bette Midler's "Do You Wanna Dance?"

One story line was carried over into this year's spots. A 1985 Cougar spot, set to a thumping rendition of "Proud Mary," depicts a young woman who quits a newspaper job and rides off in her Cougar to write the great American screenplay.

L-M followed up this year with the same woman—screenplay finished—walking out on sleazy producers for someone more promising.

The idea has been to use the cars as backdrop to the owners' lives, rather than the other way around. But with tv now overrun with rock nostalgia, L-M is considering a different approach.

"Everyone comes up and tells us they really like what we're doing and it seems to be doing a relatively good job for us," Mr. Ford says. "But on the other hand everybody is doing it now. So I've said to the agency that we've got to evaluate our effectiveness and see if it is time to do something else."

Mercury's additional "The shape you want to be in" theme also attaches to the baby boomer fitness binge and accents Ford's aerodynamic styling.

Meanwhile, Lincoln's "What a luxury car should be" has played off Cadillac's problems carving out an identity for down-sized, front-wheel-drive models.

A Town Car tv spot called "Valet" features country clubbers mistaking Caddies for Buicks and Olds. The pointed humor reportedly has peeved Cadillac executives, but Mr. Ford sounds less than contrite.

"Reaction has been interesting," he says. "We didn't mean it as an insult to Cadillac, although based on what I've read they have chosen to take it that way. It was our attempt at having some fun."

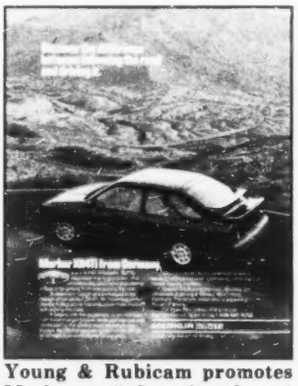
Shaky start sends Merkur for repairs

One of Lincoln-Mercury's worries in courting the baby boom generation was the appeal of trendy European sport sedans. To counter that competition, most L-M dealers have been awarded franchises for the division's new Merkur product line.

It is a strong marketing base for the technically sophisticated high-performance cars, built by Ford of Germany to do battle in the industry segment controlled by BMW, Volvo, Saab and Audi. But the March, 1985, launch of the XR4Ti hatchback was anything but smooth.

Advertising was in motion before dealers were adequately stocked, and once inventory was on hand, L-M discovered it had asked for the wrong mix of options. The division underestimated U.S. demand for automatic transmissions, leather interiors and exterior colors other than silver and gray.

L-M originally targeted sales of 20,000 units, but only about half that sold in the first 12 months. The division is now eyeing annual sales of between 15,000 and 18,000 cars.



Young & Rubicam promotes Merkur as "advancing the art of driving."

A second Merkur model, the $20,000 to $25,000 Scorpio luxury sedan, will join the lineup late this year and a third car—probably a new Sierra notchback to be introduced in Europe early next year—is expected to arrive in late 1987 or early 1988.

With "Advancing the art of driving," Young & Rubicam has placed Merkur advertising squarely in the Eurosedan sophisticated enthusiast mode. L-M general marketing manager Edsel Ford says the theme line will continue with Scorpio.

L-M's strategy of emphasizing brands is key to Merkur. There is a lingering identity problem with the new German line and some confusion about whether Merkur is a make or a model.

As a result, L-M has tried to raise awareness for the perhaps overly alphanumeric XR4Ti name and has sought to increase exposure for the car by pressing it into daily rental service, a ploy that helped ignite Lincoln Town Car sales three years ago.

By the end of this month, some 3,000 Merkurs should be available at about 300 Budget Rent-A-Car airport locations around the country. L-M will have to wait and see if the added exposure remedies Merkur's bad start.

Korean company roars into mini market

By Michael Kaplan

Just three years ago, Hyundai Motor Co. was a tiny division of a giant, but obscure, Asian construction conglomerate, producing fewer than 100,000 cars a year and exporting just 18,500—and none to North America.

Times have changed. Today, Hyundai (which rhymes with Sunday) manufactures the best-selling imported car in Canada, and its splashy entrance into the U.S. market this February—with the $4,995 front-wheel-drive Excel subcompact—has sent shock waves reverberating throughout executive suites in Japan and Detroit.

Priced $500 to $1,000 lower than most other cars in its class—defined as minicars, or those smaller and cheaper than subcompacts—the Excel is more than just another low-price import diverting customer attention away from the Big Three auto marketers. It represents the opening salvo in what promises to be a no-holds-barred multinational battle for the low end of the American auto market.

It's not that the Excel is a revolutionary car. It's not. But it's place of origin is: South Korea, a country better known for manufacturing sneakers than sedans.

Thanks to a skilled work force, low labor costs and a favorable currency exchange rate, South Korea successfully has entered markets, including steel, shipbuilding and electronics, once dominated by the Japanese, underpricing them as Japan underpriced Western companies a decade before. Now the battle is over auto exports.

By the end of this year, Hyundai Motor America, Garden Grove, Cal., expects to sell 100,000 cars, the most ever by a foreign company in its first year of U.S. operation. Although total Japanese imports, by contrast, will top 2.5 million units in 1986, the Hyundai threat is real.

The company's U.S. debut is backed by a $25 million national ad campaign from Backer & Spielvogel, Huntington Beach, Cal. A network of 200 new dealerships has gambled an average of $2 million to $3 million each that the Japanese can be beaten at their own game. Many industry analysts think the bet is a safe one.

That's because Hyundai is concentrating on minicars where price—Korea's strength—is more important to the consumer than technical sophistication, which remains a strong Japanese advantage. The U.S. market for minicars is expected to grow dramatically over the next several years, reaching 1.5 million cars by the end of the decade, according to a recent Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith research report.

Hyundai Motor America fired the first round in the multinational minicar battle with its $4,995 Excel.

Long conceded by Detroit, this market was largely abandoned by the Japanese, too, when imports were restricted in 1981.

"The import quotas had the effect of leveraging the Japanese out of the economy-car market, forcing them to concentrate on higher-profit items," says Robert McElwaine, president of the American International Automobile Dealers Assn., a Washington-based organization of foreign car dealers.

"We estimate there were 2 million Americans who wanted or needed to buy a new car last year, but simply couldn't do it at today's prices."

According to Mr. McElwaine, customers have been forced to settle for used cars or simply have held onto their current vehicles. The current average age of cars on the road, more than seven years, is the oldest since the end of World War II, he says.

"When the Japanese got leveraged out by quotas, it left the entry-level field wide open," Mr. McElwaine says. "Since the market hates a vacuum just as much as nature does, things will always rush in to fill it."

Last summer, the $3,990 Yugo, a minicar imported from Yugoslavia, was introduced on the East Coast. Minicars from Romania, Italy, Czechoslovakia and the U.S.S.R. are available in Canada and poised to enter the American market. And the Big Three U.S. auto marketers are looking to bring in their own imports, too (see separate stories).

But Hyundai is clearly the

front-runner, thanks largely to its dramatic success in Canada.

Hyundai had hoped to sell about 5,000 cars a year when it entered the Canadian market in 1984. But helped by favorable trade incentives offered by the Canadian government to developing nations—including unrestricted, duty-free imports—and quotas on imports of Japanese cars, Hyundai was able to undercut the competition and sell 25,000 Ponys in 1984, using newspaper ads with the simple slogan: "Take a Pony for a ride." By the end of 1985, Hyundai had become Canada's No. 1 importer and the Pony was Canada's best-selling car.

But the Pony, a rear-wheel-drive vehicle designed in the mid-1970s (and given a face lift before its Canadian launch), was heavy and sluggish, and an early model reportedly failed U.S. safety and emissions tests.

Hyundai struck a deal with Japan's Mitsubishi Motors, exchanging a 10% interest in the company (later increased to 15%) for technical assistance in developing a new front-wheel-drive car, the Excel. The model is produced at a massive new plant near Pusan, South Korea, with the capacity to build 300,000 cars a year.

With its high-tech, aerodynamic styling and a Mitsubishi-designed 1.5-liter overhead-cam engine, the four-door Excel looks and handles like most other Japanese and European subcompacts. While obviously not a luxury model, neither is the Excel completely stripped down.

The $4,995 base model, a five-door hatchback, is equipped with four-speed manual transmission and includes as standard equipment steel-belted radial tires; halogen headlights; rack-and-pinion steering; full carpeting; a rear window defroster; reclining front bucket seats; a split, fold-down rear bench seat; front and rear mud guards, and rear seat heating vents.

Suggested retail price for the most expensive Excel model, a GLS four-door sedan with automatic transmission, is $6,915; a comparable Toyota Corolla retails for more than $8,000.

Despite the obvious industry interest in the Excel as the first South Korean car available in the U.S., both tv and print ads for the car pointedly ignore its country of origin.

"It wasn't that we felt we had an image problem being from Korea, but that there was no image at all," says Joe Corey, Hyundai's national ad manager, and one of many top Hyundai executives hired away from Toyota's North American operations.

"Who'd ever heard of Hyundai? Who'd ever heard of anything automotive from Korea? So you will not see the word Korea in any of our advertising. We're trying to sell the fact we produce a durable, reliable, basic transportation type of car."

More important to Hyundai's marketing strategy is stressing the size, strength and diversity of its parent company, whose 1985 sales of $14 billion, representing 10% of South Korea's gross national product, earned it a ranking in Fortune's top 40 corporations outside the U.S. Print ads introducing the Excel were headlined, "Its father was a locomotive. Its mother was a ship," and a series of tv spots reinforce that message.

"We felt we had to position Hyundai as a large, multinational corporation that does a lot of other things very successfully in 65 countries around the world, and not just some Third World company," Mr. Corey says. "The whole tone was 'Here's a company that builds locomotives and bridges and nuclear reactors and now that company's coming to the U.S.'"

As the Hyundai is rolled out in each new market, a trio of tv spots introducing the car and the company are run for three weeks. The company and local dealers then shift to conventional product ads on tv and in newspapers. Because the car

Yugo confident despite sluggish sales

By Michael Kaplan

Of all the minicars available in the U.S., none is quite as mini as the Yugo, a $3,990 Yugoslavian car that has positioned itself as the successor to another inexpensive European import, the Volkswagen Beetle.

Yugo bills itself as reliable transportation similar to the Beetle and Model T.

The front-wheel-drive three-door hatchback, imported by Yugo America, Upper Saddle River, N.J., has become something of a cult item since its arrival in U.S. dealerships last August, despite some indications of problems with the car's reliability and safety.

Although only 10,000 Yugos were imported during the car's first eight months in the U.S. market, the Zastava, Yugoslavia, plant, where cars bound for America are assembled on separate lines using top workers, has increased production capacity. Yugo sold only 3,895 cars in the U.S. last year and 1986 sales have stabilized at about 2,000 cars a month, according to Automotive News, but company officials still predict they'll sell 60,000 cars in 1986, with annual sales increasing to 150,000 by the end of the decade.

Yugo's $12 million ad campaign from Rosenfeld, Sirowitz & Humphrey, New York, makes no effort to hide the car's Eastern European heritage.

"When we did our original research, what people were concerned about was: 'Is the car going to give me what I want? Is it a quality car? Is it going to hold up?' more so than where the car came from," says Ron Edelson, Yugo's vp-marketing services.

"We thought there might be certain reservations about purchasing a brand new car like this, but the Yugo was accepted very quickly. Obviously the price was a very big attraction," Mr. Edelson says.

At $3,990, not including tax, title, dealer prep and transportation costs, the Yugo costs less than the average U.S. used car, which sold for $5,150 in 1985, according to the National Automotive Dealers Assn.

A number of extras are thrown in, including twin dome lights, three grab handles, a vanity mirror and a cigaret lighter.

However, Yugo executives understand that people shopping for a $4,000 car are more concerned with monthly payments than vanity mirrors. A typical print ad, headlined "Introducing the same old idea," shows the car alongside a Model T Ford and a VW Beetle—cars known for value, not frills.

"The Yugo's not a whiz-bang, high-tech vehicle," Mr. Edelson says. "It's not a performance vehicle. It is what it is: Basic, reliable transportation. That's what the Model T represented then, and what the Beetle represented when it came out."

> "There's a market here for these cars, as long as they come up to standards, and they will."

> Ron Edelson
> Yugo

Other ads point out that Yugo America imported 180 tons of spare parts before the first car went on sale.

The company also has announced a 72-hour "air bridge" between the Yugoslavian factory and dealers' showrooms in the U.S. to expedite emergency parts shipments.

Sales promotions also play a large role in the Yugo marketing scheme.

The company sponsors the U.S. men's and women's Olympic volleyball teams and had reason to crow when they defeated South Korea's teams, sponsored by Hyundai Motor America. Yugo also has staged several Beetle-esque stuffing contests to see how many bodies can be crammed inside the car—30.

For all the high spirits and good press the company received upon the Yugo's debut last summer, serious questions have been raised about the car.

Though it has undergone a battery of mechanical and cosmetic changes over the years, the Yugo is based on the Fiat 128, a design dating to the early 1970s.

Since Yugo's introduction in the U.S., the company has gone through a major safety recall, and the car received low marks in crash tests conducted by the federal government.

Perhaps most damaging was a critical report in the February issue of "Consumer Reports," which faulted the car's transmission, bumpers and controls, as well as the over-all quality of construction.

"The particular sample delivered to us would have been better served squeezed into a glass of iced tea," the magazine reported.

The magazine also questioned the track record of Yugo America chairman Malcolm Bricklin, who has failed three times before to launch a new car company, most recently importing the Fiat X1/9 and Spider (renamed the Bertone and Pininfarina).

"It's already clear that consumers are having problems with the Yugo," says Jack Gillis, author of "The Car Book," a yearly guide to the safety, performance and costs of available models. "The dealer support system is woefully inadequate. The Yugo has nowhere near the level of quality of Japanese imports."

Some industry analysts, including Jack Kirnan, vp-director of automobile consulting services for Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith, New York, say the Yugo can't match the quality of the expected wave of low-price imports coming from South Korea, Brazil, Mexico and Taiwan.

"It's the wrong car at the wrong place at the wrong time," Mr. Kirnan says. "We don't think the Yugo will be a major player in the coming years."

But don't count the Yugo out quite yet. At the 1986 National Automotive Dealers Assn. convention, officials unveiled the first of two new models. The GVS, available soon, will feature a sporty trim package and an am/fm stereo, and retail for less than $4,800. The GVX, due in 1987, will offer GVS styling with a larger, 1.3-liter engine and choice of two new transmissions (a five-speed manual and an automatic).

Plans also call for a larger, five-door hatchback, a two-seat sports car, a four-door sedan and a convertible by the end of the decade.

Company officials say the cars will be priced below either its American or its Japanese competitors.

"There's a market here for these cars, as long as they come up to American standards, and they will," Mr. Edelson says. "Our commitment has been to keep our profit levels down as the importer and distributor. The manufacturer concurs with this, and so do our dealers.

"We're all making profits," he says.

"You can make healthy profits and be a healthy company, and still be able to sell a car at this price."

won't be available nationally for another year—dealerships currently are spread among 31 western, southern and East Coast states—there is no national advertising yet.

According to Mr. Corey, the message is directed toward a relatively upscale, well-educated market: 25 to 49-year-old adults who tend to be college graduates and have a household income of $30,000.

Surprisingly few pitches are directed at college students or those considering used cars. More typical is the ad directed toward young suburban couples looking for a second car; ads note that two Excels cost less than one average American sedan.

In addition to Hyundai's $25 million national account, Backer & Spielvogel administers a $20 million ad budget for the three regional dealer associations. Spot tv ads reinforce the Hyundai corporate message, but are geared toward getting customers to visit a showroom.

Although Jack Kirnan, director-automotive consulting for Merrill Lynch, says he expects Hyundai to sell 100,000 cars in the U.S. this year and 175,000 in 1987, the jury is still out on the long-range success of the Excel. It generally takes a year or so to work out the mechanical bugs for any new car model. Though some South Korean goods have been faulted for sloppy workmanship, consumer protection advocates say they have received few complaints about the Excel.

Hyundai management, however, has been tested in Canada and has earned a reputation for listening and responding to customer complaints.

"We found that for a new car company that had never dealt with us before, they were very receptive," says George Iny, a counselor at the Automotive Protection Assn., a Montreal-based consumer watchdog group that has battled other minicar importers over poor service.

"Hyundai has been hurt by having to grow very quickly. But considering where they were two years ago, starting from almost zero, they have done an unusually good job."

Hyundai's American sales network was designed to ease customer concerns. For starters, buyers automatically are given a free one-year membership in a nationwide auto club with 8,000 service outlets offering 24-hour road service.

"Since we don't have dealers all over the country," Mr. Corey says, "this gives the customer the comfort that wherever he is, his problem is going to be taken care of." Parts are stocked in three regional distribution centers.

With 4,000 applications for just 200 dealerships, Hyundai was able to handpick its retailers and then insist on separate showrooms and service facilities, for a total investment of $500 million. In the revitalized minicar market, a separate dealer network means low-price cars aren't shuffled off in the showroom corner while salesmen concentrate on higher-profit models.

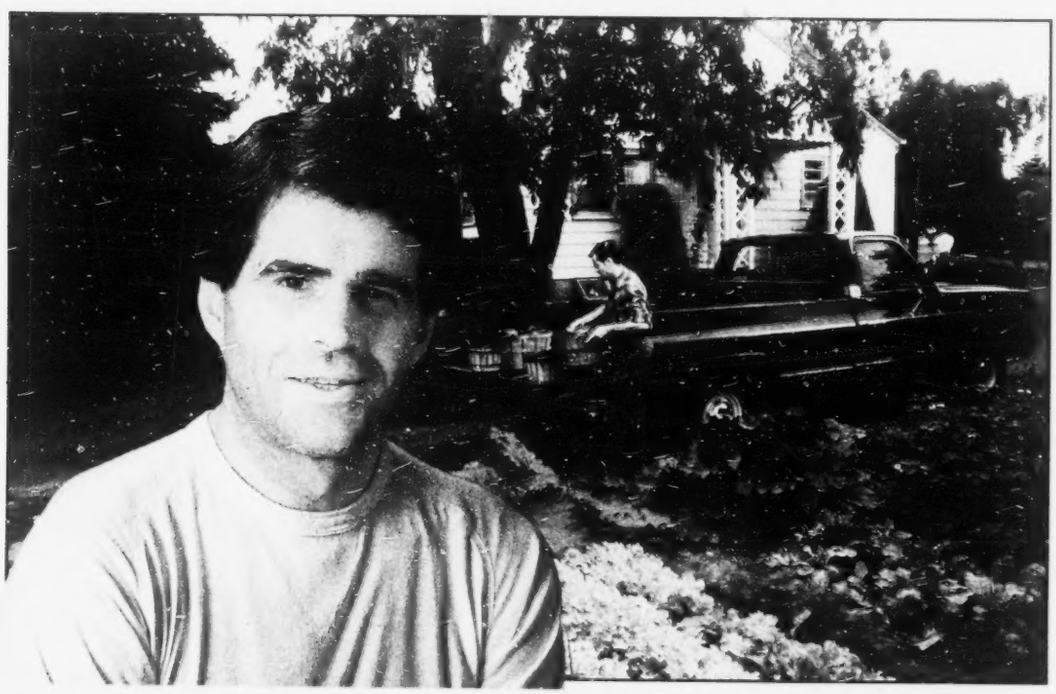
A separate dealer network also will smooth the way for the introduction of new models in the coming years. Hyundai already has the Stellar, a midsize car first manufactured in 1983 and currently available in Canada, and has announced work on a high-priced sedan, to be developed jointly with Mitsubishi.

"One of the key things we've got to do is not just introduce the Excel, but to lay the tracks for the future," Mr. Corey says. "We don't intend to be just an Excel company for the rest of our time in the United States. We intend to grow."

Although good news for economy-minded American consumers, that may be a disquieting thought for Japanese and American auto marketers.

"The automobile market is going to get very interesting over the next few years," Mr. Corey says. "You're going to have to have good value, or you're not going to make the cut."

Spot tv ads from Backer & Spielvogel for Hyundai's dealer associations urge consumers to visit a showroom.



"My favorite gardening tool? It's my pickup truck."

That's what one of our "Gardeners of the Year" recently told us. And, the pickup truck is obviously among the favorite tools of our three million-plus readers, too.

According to the latest SMRB Survey, Rodale's Organic Gardening leads all SMRB magazines (by index) in ownership of two or more light-duty trucks. We also lead the traditional truck media in van ownership and compact pickups bought new.

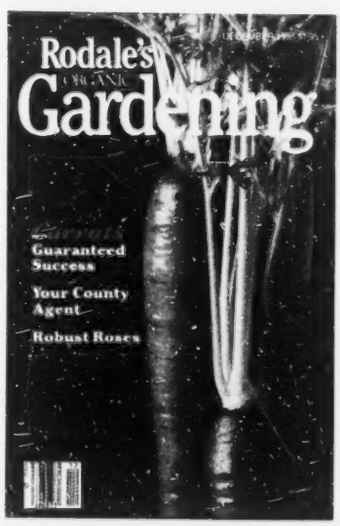
This marks the 4th consecutive year that Rodale's Organic Gardening ranks at or near the top—and reflects a basic fact of lifestyle.

For gardeners, vans and light-duty trucks are essential tools. There's just no other way to get their garden supplies and outdoor power equipment to where they're needed. So the choice isn't whether to buy a small truck or van. It's which one and how many.



The advertiser looking to reach this prime market faces an even simpler choice—Rodale's Organic Gardening. With nearly twice as many readers as its two closest competitors combined, it's hard-working—like a truck.

Small cars invading the U.S. from many fronts

By Michael Kaplan

Minicars are expected to become one of the fastest-growing segments of the auto industry. Although yearly auto sales are predicted to level off at about 11 million units, sales of subcompacts, fueled largely by minicar sales, should jump from less than 25% of the market in 1985 to nearly 30% in 1990, according to reseach conducted by Jack Kirnan, director-automobile consulting services for Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith, New York.

> "These cars are going to force Detroit to keep prices down on the low end of the scale."
> Jack Gillis
> "Car Book" author

Certainly Detroit and Japan will contribute to this expanding market. But increasingly, automobiles will come from countries that never before supplied cars to the U.S. market. "The growth in subcompact sales," Mr. Kirnan says, "will clearly be tied to some new players who are going to be entering the U.S. market between now and 1990."

Yugo and Hyundai are only the first of these new players. Within the next 18 months, perhaps as many as six new low-cost minicars will be arriving in dealer's showrooms.

To keep the price of these cars down, manufacturers are turning to nations where labor costs are only a fraction of U.S. wages. In South Korea, for example, where auto workers are paid an average of less than $3 an hour, plans call for a massive increase in production to service both American and Japanese distribution pipelines:

- Ford Motor Co. is planning to import as many as 75,000 small cars a year from Kia International, a Korean truck manufacturer that recently received government approval to begin passenger car production. Japan's Mazda Motors (25% owned by Ford) is supplying technical assistance and some key components. At one point, Ford had negotiated to become Hyundai's U.S. distributor, but talks fell through.
- General Motors will import its new German-designed Pontiac LeMans from Daewoo Motor Co., Korea's second largest car company (after Hyundai). Plans call for production of 167,000 cars a year, with half available for export to the U.S. Isuzu Motors, GM's Japanese ally, will provide technical support and a share of the output for the Japanese market.
- Chrysler has been negotiating to purchase cars from Samsung, known in the West primarily for tvs and videocassette recorders. While awaiting the Korean government's approval, Samsung will supply Chrysler with auto parts.

In 1987, Ford is expected to begin importing between 50,000 and 100,000 subcompacts from a plant in Hermosillo, Mexico, and Volkswagen of America plans to bring in 50,000 newly designed minicars from its plant in Brazil.

By the end of the decade, the international roster also is expected to include Taiwan, where six companies currently compete locally, splitting sales of about 120,000 vehicles a year. Yue Loong Motor Co., Taiwan's biggest car manufacturer, builds cars under license to Nissan Motor Corp. By 1988, however, it hopes to design its own car, what analysts call a "poor man's BMW," for sale in the U.S. Ford Lio Ho, Ford's Taiwan affiliate, soon will begin exporting cars to Canada.

And then there's Eastern Europe. Minicars including the Czechoslovakian Skoda, Romanian Dacia, Italian Innocenti and Russian Lada are all available in Canada, although it's not certain when, or if, any will be imported to the U.S. The Yugo is available in both countries.

"I'm very optimistic about these new imports," says Jack Gillis, author of "The Car Book," a yearly guide to auto safety and performance. "Even if some of these cars are clearly shoddy, the consumer will ultimately benefit. These cars are going to force Detroit to keep prices down on the low end of the scale."

Price isn't everything, however, and most analysts are hedging their bets. They're waiting until a decision is handed down by the car buying public.

"The real story won't be known for a year or two," says Robert McElwaine, head of the American International Automobile Dealers Assn., a trade association of foreign car dealers. "That's when you find out whether these minicars have earned a permanent spot in the American market, or whether they're going to be a flash in the pan.

"You have to remember that at one time, Renault was the largest selling imported car in America. Things change."

FOUR SCENES IN SEARCH OF AN AUTO

The days when a standard 4-door sedan was the only car most families needed are gone forever. For a large and growing group of consumers, good mileage, great hauling ability, and all-terrain potential are just as important as air-conditioning and cut-pile carpeting.

The fact is, the new compact pickups, mini-vans and downsized 4 × 4's are leading a revolution in the marketplace. And our readers are right in the front lines. They index over 300 in both wood stove ownership and frequency of home improvements. So hauling capacity is crucial. A 289 index in camping and a 360 in boating make 4WD an essential tool as well.

It's common sense, really. PRACTICAL HOMEOWNER readers want their homes to be efficient, stylish, and versatile. The same is true for their transportation.

With the explosive growth of this market, our readers are helping to redefine America's automotive lifestyle for the late 80's and beyond. Speak to them directly. Your new pickups, vans and 4 × 4's are exactly what they're looking for. For information, contact Bennett Zucker at (215) 967-5171.

Financing subsidiaries shift into high gear

By Patricia Strnad

You're on vacation and you made the mistake of leaving home without your American Express card. No problem, as long as you have a Chrysler credit card tucked in your wallet.

It's not as improbable as it seems. Chrysler Service Contract Co., a unit of Chrysler Credit Corp., is testing a dealer-oriented credit card for customers purchasing auto parts and dealer services. The card eventually may get wider applications and become another travel and entertainment credit card, says J.J. Madden, exec vp of Chrysler Credit Corp., a division of Chrysler Financial.

GMAC promotes its credit offerings to women via national magazines and a brochure.

It's also one more indicator of how important finance subsidiaries have become to the Big Three U.S. auto marketers. Growing and diversifying at a dizzying pace, they have become true financial giants.

General Motors Acceptance Corp., GM's Detroit-based financing arm, posted total worldwide receivables of $75.6 billion at the end of 1985, up $18.5 billion from 1984.

In 1985, GMAC acquired Colonial Mortgage Service Co., a group of mortgage banking companies, and the mortgage servicing portfolio of Norwest Mortgage Inc. The operations of both were merged and renamed GMAC Mortgage Corp. With receivables of $21.5 billion, that division is now the second largest mortgage-servicing company in the U.S.

In May, the company announced plans to offer its Michigan good-credit car-loan customers home mortgages via a GMAC Mortgage direct mail campaign, probably beginning in late summer.

Meanwhile, Ford Motor Co. last year bought First Nationwide Financial Corp., a savings and loan company, and merged it with Ford Motor Credit Co. The credit company had 1985 receivables of $35 billion, up about 35% from 1984.

Chrysler Financial Corp., Highland Park, Mich., posted 1985 record receivables of $17.7 billion, up 133% from 1984, an increase attributable in large part to an 85% increase in the number of car loans provided. In addition, the company last year formed a joint venture with General Electric Credit Co. That was followed by the acquisitions of E.F. Hutton Credit Corp. and FinanceAmerica. These two companies, Chrysler Insurance Co. and Chrysler Credit, make up Chrysler Financial.

Despite the diversification strategies, the mainstay business of the auto companies' finance subsidiaries is still auto loans. For example, according to a spokesman, 98% of GMAC's current business is auto loans. The subsidiaries support dealers by supplying capital for building dealerships and maintaining high inventory levels, and they provide consumers with financing options and opportunities.

Through an auto company's finance division, the American who needs wheels can choose to buy or lease a car. He can take advantage of the auto marketer's own financing programs and often its preapproved credit. He can use a balloon payment program in lieu of leasing. Now, he can even try to finance his new home.

"The premises under which GMAC was formed in 1919 was to help GM market vehicles by providing customers with convenient on-the-spot financing and to help GM dealers maintain an adequate supply of inventory," says Charles Newcomer, GMAC spokesman.

"The broader the range [of financial options], the more likely you can meet the needs of most consumers."

William Odom, president of Ford Motor Credit, adds, "Clearly we want to sell cars and to finance them; that's the bottom line. We believe that having a well-organized and geographically diverse finance and leasing organization is definitely a competitive advantage to our dealers."

Of the various financing programs offered, some evolved during the auto companies' early 1980s "dark days" and slow sales periods. Others are offensive measures to capture market share. Preapproved credit, for example, is a fairly recent program each of the Big Three uses to lure buyers to dealerships.

GM, through GMAC, offers recent college graduates preapproved credit on all GM cars via direct mail brochures. GMAC arranges financing to good credit risks who can show proof of current or pending employment within 90 days of their graduation.

If you want to reach households that earn over 25,000 of these...

On occasion, GMAC also offers women preapproved credit in programs advertised via national women's magazines and a 16-page brochure available in dealerships. Campbell-Ewald, Warren, Mich., handles.

Likewise, Ford's College Graduate Purchase Program offers graduates $400 toward the purchase or lease of Ford or Mercury cars and trucks with preapproved credit levels. Ford also has a new three-part preapproved credit program geared toward women that began April 1 in California.

Chrysler now offers preapproved credit, via direct mail, to good-credit Chrysler vehicle owners with current accounts at Chrysler Credit. Its college graduate finance plan offers to delay the first car payment for 90 days until the graduate settles into his new job. Payments increase gradually each month as the graduate develops his income and never exceed 25% of monthly disposable income.

American Motors Corp. will offer preapproved credit to college graduates next year through American Motors Credit Corp., says Martin Levine, general marketing manager.

All four domestic auto companies lease cars as another consumer option. With leasing, the dealer determines a vehicle's worth at the end of the financing period. The consumer's monthly payments are based on the difference only plus interest. For example, a consumer would finance only $6,000 for a $10,000 car with a residual value of $4,000 after four years. At the end of that time, the consumer may give the car back to the dealer, lease another or finance the difference to buy it.

In 1985, GMAC leased about 530,000 vehicles worldwide, up from 200,000 in 1981. Before, the dealer purchased vehicles, then leased them. Now, the finance company buys the car from the dealer and leases it. According to Leading National Advertisers, GMAC spent about $3.5 million to advertise its leasing programs in 1985.

Ford Credit says it decided to take the risk of leasing the cars itself in 1981 because it wanted to encourage dealers to use the Red Carpet Leasing program. "We figured it would double our volume," Mr. Odom says, adding that the number increased tenfold, from 20,000 in 1981 to about 200,000 each year since.

In the past six months or so, the growth rate for leasing has flattened because of low interest rate programs.

As an alternative to leasing, auto companies are testing balloon payments, which are similar to leasing except a down payment is usually required and the vehicle is purchased by the consumer. Consumer advantages include lower monthly payments with a large sum left at the end of the contract, and under current federal tax law the interest would be deductible.

Each of the Big Three is testing a balloon payment program: GMAC is trying out its pilot Buyer's Choice program in Michigan; Ford's Customer Option Plan is being tested in Michigan, Connecticut, New York and California, and Chrysler's Fixed Value Payment Plan in June became available nationwide.

However, Mr. Odom says special low financing rates also are undermining balloon payment loans. GM, through GMAC, in late April offered financing rates from 5.9% to 9.9% on most GM cars. In May, Ford matched that, while Chrysler extended its own low rates.

Ford now is experimenting in eight states with variable-rate financing, new to the auto industry.

Chrysler Credit also is looking at variable-rate financing and expects to initiate a test in about the next six months, Mr. Madden says.

While most domestic auto marketers believe these incentive programs put them at a competitive advantage over import companies that don't have financial arms, AMC disagrees.

"Banks and credit unions are very competitive in those areas," Mr. Levine says. "But I think the concept of a good deal is an all-around good deal, not just a good interest rate."

A spokesman for Toyota Motor Corp. USA, Torrance, Cal., says he doesn't think the domestic companies have a serious competitive advantage because "Toyota dealers can use any financial source they want."

However, in February, 1983, Toyota established Toyota Motor Credit Corp., which now serves Toyota dealers and car buyers in 30 states. The new company expects to be operating nationally by 1988, says John McLaughlin, Toyota Motor Credit business development manager.

"We started back at a time when getting financing was pretty difficult for the auto industry," he says. "Interest rates were high and dealers were having trouble getting financing."

While Toyota leases cars through Toyota Motor Credit, it doesn't offer preapproved credit and it stays away from low annual percentage rate programs.

"Low, incentive financing is a marketing tool to try to sell cars in a slow period," Mr. McLaughlin says, pointing out that Toyota's import quotas alone have kept dealerships busy.

Toyota doesn't advertise its finance arm or services to the consumer. However, it runs print ads about four times a year in Automotive News, a trade publication owned by Crain Communications Inc., parent of Advertising Age.

Auto marketers have more new financial concepts on the drawing boards, but aren't willing to lift the veil of secrecy. "There are some things we're going to be experimenting with in the next year, but nothing we're ready to talk about," AMC's Mr. Levine says.

Design still powers buying decisions

By Roger Rowand

Auto marketers go to work these days with an impressive array of lures for prospective customers: Electronic gadgetry, extended warranties, niche positioning, dazzling dealerships and tempting financing arrangements.

It's impossible to rank the impact of such factors in the purchase decision, often formulated after weeks, months and even years and after considering dozens, or perhaps hundreds, of individual factors. But among auto merchandisers there is little doubt that design remains one of the most critical factors in the purchase decision.

"Design still is 80% to 90% of why people buy cars," says Louis E. Lataif, vp-sales operations for Ford Motor Co.'s North American automotive operations. It ranks extremely high among purchase-decision factors including price, reliability, electronic options, nameplate loyalty and vehicle dynamics.

"My evidence of that is the Ford Taurus and Mercury Sable. They have not been subject to any of the [low-rate financing] programs that have been going on since they were introduced. Still, they are our lowest days-supply cars. They haven't missed a beat. They've just been selling magnificently," Mr. Lataif says.

He forecasts Taurus/Sable will sell at an annual rate of 560,000 units through the balance of this calendar year. Last year, by comparison, GM's Chevrolet Cavalier was the nation's top selling car model, with 431,031 sold.

Those cars are of Ford's new design, which began in 1983 with the Thunderbird and Cougar, Tempo and Topaz. The exterior styling has stimulated a great deal of discussion in auto-buff circles, with some critics saying the cars look too round, bulbous or inflated.

But, Mr. Lataif says, "We have the equivalent of three-quarters of the year's orders in hand after four months of selling. There is no explanation for why that car is doing so well except that it's in demand because of its over-all design."

J.D. Power, president of J.D. Power & Associates, also points to Taurus and Sable as design leaders among current American best sellers. "The styling has come through very, very strong for a conventional, middle-size American sedan," he says.

"With those cars, Ford Motor Co. for the first time is attracting higher-income, better-educated buyers. It's having a strong impact on the midrange General Motors category."

"I think what can be called design, the basic product attributes, is still the major reason people buy automobiles or any other commodity," Mr. Lataif says. "There always will be a small fraction of people who will be lured into something they really didn't start out to buy because the deal was so irresistible. That is not a high proportion of the total business, nor is it a good diet for a manufacturer to be on. That's all artificial. It doesn't stick to the ribs.

"Good cars stick to the ribs," he says.

He uses an analogy of interpersonal relationships when talking about styling.

"Styling is extremely important. One first needs to have his or her head turned. A pretty or handsome face does at least get your attention. Whether it holds your attention will be a function of whether it can converse and has some character, which is the vehicle in usage. At least you get the attention by the shapes and the look and the features you can see and touch and appreciate even in the showroom."

The other vector goes in the direction of sportiness, he says. Sports cars are highly dependent on styling as are the sporty sedans. Predictably, in a basic sedan it's not as important. "The buyer of the bread-and-butter car is looking for function rather than appearance," Mr. Power says.

"People will buy for appearance. It can be an overriding issue in certain buyers' minds—the Corvette and the Mustang come to mind."

Mr. Power says the things people consider most important as they start looking for a car change as they progress through the buying cycle.

For example, styling appearance and body style might be most important early in the cycle, then later in the cycle may

Chrysler Corp. headquarters in Highland Park, Mich. Thomas C. Gale, vp-product design, says, "Appearance is the point of entry for consideration in the minds of potential customers. And consideration of product is the first step in the buying process. If the appearance isn't right for the target market segment, then consideration diminishes drastically."

But the importance of design in the over-all picture depends on the category of cars you're in, says Mr. Power, whose Thousand Oaks, Cal.-based customer survey company analyzes consumer buying plans. "The higher the price of the car the greater the impact of the styling, the design."

A Ford executive cites Taurus and Sable sales as proof that design is a major factor in the decision to buy a car.

People who buy a Chevrolet Corvette are buying the car in large part for its appearance.

Styling such as that of this Cavalier convertible can turn consumers' heads.

The sales success of the Plymouth Voyager is called design-driven.

Dodge Caravan designers kept an eye on space, function, style, order and quality.

93% of our readers own at least 1 car, with 1 in 5 preferring standard or luxury models.

50 plus

issues and then make, price and availability.

"Owner loyalty is a thing of the past, not just for company but for type of vehicle too," Mr. Power says.

"People go from pickup to sports car to sedan. At one time in the past, a sedan buyer bought another sedan. Today, people are looking for new experiences.

"But mostly, what customers are looking for is a complete package that includes car, dealer, satisfaction or trouble-free operation," Mr. Power says.

Peter G. Guptill, vp-U.S. sales for American Motors Corp., Southfield, Mich., agrees that the importance of design considerations depends on the consumer's place in the buying cycle.

"Design is probably more important when you are just generally thinking about buying a new product. At that point all the offers are probably discounted because you're not in the market right then," Mr. Guptill says.

"You probably are getting an idea of what cars fall into the 'I like' category.

"On the specific day you're going to leave the house to go shopping for a car is the day things like [financing] programs mean more," he says.

One of the most dramatic recent examples of design-driven automotive success is that of Chrysler Corp.'s minivan, Plymouth Voyager/Dodge Caravan, which went into production for the 1984 model year.

"Designers have packaged and styled the interiors with an eye constantly on space, function, order, style and quality," Chrysler's Mr. Gale says.

"Engineers have innovated electronic engine controls and instrumentation that is more useful in terms of comfort, convenience, safety and ease of service.

"The designers have played a key role in making these features acceptable to the buyer in terms of driver and passenger environment.

"That is, instrument clusters are easy to read and understand, lighting is improved, the occupants 'feel better' inside the car with improved seating, more useful features, luxury appointments and harmonious colors and fabrics," Mr. Gale says.

Chrysler-Plymouth sold 219,000 Voyager and Caravan models in 1985, up from 167,000 the previous year.

But David Cole, professor of mechanical engineering at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, and automotive consultant, says the industry is in a design transition period—one in which gimmickry and solid functional design are competing for consumers' attention.

"Things are very mixed up right now because of the transitory nature of the industry. The market is confused," he says.

However, he believes only those design features that make fundamental contributions help the sales of those automotive products. Others he classifies as gimmicks.

Among useful design features, Mr. Cole lists on-board electronic diagnostics, antilock braking systems and electric power steering.

His tally of gimmicks, meanwhile, includes talking dashboards and dashboards dotted with buttons.

"Some of it strikes me as being vehicle erotica, as though someone was trying to sell me erotica," he says.

"I like technology, but a lot of things smack of being sold on the basis of technology rather than on their function.

"We're going through a sorting-out process on this type of thing."

"With [the Sable and the Taurus], Ford Motor Co. for the first time is attracting higher-income, better-educated buyers. It's having a strong impact on the midrange General Motors category."

Volvo selling the company behind the car

By Kenneth Wylie

When Volvo Cars of North America added an extra word to its advertising theme in May, it signaled a new attitude for the Swedish auto marketer. No longer was Volvo simply "a car you can believe in" —now it calls itself a car company to believe in.

Building on a 30-year-old image as an importer of safe, reliable automobiles, Volvo now is ready, with new ads and a full product lineup, to boost its 1% share of U.S. auto sales.

From its first import, the 1956 PV444, to its now-promised Bertone-bodied beauty, Volvo has been kicking the tires and slamming the doors of American buyers, attempting to find what kinds of cars they wanted.

Volvo carefully has picked and pursued its target markets, all affluent.

But now Volvo, the largest pure European importer of cars to the U.S., is ready for more universal acceptance. The company has adopted something of the philosophy that General Motors was talking about 10 years ago: Its business is no longer selling cars but selling marketing.

April issues of consumer magazines carried a Volvo ad with the display line "The Volvo Book of Records" and accounts of the car's longevity, owner loyalty, speed, ample body capacity and structural strength as shown by the famous stack of seven Volvos. But only a few weeks later came ads for the new On Call membership card, boasting the revised tag line, "A car company you can believe in." Both were the work of Volvo's agency, Scali, McCabe, Sloves, New York.

This corporate approach is something new for Volvo's part of the auto marketing spectrum, which is "near luxury," according to Fred Hammond, product publicity coordinator for Volvo Cars of North America, Rockleigh, N.J. For chief competitors Daimler-Benz, Bavarian Motor Works and Saab-Scania, the machinery is the message.

Volvo ads from Scali, McCabe, Sloves for the new On Call program now boast "a car company you can believe in."

Says Gerry Dudzik, national advertising manager for Volvo Cars of North America, "Volvo advertising in the U.S. is aimed at enhancing and evolving our reputation for quality, safety, reliability and price value."

In 1986, that is extended with the On Call program. Buyers of 1986 Volvos receive the On Call program, introduced May 1, in addition to a three-year unlimited mileage warranty.

On Call, according to Volvo's new marketing strategy, is not just an add-on, but an extension of the car's mechanical quality. "We try to make ourselves the best value, and now we are doing that specifically through our software program—the unlimited warranty and the On Call service," Mr. Hammond says. "What that means is that when you buy our car, you're buying into our company."

Volvo offers the On Call program in cooperation with the Amoco Motor Club, which administers it. On Call offers a traditional road assistance program plus service as often as needed, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Volvo has announced it nationally through its normal print schedule, including broad-reach magazines including Time, Newsweek and Sports Illustrated, vertical publications including Fortune, Forbes and Business Week and major metropolitan daily newspapers.

The service is similar to one Mercedes-Benz of North America introduced three years ago. Mercedes' Roadside Assistance program provides one-call emergency help after "normal service hours." That service costs the stranded motorist the dealer's hourly repair charge plus a $25 service charge. And it, like Volvo's plan, is coupled with a warranty for 48 months or 50,000 miles.

The On Call plan is appealing as an add-on to close a deal. But why this lavishing of care from the tough engineers, this sudden warmth from the Swedish reserve? Volvo has a nuts and bolts answer.

"Building a better car is no longer enough," says Joseph L. Nicolato, president and chief executive officer of Volvo Cars of North America.

Mr. Hammond elaborates: "Automation has allowed a lot of manufacturers to catch up in quality. Safety requirements imposed by government have made car producers manufacture safe cars. So Volvo had to go a step further. That's why we've introduced software like On Call."

This transition is not the first since Volvo began production in 1927. Heavily backed by the big Swedish ball-bearing maker SKF, Volvo aimed to give Scandinavian customers—then big buyers of U.S. cars—a product it considered better able to take the rough roads and cold winters of the North and keep on muttering, "I roll," the English translation of the Latin volvo.

In the 1950s Volvo began to develop its own distinctive exterior style. Emphasis has been on serious, formal design, with the engine in the front and the drive wheels behind, in a boxy, well-girded body. Prices were broadly affordable.

That first Volvo export to the U.S. and Canada, the 1956 PV444, was offered in just two styles, the two-door fastback and a three-door station wagon.

In the 1960s, Volvo was shipping its Amazon 1800 Series sedans, two-doors and station wagons to North America. A broader, increasingly partisan Volvo public was developed. Later in the 1960s came the 140 Series, with new marketing emphasis on Volvo safety.

The 1960s also saw the arrival of the Japanese offerings, priced

Kenneth Wylie, a frequent contributor to Ad Age, examined cellular telephone service in the May 16, 1985, Automotive Marketing Special Report.

Swedish marketer travels new road

Volvo Cars of North America begins its product segmentation this year, with two long-anticipated models.

In October, publicity will begin on the Volvo 780, a two-door coupe scheduled to be available in 1987 with a $20,000 to $30,000 price tag. Carozzeria Bertone S.p.A. of Turin, Italy, is designer and builder of the body.

The only component the Bertone coupe will share with the rest of Volvo's 700 series is the floor pan, and the informed word is the car will have a family resemblance to other Volvos but in a smoother, evolutionary form.

Gerry Dudzik, national advertising manager for Volvo, says there is a strong possibility there will be a presale of the 780 Bertone coupe.

Customers may be allowed to view a display model or sales presentations and then place orders.

The advertising manager says that in the first 12 months of North American availability, total Volvo 780 shipments will be fewer than 2,000 automobiles.

Reginald Duquesnoy, securities analyst with Arnold & Bleichroeder, New York, says, "If Volvo sells [the Bertone 780] in the 5,000 to 10,000 range [annually] it will be a roaring success."

He expects the car to "nibble at the heels of Daimler-Benz," the German parent of Mercedes-Benz of North America, in the latter's more expensive automotive lines.

Tilting toward the other end of the price scale will be Volvo's second example of product segmentation, the DAF/Volvo 480 ES, set for 1988 availability in the U.S.

This two-door sports coupe with front-wheel drive is a first for Volvo; a version is currently available in Europe. It is the product of Volvo Cars BV, a Dutch subsidiary.

The DAF coupe probably will come to the U.S. almost fully equipped and will be one of the first cars to have fully adjustable rear seats. Pricing is expected to be between $13,000 and $16,000. All Volvo dealers are slated to receive the car.

Carozzeria Bertone of Italy designed and built the new Volvo 780 to be available in 1987.

According to Mr. Dudzik, the target consumer for the 480ES is younger than current Volvo buyers, perhaps skewed male, and could offer the first big opportunity to broaden Volvo's market.

"With any luck," Mr. Dudzik says, "this could afford Volvo Cars of North America the opportunity to bring more people back into the line at an entry level." —Kenneth Wylie

Just in the past year, about 30% of the Buffalo CMSA adult population purchased a car. And 89% of those new car buyers read the Sunday Buffalo News.

to sell. Although Volvo continued to find a receptive American public for its new 240 Series in the 1970s, all was not well. So said Volvo's car division president, Haken Frisinger, as quoted in Graham Robson's Volvo-approved book, "The Story of Volvo Cars" (Patrick Stephens Ltd., 1983):

"In the middle of the 1970s, we lost some image with [the 240 Series]. The quality suffered—yes, really—and perhaps the car didn't look different enough from the old 140 Series. So we started up in 1976 and 1977 with a stronger product-development program." This resulted in the new sharp-creased 700 Series. Statistics told the need for the change; Volvo production dropped from about 232,000 cars in 1973 to 158,000 in 1977.

"We reworked, redesigned the car," Mr. Hammond says. "We put in more value such as fuel injection. We went upmarket in the price. The buyer up to then would spend $4,000 for a good car but might not spend $8,000 or more."

"Volvo has done a better job than anyone else so far in making a major product upgrade, going from a $10,000 car driven by university professors to a $20,000 driven by yuppies," says Reginald Duquesnoy, securities analyst with Arnhold & Bleichroeder, New York.

In making this change, Mr. Duquesnoy says, Volvo needed to maintain its image of crash-safety quality and reliability—and it has. "They also needed to convince buyers that they're getting 'German' quality at Swedish prices," he says. "Volvo has tried to ride piggyback on the German automotive reputation [but] Volvo is not quite BMW, [and] is one notch below Daimler-Benz."

Today, the company has the capacity to build a maximum of 400,000 cars a year. On those terms, Volvo cannot compete with the Japanese. So what it has done is take the car of the past and embedied its same virtues in today's line of Volvos—higher priced but, the company says, giving style and value for the money.

In response to the changes, Volvo's U.S. sales started rising again in 1978 and have climbed about 4% a year since. In 1985 Volvo sold 104,000 cars in the U.S. plus 8,000 in Canada, and Volvo projects total U.S. sales of 110,000 for 1986.

"Volvo is now designed with the American market in mind," Mr. Duquesnoy says. "Their real forte is the station wagon." He says Peugeot Motors of America and Daimler Benz have produced quality station wagons, but at a higher price.

Mr. Dudzik sheds more light on the company's positioning. "In its station wagons, Volvo has made one of the strongest commitments [to a product] of any auto maker. That is, Volvo devotes more of its product line—now more than 34%—to wagons than any other company."

Station wagons now sold by Volvo in the U.S. are the 240 Series, priced from about $15,100 to $17,800, and the bigger 700 series, which sells for $21,300 to $25,400.

The next marketing stage for Volvo is product segmentation, aimed at securing a bigger U.S. market share. (See sidebar.)

Volvo engineers its sales targets like its automobiles—precisely. Marketing and sales forces plot four demographic variables for each model. For example, promotion for the 240 DL and GL family sedans is aimed at both male and female 25 to 54-year-olds who have attended or graduated from college, with household incomes of $35,000-plus. Variations are apparent for the 240 Series station wagons, where the target is skewed 40% male.

To reach its targets, Volvo relies heavily on consumer magazines. The company now is spending about 45% of its budget in North America for space in national newsweeklies, business magazines, car buff books, science and life-style publications. But the list is shorter than three years ago, down from 40 to 23 titles in an effort to free ad dollars for other media, although both total budget dollars and frequency have climbed.

In 1985, Volvo's U.S. measured-media ad spending totaled $20.3 million, with about $11.1 million spent on magazines. An additional $7.7 million was spent on spot tv buys in 35 markets, with additional outlays for radio and newspaper support in some of those markets.

"In Volvo advertising," Mr. Dudzik says, "we feel strongly that what we are doing is awareness-building, not just selling a product."

With a quality reputation established and new products on the way, Volvo now is poised for an era of greater segmentation with a strong tilt toward near-luxury and luxury offerings. "We are proud of the cost-value equation of our cars," Mr. Hammond says. "Yes, you pay more, but you're getting more—getting what you pay for."

Wisdom in the auto import business seems to point this way in the mid-1980s. Everybody recognizes, so the reasoning goes, that there is little value in increasing production to increase revenue. Instead, you upgrade the market. Today, growth in the export car markets is said to be in the higher-price auto lines, and, according to Mr. Duquesnoy, 80% to 85% of the world's luxury-car market lies in the U.S. And wealth has its privileges.

"For one thing, in this end of the business, you're not competing on price but on deep consumer feelings," Mr. Duquesnoy says. "So you're immune from Japanese competition.

"For another, there's a much higher content of automotive technology in these [higher-price] products. Volvo is like most European car makers. They've had much longer to learn the car business. The Japanese will have to earn their stripes. You just don't come up overnight."

It took Volvo 59 years.

Rolls-Royce rides on reputation, not ads

By Brian Oliver

In a memorable ad, David Ogilvy once wrote, "At 60 miles an hour the loudest noise in a Rolls-Royce comes from the electric clock."

Mr. Ogilvy's sentence captured the quality image that has formed the basis of the British car's worldwide brand identity since Mr. Rolls and Mr. Royce teamed up in 1906.

Rolls-Royce has become a term for excellence. In fact, the company's legal department is kept busy dealing with inquiries from other marketers who want to use the name in their ads. "The Rolls-Royce of dental chairs" is one phrase London-based Rolls-Royce Motors recently refused.

"The Rolls-Royce image is one that anyone would envy," says Reg Ludlow, General Motors' ad manager in London. "You tend to just take it for granted."

Saab-Scania's London-based advertising and sales promotion manager, Paul Banks, agrees. "It must be a great advantage to have such total worldwide awareness that potential customers already know your product and its unique selling proposition."

Rolls-Royce Motors sustains this brand identity with a minimal amount of advertising, handled by three agencies worldwide: Della Femina, Travisano & Partners, New York; Cogent Elliott, London, and Dancer Fitzgerald Sample & Roth, Munich, which handles advertising throughout continental Europe. The auto marketer advertises a little in the Middle East, but hardly at all in the Far East and Latin America.

Although Rolls-Royce officials say they will put about $285,000 in 1986 ad support behind both the Rolls-Royce and Bentley marques in Great Britain, the company won't disclose its worldwide ad budget.

"Our ad spending is not as high as people expect," says T. John Foster, Rolls-Royce marketing operations director. "We are naturally a target for publications' advertising managers, and they are often quite shocked when we tell them we don't advertise [very extensively]."

Sue Gay, associate publisher of Morgan-Grampian's Autotrade, says Rolls-Royce is also the only company that doesn't provide a test car for automotive journalists.

With the average Silver Spirit selling for $100,000 in the U.S., that's perhaps understandable.

Mr. Foster says the company's marketing strategy is based on a "rifle" approach—with research used extensively to identify potential customers and their requirements.

For example, one recent worldwide survey revealed that the most popular Rolls-Royce colors are white and black, with white models appealing mostly to Americans.

In some cases, local dealers—despite its relatively small volume, Rolls-Royce never sells directly to customers—will pinpoint potential individual as well as corporate buyers. "There is no substitute for getting a man behind the steering wheel," Mr. Foster says. "It says so much more than any ad."

Rolls-Royce's advertising may appear scant, but it is backed by a substantial amount of promotional activity at the dealer level. This includes social occasions for potential customers ranging from fashion shows to clay-pigeon shoots and polo matches.

Anthony Thompson, who until last August owned Rolls-Royce of Beverly Hills, Cal., says the largest task for a dealer is measuring up to the potential customer's expectations of what buying a Rolls-Royce should be.

"You have to recognize in selling a very expensive item—a yacht, a motorcar—you're selling first style. You present the style they expect with the maximum amount of panache."

Generally selling between 80 and 90 cars annually, Mr. Thompson was the largest U.S. Rolls dealer during eight of his ten years in business. His Beverly Hills ad budget was based on $400 per car, which was matched by Rolls-Royce for an annual budget of between $60,000 and $80,000.

The basic strategy contained three elements: Sponsoring a weekly classical music radio program, participating in several charities and hosting periodic parties known as "Rolls-Royce of Beverly Hills Happenings."

In one instance, Mr. Thompson showcased Rolls-Royce cars at a mansion to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the company. Another time, he hosted Princess Margaret at the opening of his new service department. "If we couldn't do it very, very well, then we didn't do it at all," he says. "We wanted to create a whole picture of a quality product."

Mr. Thompson says his job was to "demonstrate the way of life and the quality of life that comes with Rolls-Royce ownership. One cannot drive his $7 million house down the street, but if he drives a Rolls-Royce, people most certainly will think he has a $7 million house tucked somewhere up above Sunset Blvd."

Mr. Foster says Rolls-Royce does not have a central ad strategy mainly because the car is perceived differently in each market, and buying patterns and attitudes vary. As a result, the creative approach, coordinated by operating centers in the U.S., Great Britain, Canada and Switzerland, also differs in each territory. Only the media mix tends to be similar, with a heavy emphasis on glossy, upscale magazines.

"Our advertising approach is determined by local taste and judgment," he says. "The positioning of the car in each territory depends on social acceptance and attitudes to price."

He says local dealers are required to spend a preset amount on advertising, augmented by incentives from the company. Rolls-Royce is not involved in the creation or placement of advertising, although headquarters approves all ad copy.

North America is an important market for Rolls-Royce; 49% of the 2,500 cars it sold last year went to the U.S. American sales increased by 2.5% last year, while total worldwide sales rose about 8%.

As a result the company advertises more heavily in the U.S.

Rolls-Royce advertising plays off the luxury car's reputation.

than anywhere else in the world. "We recognize that we have a number of competitors, like Cadillac, which are very aggressive," Mr. Foster says. "Clearly, we have to be in the race as well, and we are now competing very strongly in the U.S. market."

A year ago, Rolls-Royce Motors of Lyndhurst, N.J., broke a new U.S. campaign, through Della Femina, comparing its cars directly with chief competitors Mercedes-Benz, BMW and GM's Cadillac division. Print ads, with the tag line, "Simply the best motor car in the world," are running in upscale magazines including The New Yorker, Metropolitan Home and city magazines.

Mr. Foster says U.S. automobile marketers now are producing "some excellent and very creative pieces of advertising," and adds, "I've never really been a fan of British car advertising."

Rolls-Royce's British advertising is confined to used cars, or "previously owned" cars, as the company prefers to call them. Rolls-Royce "hasn't advertised new cars in the U.K. for a number of years, although we advertise new cars fairly aggressively in the U.S.," Mr. Foster says.

Research shows that most Rolls-Royce owners enter the market by buying a used model.

"Outside the U.S., I don't believe advertising is the medium by which people are attracted to Rolls-Royce. There is certainly no evidence in the U.K. to show that advertising has any significant influence on the buying process. But it can sell previously owned cars."

Research shows that most Rolls-Royce owners enter the market by buying a used model, says Chris Morris, a director of Rolls-Royce Motors' British ad agency, Cogent Elliott.

A similar approach has popped up in the U.S. during the past year, with BMW of North America and Jaguar of North America both introducing factory warranties on used models to provide an "entry level" for potential new car buyers.

Mr. Morris says the British ads mostly appear in prestigious, glossy magazines, including Tatler and London Gentleman, and national newspapers such as the Sunday Times.

Many competitors believe reputation is sufficient to sell Rolls-Royces. They have mixed feelings about the company's advertising.

"It is predominantly bland and hardly sets the world on fire," Saab's Mr. Banks says. "But, with Rolls-Royce's image and high level of awareness, there's probably little point in spending millions on advertising anyway."

Meanwhile, GM's Mr. Ludlow describes Rolls-Royce advertising as "very laid-back and confident. Their used car advertising in the U.K. is a very clever move," he says. "As well as enabling new people to enter the market, it is making it easier for existing owners to sell their cars and replace them with new ones."

On the European continent, however, the emphasis is on selling new Rolls-Royces through ads in selected life-style magazines and Paris-based Hermes' prestigious mail-order catalog. In each case, the company's objective is to be positioned alongside other high-quality merchandise.

Switzerland and West Germany are Rolls-Royce's biggest European markets outside the U.K. In terms of numbers, France and the Benelux countries are also considered important markets, although the company rarely advertises in France or Italy, where the rich generally buy sports cars.

"We are now competing very strongly in the U.S. market."

T. John Foster
Rolls-Royce

The company has found that its Bentley marque has greater appeal in countries such as Italy. In 1982, the Bentley was repositioned as a sportier alternative to a Rolls-Royce.

Industry observers say it is moves such as Rolls-Royce Motors' decision to separate the marketing of its Rolls and Bentley marques that are enabling the company to market its way out of recession.

As recently as 1982—when economic recession was biting at the heels of companies all over the world—Rolls-Royce's sales were hindered by the car's ostentatious image as "the ultimate status symbol."

Apart from the fact that many struggling companies no longer could afford a Rolls, it became harder for a company president or government official to justify buying a new model.

Ford Motor Co. says political pressure is leading cash-conscious authorities in Britain and Europe to move away from "the Rolls-Royce image." According to Ford, it is now selling more of its top-of-the-range cars into the traditional Rolls-Royce market. Even members of the British royal family drive Fords on informal occasions, the company says.

But Cogent Elliott's Mr. Morris stresses that the Rolls-Royce market is now "very buoyant. The company has its strongest order book for years."

Mapping regional marketing differences

By Thomas L. Moore

Stung by sagging market share, domestic automobile marketers are scrambling to translate corporate strategies into the most effective marketing for specific regions throughout the country.

That's not to say national concept advertising is going the way of the Model T. But regional marketing campaigns that accurately reflect consumer expectations and cater to local tastes can expand, improve or, in some places, replace the national marketing message.

By tailoring a message to regions, car marketers are acknowledging that what plays in Peoria may not make it in Southern California.

Thomas L. Moore is a freelance business writer.

Auto marketing executives say American car-buying habits vary from region to region. In the Northeast, for example, people are more concerned about fuel economy and front-wheel drive for snow and maneuverability on tight city streets. In the South and the Southwest, more pickup trucks are sold. And in Florida, a large older population has increased demand for full-size cars.

To accommodate these differences, General Motors' Chevrolet division has divided the country into four areas, while its sister Buick division uses two regions. Chrysler Corp. designates five regions and 25 zones within those.

Regional marketing started in California, which accounts for one-eighth of U.S. car sales but lags behind the rest of the nation in domestic car registrations.

Only 51.7% of California's 1985 new car registrations were domestic models, compared with 72.3% nationwide, according to R.L. Polk & Co., Detroit.

"Because of the inroads of Japanese imports, all domestic manufacturers are doing significantly poorer in the West than they are in the rest of the country," says Irwin Davis, a partner in Vic Oleson & Partners, Los Angeles, the regional ad agency that handles Chevy's $10 million West Coast efforts.

"So they looked to the West first to protect their own flanks.

"They found they had some problems in the West and [so far have] treated those differences successfully. Now it's a question of looking around and identifying the regions and the differences that can be treated in each."

Domestic car marketers were a step behind the import car companies. "The imports did regional marketing from the beginning," says John Burrow, marketing manager-west for Chevrolet, Thousand Oaks, Cal.

Import restrictions forced foreign marketers to adopt a regional marketing approach based on where the cars were available. The importers targeted California first—the closest port of entry—then moved to the major population centers on the East Coast and through the South.

The recent arrival of Hyundai Motor America bears this out. Although as a Korean manufacturer the company escapes the federal government's import limits, Hyundai still didn't have the number of cars to meet expected demand.

> Import restrictions forced foreign marketers to adopt a regional marketing approach based on where the cars were available.

"It makes no sense to launch a nationwide campaign if you don't have the product available nationwide," says Joe Corey, national advertising manager for Hyundai Motor America in Garden Grove, Cal. "As dealers fulfill our franchise agreements, we start our advertising effort."

Lee Gallas says the domestic auto makers were slow to wake up to the realities of the marketplace. Mr. Gallas is founder of Competitive Edge, an Albuquerque, N.M.-based ad agency specializing in auto dealer accounts, and the author of eight books on regional marketing, or, as he prefers to call it, direct result marketing.

Imports spend about 60% of their marketing budgets at the regional level, Mr. Gallas says. General Motors, by comparison, spends about 20% to 30% on regional marketing and other domestic auto makers about 10%.

Regional marketing, however, means something different for each division. Many view the regional efforts as an extension of dealer association initiatives aimed at generating immediate sales. Others augment national image campaigns with regional efforts.

For instance, Chevrolet's California campaign through Vic Oleson & Partners will do little to change the national marketing campaign for the Corvette or the Camaro.

"There's no reason to change because the reasons for buying the car are the same no matter where you live," Mr. Davis says. "You are selling a prestige and performance car."

But that's not so with Cavalier. Chevy's top seller nationwide ranked a lowly 16th in California two years ago, before the company adopted its regional marketing campaign.

Nationally, Cavalier is sold as a utility family vehicle that, for the price, can carry a lot of people.

But in California, Mr. Davis says, "We emphasize the sportiness and excitement of the car." In fact, Chevy introduced a special Cavalier designed especially for California that features a bigger engine and subtler styling. That approach helped catapult Cavalier to the No. 9 position in the state last year.

Chrysler also has created a special line for California: The Lancer Pacifica, an all-white version of the Lancer with different wheel covers, spoilers and air dams.

Chevrolet tailored a special California campaign for Nova, the new line being produced through the joint venture between GM and Toyota Motor Sales Co. The national campaign, "The best of both worlds," was "not the way to go in California," Mr. Davis says. "That wouldn't reach the audience we needed. The theme line that did the best job of reaching those we wanted to reach was, 'Imported from America.'"

Chevy's Mr. Burrow says that to be effective, the regional campaign "must work hand in hand with the national efforts." What Chevy does is to "fine-tune the national efforts through spot buys and regional feeds for those product lines that are not getting the proper emphasis."

More often than not, the auto marketers are working with dealer associations to target the proper audience and develop the most effective campaigns.

Chevy's California campaign, although coordinated by headquarters, works closely with the dealer associations. "They are one of the keys to the success of regional marketing," Mr. Burrow says. "They have huge war chests. We work hand in glove with them."

Automotive marketers disagree on the merits of using local ad agencies for regional marketing.

"I'm not sure we need regional agencies," says Chevy's Mr. Burrow, whose company is dealing with a regional agency on the West Coast, but working through Campbell-Ewald, Warren, Mich., in its other three regions.

"What you must have is a local specialist, the dealer. It's important to be on the scene and to live here to make sure the products are appealing to consumers and to make sure you understand the buying habits. It's better than being in Detroit."

John Dables, general director of marketing and sales planning for Buick Motors, has found success working through a single agency, McCann-Erickson, Troy, Mich.

Buick kicked off its California campaign by choosing nine dealers and discussing both factory and dealer strengths and weaknesses. "We needed to discover what our major problems were, both in terms of the product and our approach," Mr. Dables says.

In response to Buick's regional marketing plans, McCann-Erickson established a regional marketing organization, a partnership that coordinates activities in the various regions.

Not only does McCann-Erickson put regional marketing executives in each of the regions, but it also has set up a local broadcast group responsible for factory funds that dealer associations use for local buys.

According to Jan Starr, M-E senior vp-management representative, the regional marketing organization was put together in response to "intensified auto sales competition, increased product offerings, increased importance of regional marketing to optimize marketing opportunities in specific geographical areas."

> "It is a national phenomenon. The ability to understand markets better on a regional basis allows us to fully take advantage of opportunities."
> Jan Starr

"This partnership between the national and regional activities is a two-way street for information," he says. "The regional marketing organization provides national strategies to dealer organizations on a timely basis, so they can supplement and complement the national marketing campaign and, at the same time, to get feedback from areas to develop smarter national strategies."

But despite these successes with single national agencies, Competitive Edge's Mr. Gallas predicts tough times ahead.

"Corporations are asking for more bang for the buck and for more accountability," he says. "And when you ask for that, you're talking about direct result. It will be very hard for the huge behemoth agencies to think retail.

"We're talking about one-night stands and they're used to playing one network show a year."

Although regional marketing still is a new concept, so far marketers are pleased with their regional marketing efforts.

"Sales are up, but market share has not increased dramatically," Mr. Dables says. But Buick is looking at this as an educational campaign.

"This is not a buy-now philosophy. We're committed to the long-term educational effort of our staff and our dealers to meet customers' expectations. We must make sure they're satisfied so when they come in they buy Buick."

M-E's Mr. Starr agrees. "It is a national phenomenon. The information regarding target audiences and the ability to understand markets better on a regional basis allows us to fully take advantage of opportunities."

After opening offices in both New Orleans and Houston, Chrysler increased sales by some 70%, says Tom Houston, manager-pr for Chrysler's Dodge division in Detroit. He believes the day is near when auto makers will use regional marketing efforts to concentrate on specific metropolitan areas or even specific sections of those areas.

Car marketers also are looking to regional campaigns as test runs for national ads, although it is more likely that a successful regional campaign would be transplanted to another region.

However, Chrysler's "Over There" campaign, in which the Chrysler LeBaron GTS outperformed BMW, Mercedes-Benz and Audi, went over so well in California that the company adopted it nationwide, says Joe Tetherow, manager-pr for the western division of Chrysler.

Another campaign, an upbeat commercial featuring quick cuts of cars and California scenes in which Chrysler chairman Lee Iacocca makes a cameo appearance, aired successfully first in California before going national.

But regional marketing is not without its hurdles. National sales trends become meaningless as better regional breakdowns are emphasized.

Regional marketing also requires good, open communications to assure consistency of the over-all message.

"Any time you have a number of people trying to sell the same thing and they're going in different directions, it's not going to work," Mr. Davis says. "They all have to point in the same direction. Otherwise you end up with some sort of Tower of Babel and nobody knows where it is going."

In addition, regional marketing can mean extra work in implementing media buys as well as higher production costs. "Instead of making one commercial, you're making three or four, so there are cost implications," Mr. Davis says.

But so far, these haven't deterred auto marketers from initiating regional marketing plans. "It doesn't happen overnight," says Richard Hill, vp-national account group services for McCann-Erickson, Buick's agency. "But a lot of marketers—auto and others—have adopted regional strategies. I think it's here to stay."

Subaru drives into new niches

By Jesse Snyder

Subaru of America always has been as unconventional as its name. The only U.S.-owned, publicly traded marketer of Japanese cars, Subaru grew up selling odd-looking four-wheel-drive cars to outdoorsmen, farmers and "granola-crunching, earth shoe wearers" in rural areas other importers ignored. Even its advertising was low key.

That's why the announcement that Isuzu Motors and vehicle supplier Fuji Heavy Industries Ltd., Tokyo, which owns 49% of Subaru, would build a joint-venture assembly plant in the U.S. was big news.

The auto marketer has grown large enough to be affected by competition and international trade issues.

It is perhaps the first acknowledgment that Subaru has grown large enough to be affected by encroaching competition and international trade issues. And the push for higher sales volume will call for even greater company dependence on strategy-minded agency Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver, New York.

The plant arrangement is unusual, the only such combination between Japanese auto manufacturers. While joint-venture auto plants are increasingly common in the U.S. and Europe, most agreements are between auto marketers based on different continents.

The Fuji-Isuzu pact also is unprecedented because it links companies aligned with rival Japanese automotive groups. Fuji is considered part of the Nissan group and Isuzu is partially owned by General Motors.

Subaru drives into niches

No site has been selected yet, but the new plant will be designed so it can be expanded as needed. Initially, plans call for producing 60,000 Subaru cars and 60,000 Isuzu trucks annually by 1989. The factory will be 51% owned by Fuji, giving Subaru's minority partner control of the timetable for adding capacity.

Top-selling wagons and sedans will be assembled in the U.S., while vehicles for smaller or new market niches will be built in Japan, where Fuji can boost sales by offering the model in the Japanese home market or exporting elsewhere.

Since informal but binding quotas were imposed by the Japanese Ministry of International Trade four years ago, Subaru's biggest concern has been inventory. "Our problem is getting more cars," says Thomas Gibson, president and chief executive officer of the Pennsauken, N.J.-based company. Company executives once considered import restrictions a short-term phenomenom, but the U.S. plant is a tacit acknowledgment that import limitations will be maintained into the 1990s.

While waiting for the new factory, Subaru sales are hovering at slightly more than 150,000 cars a year. The company is trying to build a retail network capable of selling 250,000 to 300,000 units annually, Mr. Gibson says.

In addition to Subaru's established product lineup, the dealer network will be selling cars aimed at new market segments. One niche is the emerging minicar segment, two or four-seat cars with wheelbases of less than 90 ins. and three or four-cylinder engines as small as one liter.

> Subaru is trying to build a retail network capable of selling 250,000 to 300,000 units annually.

Subaru's contribution to the minicar market is the Justy, a car similar to the Fuji-built model already sold in Japan, but with a larger, 1.2-liter engine. Scheduled to be introduced in early 1987, it is likely to be priced less than $5,000, Mr. Gibson says.

"It's a [market] that will grow," he says. "We'll be in early with the best value." On-demand four-wheel drive will be offered eventually.

The Justy would be the first major departure from Subaru's one-platform-fits-all approach, with wagons, sedans, hatchbacks and even the new XT sport coupe built on essentially the same front-drive chassis and drivetrain.

But Subaru's Justy strategy of seeking dominance in an emerging market segment is very much in company tradition. Subaru pioneered the use of four-wheel drive in passenger cars, and the company's spring 1985 introduction of the XT coupe marked the first appearance of an Italian-designed, Japanese-manufactured sports car. This strategy has paid for Subaru, which was a relative latecomer when it first began selling cars in the 1969 model year.

Since then, Subaru has increased sales to 178,000 units in 1985, good for a 1.6% share of the total U.S. car market and sixth place among all importers. Those figures place Subaru behind Toyota, Nissan, Honda, Mazda and Volkswagen in total units, but ahead of such importers as Volvo, Mercedes-Benz, BMW, Audi and Saab.

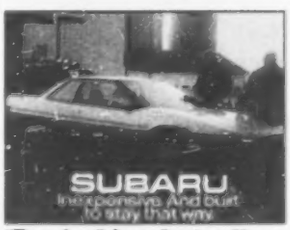
The elements that comprise the Subaru strategy are relatively simple in concept but difficult to execute and balance. In addition to niche marketing, the company wants to establish a strong dealer network and a reputation for customer satisfaction —and to promote it all with strategic advertising.

Finding good dealers and satisfying customers are closely linked goals—and in that way, Subaru found its late entry into the U.S. a blessing. The company says it has been able to be more selective, taking on experienced car dealers who are better funded, more professional and firm believers in advertising and personnel training.

Subaru entered the U.S. in rural markets, but in moving to urban points in the 1980s has upgraded its entire dealer network. Mr. Gibson says larger, better-trained and better-stocked dealerships with intense factory support are a direct reason Subaru is ranked second only to Mercedes-Benz in the Customer Satisfaction Index published annually by consultant J.D. Power & Associates, Westlake Village, Cal.

Another element in the overall strategy is picking the right niches, ones that play to a company's strengths. A niche must not be large enough to attract formidable competition, but it must be profitable and stable or growing.

In its first 15 years, Subaru's main niche has been four-wheel drive passenger cars, which skirted the main strengths of American Motors Corp.'s Jeep trucks and sports utility vehicles such as Ford Bronco and Chevrolet Blazer. With increased interest in four-wheel drive has come new competition: Smaller four-wheel drive utility vehicles including Ford Bronco II, Chevy S-10 Blazer and Jeep Cherokee; four-wheel drive import station wagons such as Honda Civic, Toyota Tercel and Dodge Colt Vista; four-wheel drive versions of domestic cars such as Ford Tempo, plus performance-oriented fulltime four-wheel drive models like Audi 4000S and 5000CSI Quattro.



"Farmboy" from Levine, Huntley connected Subaru's new sports car with its old image.

But Subaru executives say they welcome the competition.

"We are delighted, ecstatic, that others are adding four-wheel drive," says David Sippel, director-corporate communications, which includes advertising, merchandising and research. "Before, we were alone . . . in pioneering passenger car four-wheel drive. This reinforces the idea we were right."

"The Quattros and Tercels helped broaden our market," says Chris Wackman, national ad manager. "They'll all help with the educational process."

He says that process depends on the close relationship between Subaru marketing executives and Levine, Huntley. Mr. Sippel, who previously worked for the Lincoln-Mercury division of Ford Motor Co., calls the closeness "a very refreshing change."

Levine, Huntley is involved in strategy sessions and advanced planning, from president Robert Schmidt on down, he says. "It's almost like having another department in the company."

As Subaru moved upscale and adopted a more urban focus, magazine ads began using four-color more often and finally went to all four-color for the 1986 model year.

A complementary emphasis on tv buys gives Levine, Huntley a chance to do what Mr. Sippel says the agency does especially well: Storytelling.

It is not easy to tell, in 30 seconds, the story of how a company shifted gears from a back-country four-wheel drive station wagon to an Italian-styled sports coupe like the Subaru XT. Levine, Huntley, however, helped create a connection with the 1985 Clio-winning "Farmboy."

In the spot, a young man asks his farmer father what kind of car to buy. Pointing to the rusty family Subaru, the father praises the company's reliability, durability and utility. When his son returns in the racy XT, the farmer says impatiently, "I thought you were going to buy a Subaru." The son's answer: "But Dad, I did."

The spot ends with Subaru's tag line, "Inexpensive. And built to stay that way."

" 'Farmboy' captures the essence of where Subaru is going," Mr. Wackman says.

It also helped capture the attention of dealers. In the past 15 months, Levine, Huntley has landed three major Subaru dealer accounts, billing a combined $9 million to $10 million. That gives the agency eight of the 13 distributorships as well as the national account worth $28 million to $30 million in 1985, up 12% from 1984.

Levine, Huntley also prepared the "You always hurt the one you love" tv spot, which was voted one of Advertising Age's 15 best tv commercials for 1985. The spot features Subaru owners abusing their vehicles by overstuffing trunks, slamming doors and banging into garbage cans.

The upscaled ads, new U.S. factory and additional models are evidence that Subaru is a growing force in U.S. auto sales —and seems built to stay that way.

Honda accelerates into luxury sales with Acura

By Cleveland Horton

"It was only a matter of time," American Honda Motor Co.'s marketers said. They may be right.

The second largest Japanese car importer and the fourth largest U.S. automobile manufacturer introduced its upscale Acura division in late March with the above theme. Although Honda established a beachhead in the U.S. by underselling Detroit and building an image for reliable, well-built and economical cars, it now has its sights set on the emerging market for higher-price, often European-built automobiles.

"A matter of time" showed the business community's reaction to the new Acura division.

Honda hopes to capitalize on the growth of the U.S. market for luxury cars, which is expected to grow to 2.8 million cars, or 25% of the 11 million cars sold in the U.S., by 1990.

Judging from the initial figures, Acura is well on its way to its first-year sales goal of 58,000 automobiles. Within five weeks, the division had sold almost 5,000 cars—1,992 copies of its $20,000 Legend luxury sedan and 2,773 units of its $10,000 Integra sports coupes.

The figures, however, may be deceptive. As with any all-new models, the first sales are the easiest. Enthusiasts, learning about the new division long before the dealers open their doors, flock to the showrooms on the official starting date. This pentup demand assures early strong sales, which aren't necessarily an indication of the long-term strength of the line.

The true test of consumer demand for the Acura line, and the division's ability to promote it," will come in the next few months.

Working against it will be the traditional summer car-sales doldrums when consumers anticipate the traditional fall rollouts of the new model year. Industry analysts, pointing to the number of new domestic and foreign entries in the U.S. market, expect this fall to be one of the noisiest car marketing seasons in history.

In anticipation of the upcoming marketing battle, Honda chose to establish the Acura line as separate from the Honda marque.

The new line is sold only by separate Acura dealers. The division officially began selling cars at the end of March through 50 dealers, but it is adding about 10 dealers a month to the network. Existing Honda dealers weren't assured of winning an Acura dealership, a fact that rankled some dealers who, after as many as 25 years of service to Honda, felt betrayed.

American Honda selected some current Honda dealers as well as highly productive dealers of other makes to set up the Acura network. Industry observers say many Honda dealers, operating in a seller's market, fail to actively market the Honda line. By starting a second network, the company says it hopes to infuse a new sales spirit in both the Honda and Acura dealers.

Although Honda's decision to establish a separate division for the Acura line is unusual, it is typical of the Japanese importers' efforts to bring in higher priced cars. Operating under the federal Voluntary Restraint Agreement, which limits the number of cars that can be imported to the U.S., the importers need to bring in cars with higher sticker prices to continue to boost U.S. sales. All the Japanese importers have focused on the higher ends of their lines, while paring back on the stripped-down models.

However, unlike the other Japanese manufacturers, Honda is using its U.S. production capacity to a distinct advantage. By using its factory in Marysville, O., to produce smaller models, Honda is able to import Acuras without reducing the number of cars it sells in the U.S.

Accelerates into luxury

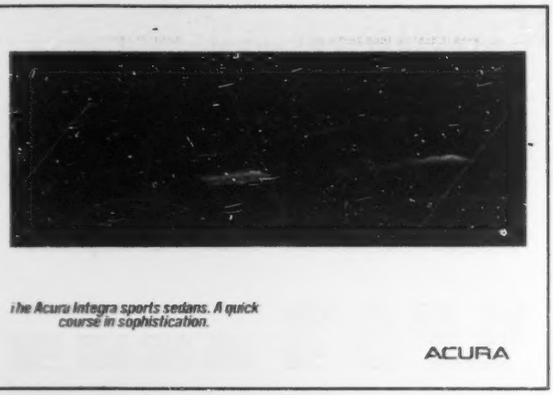
Honda will continue to emphasize price, economy and reliability for its Civics, Accords and Preludes on the Honda side. For the Acura line, however, the emphasis will be on performance and luxury.

Honda's initial Acura advertising hammered home the theme of "precision-crafted automobiles" from "a new division of American Honda." Ketchum Advertising, Los Angeles, handles the Acura account, which, it is estimated, will bill as much as $20 million this year.

The account is handled separately from American Honda, which remains at Rubin, Postaer & Associates, Los Angeles. In 1985, Honda's measured media spending totaled $96.9 million, according to Leading National Advertisers.

But a few question marks, not entirely anticipated by Honda management, remain in the generally successful Acura launch. While the Legend easily is positioned within Honda's U.S. lineup as the highest priced and most luxurious automobile, the Integra's positioning and image is floundering.

The target market for the Legend is easily defined. Honda says it isn't interested in conquest sales, or convincing a Porsche or BMW owner to give up that marque in favor of an Acura. Rather, Honda is attempting to create intercept sales--to attract the customer about to trade up to those European models to at least consider the Legend.



The Integra sports sedan faces a tougher marketing job than the Acura Legend.

The Integra is a different story. By price, the base Integra comes in at $9,448, above the Civic's top end but below some models of the Accord and Prelude. Likewise, the U.S. consumer is well aware of the concept of the "luxury sedan," but may have a harder time understanding what Acura means when it describes the Integra as a "sport sedan."

Although traffic in the new Acura dealerships is reportedly brisk, few people come in asking to see an Integra. "Right now, the Integra is being dragged along by the Legend," says Craig Mathiesen, general manager of Ketchum's Los Angeles office.

He says the agency is creating more product-oriented advertising to help develop the category.

A good indication of the level of consumer acceptance of the Acura models is the price these cars command, as opposed to the manufacturer's suggested retail price.

Like their sister Honda dealers, Acura dealers are packing the Legend with surcharges. However, most dealers are selling the Integra at the factory sticker price or discounts.

The willingness of dealers to deal on the Integra may prove positive in the long run. "The seeds of their initial failure may be the seeds of their future success," one industry observer says.

In many ways, Honda is following in the footsteps of Detroit, adding divisions with distinctly separate characters to reach a larger share of the car-buying consumer. Like General Motors, whose offerings range from entry-level Chevrolets to upscale Cadillacs, Honda is embracing the cradle-to-grave credo and attempting to market automobiles for every life style and pocketbook.

Ask anyone in Detroit, and they'll tell you it was only a matter of time.

Smokeless tobacco volume sales drop

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

Volume sales in the total smokeless tobacco industry dropped about 1% in 1985, a change over previous years when sales showed a slightly upward trend.

The only products that were up were the moist snuff and fine cut. This portion of the industry is pretty well owned by U.S. Tobacco, which grew slightly over one share point over-all within the industry. They managed to maintain their No. 2 position, despite the acquisition of R.J. Reynolds' trademarks by Pinkerton.

In the moist snuff area, U.S. Tobacco shares dropped to 88.8% from 89.3%. A share point was picked up by Conwood, led by its Kodiak product. Nonetheless, U.S. Tobacco's Copenhagen was up some 7%, and Skoal and Skoal Bandits were up somewhat. In the case of Helm, total shares declined slightly but its Redwood product almost tripled in volume.

The market leader, Conwood, was up 1.3 share points. This was the biggest jump of any company, led by increased shares, not only in moist snuff and fine cut, but also a 2 share-point jump in loose leaf. Pinkerton was up only because of the inclusion of the recently acquired RJR names, and all other companies were down in share penetration.

The main concern we see on the horizon is new labeling and taxation. It has been well publicized that the tobacco companies will be excluded from many of the media; they have rotating warning labels and federal taxation.

In addition, quite a few states have decided to add taxes of their own and to try to limit availability of the products to the public. The combination can only be adverse to the consumption trends of this industry, with a particular impact on the moist snuff and fine cut area.

We continue to believe that "sin," in the form of various tobacco and alcohol products, has been singled out by Congress for new excise taxes. Recent discussions in the press on total excise tax increases of $25 billion over five years will necessarily come from these two areas.#

Mr. Maxwell is with Furman Selz Mager Dietz & Birney, New York.

U.S. shops storm Cannes

By CLAIRE WILSON

PARIS—Perhaps encouraged by having taken the top Grand Prix award two years in a row, Americans are entering a record number of candidates in next week's International Advertising Awards Film Festival at Cannes.

U.S. commercials entered at the festival are up 25% from last year, for a total of 578 spots from U.S. agencies and other U.S. sources this year.

Terry Laughren, president and managing partner of Screenvision, the U.S. member of the Screen Advertising World Assn., which organizes the Cannes festival each year, said last year's Grand Prix winner (BBDO's "Archeology" spot for PepsiCo) and the previous year's (Chiat/Day's "1984" spot for Apple Computer) are probably the strongest factors encouraging Americans to enter. The Grand Prix is the top award given for excellence in tv and cinema advertising at the festival.

"Everybody likes to win, and when they saw 'Archeology' they probably said, 'Wait a minute, we did work that was better than that' and decided to give it a shot," said Mr. Laughren. "Americans are on a roll, they're winning the prizes."

The American shops' chief rivals, British agencies, also increased their entries, from 394 last year to 437 this year.

Japanese entries jumped from 174 last year to 217 for next week's festival.

Last year, however, British agencies copped the most total prizes in Gold, Silver and Bronze categories, unlike the previous year, when U.S. agencies led in total awards. U.S. agencies won two Gold Lions, the most coveted award next to the Grand Prix, in 1985, compared with 10 for British shops.

On another front, organizers say fears of terrorism have not dampened enthusiasm for the festival. "There were a lot of Americans saying they would not be attending this year because of all that. But those were the ones who never came anyway," Mr. Laughren said.#

G&R to handle Range Rover intro

By LISA E. PHILLIPS

NEW YORK—Range Rover of North America is preparing to steer its $30,000 high-performance, four-wheel-drive luxury import into the U.S. next March as the first client of 4-month-old Grace & Rothschild.

The assignment of the expensive vehicle officially launches the shop here formed by Roy Grace and Diane Rothschild, who resigned as Doyle Dane Bernbach's creative chief and exec vp-creative director, respectively (AA, Feb. 3, et seq.).

The Lanham, Md.-based U.S. subsidiary of Land Rover-Leyland International Holdings, London, has not completed its ad budget, but its goal is to sell 3,000 Range Rovers in 1987.

Its closest competitor, American-made AMC/Jeep Wagoneer, was backed by $4 million in measured media last year.

Range Rover chose G&R after creative presentations by three finalists, narrowed from a field of 12. Charles Hughes, president, Range Rover of North America, declined to identify the other contenders, but said, "It was a tough choice. In spite of the megamergers going on, there's still a lot of character and individualism out there."

Creative was the final criterion, he said, and G&R "had the best creative. We all parted with a great deal of respect" for the other contenders, he added.

How could G&R hold out for four months before landing its first account? "We ate a lot before February," joked Mr. Grace, who is G&R's chairman. "Actually, we're well capitalized, and have enough financial backing to keep going," he said, until the Range Rover account begins billing next year or until another account is won. He declined to say whether the agency is pitching any other accounts.

The $30,000-range price tag for Range Rover makes it the highest-price four-wheel-drive vehicle in the U.S., easily topping the AMC/Jeep Grand Wagoneer's fully loaded $25,000 price tag.#

USFL scores fall syndication deal

By ROBERT RAISSMAN

NEW YORK—The U.S. Football League has struck a deal beginning Sept. 25 to syndicate 13 live, prime time Thursday games of the week.

The move could have implications for its $1.32 billion antitrust suit against the National Football League, because the USFL is arguing in court that the NFL tv contracts with the Big 3 networks have denied the USFL access to network tv. Most observers contend that the USFL is really seeking a merger with the NFL, and that if it loses its antitrust suit, it will simply fold.

Dom Camera, director of marketing for the USFL, said league executives considered the impact that syndication might have on its antitrust suit but decided to go ahead.

Mizlou Television Network will handle station clearances and production. ProServ, the Washington-based sports marketing agency that represents the USFL, will handle advertising sales. The package, which will not affect the USFL's cable contract with ESPN, is a straight barter deal, with stations paying nothing for the games and the USFL retaining 50% of the commercial inventory for national sale.

But few national advertisers will go into a syndicated property with less than 60% clearance of U.S. tv households, and that could be a problem. There are only eight franchises remaining in the league, with only New Jersey among the top 10 markets.

David Bagliebter, senior vp, ProServ, conceded it will be difficult to clear the league games in the required 60% of the U.S. He added that the USFL expects to make as much as $4 million in profits from the broadcasts, but that expectation appears optimistic.

There are other potential problems in the plan. The USFL, which started as a spring football league, is now going to play during the heaviest tv sports months, competing against NFL and college-football coverage, the final weeks of Major League Baseball coverage and the start of pro and college basketball and hockey. The tv sports marketplace has been extremely weak for the past few years, and the USFL inventory will only soften the market more.

National advertising is expected to be offered at cost-per-thousand rates considerably below network and other syndicated programing cpms. Mr. Bagliebter said advertisers were "sitting back" and waiting to see the outcome of the trial. Written presentations will be in the hands of advertisers within 10 days, he said. "We will time our selling so it will coincide with a time when the trial is coming to a conclusion," he said.#

company to buy the adjoining 15.

But Mr. Mapes said he is not convinced stand-alone 15s are the future of advertising. When the networks relaxed their standards to accept 30-second spots, split-60s totaled 80% of the business, he said. At present, split-30s account for only about 10% of NBC's volume.

The 207 NBC affiliates attending the meeting were buoyed by General Electric Co.'s $6.4 billion purchase of RCA Corp., NBC's parent, and by NBC Entertainment president Brandon Tartikoff's multiyear contract extension.

Fairfield, Conn.-based GE concluded its purchase of RCA about the same time NBC exec vp Ray Timothy opened the affiliate session June 9.

"GE gives the network the resources to do things no one else can. CBS is in a bind. ABC is cutting back. That leaves NBC to just go up and up," said C.E. (Pep) Cooney, president-general manager of affiliate KPNX-TV, Phoenix. "Making sure Brandon Tartikoff will stay also ends any concern about GE changing things."#

Honda, Greyhound up, but airlines on slide

NEW YORK—Among advertisers, Honda's rise follows sharply higher early June car sales of 3,135, vs. 1,845 a year ago. Pfizer gained among a strong drug group. Greyhound's rise follows management's authorization to buy back another 2 million shares, or 4.3% of its outstanding stock. Airlines continued their decline, as the chairman of AMR, parent of American, told analysts that yields for his company and, by extension, the industry continue to fall short of expectations, and the summer traffic surge many observers expect doesn't seem to be developing.

Among media, "all cable stocks recently went up [because] of the home-shopping craze," said Steve Rosenberg, an analyst with Paul Kagan & Associates, Carmel, Cal. "What Wall Street is realizing is that if there is a business in home shopping, then the cable systems will benefit." Two of last week's gainers, Rogers Cablesystems and United Cable Television, are potential partners in new home-shopping networks. Playboy Enterprises rose following some weeks of declines, while Turner Broadcasting declined following gains the previous week when it sold off assets of MGM/UA Entertainment Co.

Among agencies, JWT Group rebounded from the previous week's decline that is now being called an overreaction to word it is acquiring Gray & Co.#

Ad Council vetoes 4A's solo drug fight

By STEWART ALTER

NEW YORK—The American Assn. of Advertising Agencies, which planned to bypass the Advertising Council and spearhead its own three-year, $1.5 billion public service campaign against drug use, appears ready to capitulate to behind-the-scenes pressure by advertisers who want to involve the Ad Council.

Plans are being developed for the campaign, which will seek an unprecedented $500 million a year in free media time and space (including prime time network tv, which is unusual for public service efforts), to be managed by a newly formed group tentatively called the Media Advertising Partnership for a Drug Free America.

That 11-member group reportedly will consist of three members of the Four A's plus Four A's consultant Richard O'Reilly, three Ad Council members and two members each from the Assn. of National Advertisers and the American Advertising Federation.

The antidrug effort, scheduled to start in September, was first announced at the recent Four A's annual meeting (AA, May 12), to the surprise of the Ad Council, which had no indication it was going to face such a major rival in asking for donations of media time and space for public service.

The Ad Council, whose 83-member board is made up of advertiser, ad agency and media executives, is the industry's main coordinator of public service ad campaigns. Its campaigns currently use the equivalent of $800 million in donated media a year.

The council's own antidrug campaign has garnered the equivalent of $99 million in free media from late 1983 through 1985. A recent anticocaine segment of the campaign has had free time donated on prime time network tv.

The Ad Council was informed that the Four A's was planning some antidrug effort "over a year ago," said council president Bob Keim. He said the Ad Council also got calls from the Four A's asking about how it distributes materials.

But the Ad Council was never told the dimensions of the campaign being planned by the Four A's, Mr. Keim said, noting that it was not brought formally to the Ad Council board.

New account-shift wave hits megashops

An Advertising Age roundup

Continuing fallout from agency megamergers contributed to at least $85 million in account shifts last week, and that easily could climb to as much as $200 million.

These billing shifts follow on the heels of the $300 million in business already changing hands because the new combinations of huge shops have run afoul of client conflict policies.

The latest round of moves:

- Procter & Gamble's reassignment of the $30 million European Oil of Olay business to Saatchi & Saatchi Compton Worldwide from Young & Rubicam, just two weeks after denying Saatchi the U.S. portion of the Olay account. That had been seen by some as a reprimand for Saatchi's acquisition of Ted Bates Worldwide, which at the time was a major Colgate-Palmolive agency.
- IBM Corp.'s dismissal of Doyle Dane Bernbach, Leber Katz Partners and Geer, DuBois.
- Tri-Honda Auto Dealers Assn.'s $6 million shift to Korey, Kay & Partners from Needham Harper Worldwide.
- Warner-Lambert's reported plan to move some business out of Ted Bates Advertising/New York because of conflicts at DFS Dorland Worldwide, also a Saatchi shop.

Also last week, Mars Inc. pulled a new cat food, Sheba, from Bates overseas because its acquisition by Saatchi created a conflict with Carnation Co. Saatchi & Saatchi handles Carnation pet foods in France, Belgium, Austria, Germany and Sweden. Sheba cat food is sold in those countries.

The decision seems to show that Mars is taking a strict global look at Saatchi. A Mars spokesman in London said the company made its decision about Sheba "after a review of the worldwide Saatchi & Saatchi client list, but discussions are still pending."

Mars has reassigned the new product to Grey Advertising in Japan and Australia, and will assign Sheba in other countries to its existing stable of shops.

It was earlier reported that Bates' relationship with Mars had come "under study" (AA, June 9) because of the Saatchi deal.

In the U.S., Grey also picked up the $20 million creative assignment for Detroit-based Stroh Brewery's Old Milwaukee brand, which had been resigned by BBDO after it agreed to combine with Doyle Dane Bernbach and Needham Harper Worldwide. Needham is an Anheuser-Busch agency. Other finalists for Old Milwaukee were Lowe Marschalk; McCann-Erickson; Jordan, Case, Taylor & McGrath, and N W Ayer. The media-buying assignment on the entire $80 million Stroh account, still unassigned, is ex-

RJR will fight FTC complaint

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s decision to fight a Federal Trade Commission complaint challenging one of its 1985 "issue" ads could lead advertisers to a clearer definition of the differences between commercial and free speech.

Commercial speech is subject to government regulation, while free speech, even for corporations, is more completely protected by the First Amendment.

In its complaint, the FTC contends Reynolds overstepped the protected boundary by misrepresenting the results of a govern-

Rehnquist cool to ad rights

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—William Rehnquist's nomination as Chief Justice may represent the end of an era for advertisers who welcomed expanded First Amendment protections from Supreme Court decisions of the 1970s and '80s.

Despite his personal disdain for lawyer advertising, retiring Chief Justice Warren Burger was generally sympathetic to fundamental advertiser arguments that commercial speech is entitled to many of the same constitutional rights as free speech.

But Justice Rehnquist, with one exception, always has voted on the other side, according to several court watchers.

He, in effect, voted against expanding the First Amendment rights of advertisers in the landmark advertising cases of Central Hudson Gas & Electric Corp. v. Public Service Commission (1980), Bolger v. Youngs Drug Products Corp. (1983) and Virginia State Board of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council (1976).

How that record would manifest itself in a true ad ban case is open to speculation. But William Rogal, general counsel to the American Advertising Federation, says, "Mr. Rehnquist never met an ad ban or

Carbide account deserts 2 shops

Union Carbide Agriculture Products Co.'s consolidation of its $12 million account with Howard Merrell & Partners last week shook three regional agencies.

The switch dealt a crippling blow to Fletcher/Mayo Associates' Atlanta office, which is left with billings of about $6.5 million after losing $10 million in Union Carbide business. Ogilvy & Mather, Atlanta, also suffered from the agency switch, losing about $2 million in consumer garden-products business.

New image fits a growing economy

In "Miami Vice," the NBC-TV hit series, the pastel-clad heroes prowl the city's neon-lit, art deco haunts. True, "Vice" portrays Miami as a violent city. Yet the show's more seductive and trendy elements have become part of the building of a new Florida image.

While retirees playing mahjong by the pool, orange juice and Disney World are still very much a part of the scene, a more aggressive picture of Florida is emerging.

An influx in recent years of new businesses—and young professionals—prompted one observer to say, "It's a kind of rough-and-tumble frontier state. It's growing, and it's still young."

According to the Florida Department of Commerce, Tallahassee, the state's population increased almost 32% between 1974 and 1984. Currently, it's the sixth largest state with a population of 11.4 million. Many newcomers are arriving to take advantage of Florida's healthy business climate, not to mention its year-round tropical one.

"Beginning in the early '70s, the fundamental nature of the state's economy began to change," says Florida Trend magazine assistant managing editor Thomas J. Billitteri. "Until the mid-'70s recession, the economy rolled along, based on old-line industries—the three-legged stool of tourism, real estate/construction and agriculture. Then the recession hit and all economic indicators were shaken." The real estate industry almost collapsed, and the oil embargo hurt tourism.

"Florida has gradually evolved into a service-oriented economy," he says. "High-tech companies have come, and with them new employment opportunities. In addition, Miami has become a major player in international trade and finance. And as the economy changes, pressures will continue to change the state—where people live and how they live. And pressure to manage the state's growth will remain a big issue here."

It sounds like Florida is becoming the place to go for a vacation—and stay for a job.

Businesses discover welcoming climate

By Maureen Glabman

In these days of increasingly competitive industrial recruiting, it seems odd that in the early 1970s, executives who considered moving their companies to Florida found little help from the state.

"We weren't interested in attracting business to Florida then," says Steve Mayberry, director of Florida's Division of Economic Development, Tallahassee. "Our economy was based on tourism, agriculture and construction."

> "We are suffering all the problems of success. Declining industrial states . . . would love to have our problems."
> James Nicholas
> University of Florida

That attitude ended soon after the 1973 oil embargo and the recession of 1974-75. "The state realized it could not depend on the cyclical nature of our biggest three industries," Mr. Mayberry says. "It became evident [the state] needed to diversify."

Now Mr. Mayberry's division has an $8 million annual budget to lure companies southward. The state offers an attractive package of tax benefits: No inventory tax, no state income or net worth taxes, and exemption from sales tax on new machinery and equipment. Florida is a right-to-work state with few unions; thus, salaries tend to be low. Employes, however, benefit from the state's low cost of living and inexpensive housing, varied cultural and sports activities and tropical climate.

Mr. Mayberry, who directs a staff of 141, says Florida is perceived as having a good quality of life. "Today site decisions are made on subjective as well as on objective factors," he says.

Grant Thornton International, a Chicago-based accounting firm, has rated Florida as having the sixth best business climate among the 48 contiguous states.

Critics, however, cite several obstacles that hinder Florida in its pursuit of new businesses. Among them: Lack of skilled labor, inconvenient location for shipping companies and a paucity of universities from which to draw talent or obtain postgraduate degrees.

Maureen Glabman is a Miami-based Advertising Age correspondent.

Industrial companies, nonetheless, came to the state at a fast and furious pace from 1978 to 1983. According to the State Department of Commerce, during those years 461 new companies came to Florida. They made $350 million in capital investments and employed an estimated 35,348 people.

Because Florida's labor supply is short on industrial experience, many companies import their skilled and technical workers from the Northeast and Midwest, says James Nicholas, associate director of the University of Florida's Growth Management Studies, Gainesville. Although labor is cheaper in Florida, new companies need skilled labor as well as labor at bargain prices.

"We are suffering all the problems of success," Mr. Nicholas says. Services, especially education, are not keeping pace with the state's growth. "Declining industrial states like Ohio and West Virginia would love to have our problems."

Mr. Nicholas says many companies tend to import executives because Florida does not have enough advanced technological universities from which to draw. That has prompted defections among transferees seeking to further their education, Mr. Nicholas says. "Many people want to continue their education, but there is no place to do that. Plus, the quality of public education for their children is [poor]."

"Education is not one of our stronger suits," says Warren Henderson, spokesman for the State Department of Commerce, Tallahassee. "It's a concern. There is room for improvement."

Mr. Henderson says Florida's out-of-the-way location, while excellent for companies that do business with Latin America, is not wholly conducive to U.S. shippers. "Florida's location isn't always a benefit," Mr. Henderson says.

"Companies want to be in the center of their market, not at the edge," Mr. Nicholas says.

Employers, though, still find Florida a good place for consolidation and business expansion. The Division of Economic Development's Mr. Mayberry is proud of the Siemens Energy and Automation deal made in 1984.

The manufacturing company built a $50 million high-tech hydrogenerator plant in Manatee County in Southwest Florida. Siemens, which moved from Milwaukee, employs 600 people in Florida and is one of the biggest employers ever to move to the state.

Siemens looked at six Sunbelt sites before choosing Florida. Utility Power Corp., also a subsidiary of Siemens' parent company, Siemens A.G. in West Germany, was already in Florida and helped to sway the relocation decision. Florida's Gov. Bob Graham also helped by arranging more than $1 million in aid, partially through federal grants and in-state job training funds.

Another company that chomped on the state's bait was Equitable Relocation Management, which consolidated its New York and Chicago co-headquarters in Orlando in 1985.

Company spokesman Joe Halberstadt says Equitable reviewed Dallas and Atlanta, as well as New York and Chicago, but chose Orlando despite the fact that the majority of the company's business is outside the state. The state's favorable tax benefits and inexpensive office space were attractive, he says. Also, Equitable wanted to stay in the eastern time zone, where most of its customers are.

Not all companies that move to Florida stay there. Burroughs Corp., which came to Florida in 1974, recently closed its Coral Springs and Orlando manufacturing plants. However, a company spokesperson says the operations were moved to an existing facility in Michigan based on a business decision that had nothing to do with Florida.

DED's best year to date was 1985, division economist Jim Hosler says. The state aided 216 companies, which made an estimated capital investment of $1.3 billion and provided employment for 30,780 people. In 1984, 133 companies were helped to establish offices in Florida. They provided 14,480 jobs and expended $300 million in capital, Mr. Hosler says. The figures do not account for companies that did not ask for state assistance in relocating.

THE CHOICE IS FLORIDA.
Eight states were in the running for their new regional facility.
They chose Florida.
In large part because of our people. Florida's work force has earned a reputation for being highly skilled and reliable. Along with having strong company loyalty.
They chose Florida because of our business climate. Our state and local governments exist and welcome new businesses. And our corporate taxes allow businesses to be competitive. There is no unitary tax. And no personal income tax.
And they looked at the most current data and found Florida to be the trend-setting state in the nation. So when you're looking at Florida today, you're seeing the state of the future.
The bottom line: Florida is considered to be the premiere business opportunity state in the country.
So when they set out to open their new facility, it was clear why we got it.

Counties cultivating growth

Much of the business growth and activity around Florida has been evident in several counties: To the north, Duval, to the center, Orange and Seminole, and to the south and east, Broward and Palm Beach, says Steve Mayberry, director of Florida's Division of Economic Development.

Dade County, Florida's most populous county, has not kept pace with growth in other areas. The county has been coping with an image problem. Many residents have left the area in reaction to an influx of Haitian and Cuban refugees, and narcotics-related crime continues to be a problem in Miami, although city officials say it is declining.

Despite the fears of some that recruiting industry would bring the state problems as well as benefits, individual counties have tried to attract business:

Orange and Seminole

The largest claims of success are echoed by enthusiatic executives in Central Florida's Orange and Seminole counties, home to Orlando. "Orlando has had more companies move to it than any other city in the state," says Ron Thibodeaux, senior vp, Industrial Development Commission of Mid-Florida.

Orlando experienced much growth from 1980-83, when more than 100 companies launched major new projects in the area. Among them: American Bell, General Electric, Western Electric (now AT&T Technologies), Westinghouse and Harcourt Brace Jovanovich.

But Mr. Thibodeaux says the pace has slowed. "We have seen a slowdown in the movement of 'name brand' companies in the last two years. This seems to be the case all over. Companies are tending to want to better use their existing facilities" in their home states.

Mr. Thibodeaux says the IDC still receives 210 inquiries a month from companies seeking to locate in the area. The agency has a $600,000 budget this year and will spend $110,000 on trade print advertising via Gouchenour Inc., Orlando.

Although tourism remains the backbone of central Florida's economy, with Disney World and Epcot Center at the core, industrial development slowly is adding another dimension to the area still widely known as the orange belt.

Palm Beach

Bill Fruth, executive director of the Palm Beach County Development Board, West Palm Beach, has raised $600,000 through private and county contributions this year for the first

"The decision to add another plant in Florida could take years," Charles Roedema, a Beber senior vp, says. "The point of advertising is to remind the executives that Florida should be an option when considering expansion plans."

Some of the business journals are regional buys, part of an in-state effort because state recruiters, who once concentrated their efforts on Fortune 500 companies, recently have turned their attention toward in-state expansions.

One company that has undergone continuous expansion is defense contractor Harris Corp., which moved its corporate headquarters from Cleveland to Melbourne near the Kennedy Space Center in 1978. The company since has built or purchased 24 buildings and hired at least 4,000 more employes for a total of 14,000.

Harris is one of an estimated 100 defense contractors in the state. According to state economists, in the past 10 years, Florida has moved from the nation's 14th largest defense contracting state to the eighth.

Defense contractors historically were the first large manufacturers to locate in Florida. Pratt & Whitney opened its government products divison in Palm Beach County in the 1950s.

Harris has had an electronics division near the space center since the late 1950s. Martin Marietta, Florida's largest defense contractor, started its Orlando division in 1957.

Overseas dollars pour into Miami

By John F. Sugg

Miami is experiencing a somewhat different kind of tidal wave: Billions and billions of overseas dollars are flooding the city, transforming it into a global financial and commercial center. Over the last seven years Miami has gone from being the nation's 50th largest banking center to the fifth, trailing only New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

John F. Sugg is vp and Miami manager for The Communications Group.

Illustrating the scope of this economy, Miami's Federal Reserve branch takes in $22 for each $1 distributed. The national average is $1 in, $1 out.

Professor Jan Luytjes of Florida International University fears that Miami's cash-hungry economy, with its chrome and pastel facade and murky substrata, will turn the city into a new Calcutta, black hole and all. Yet Mr. Luytjes sees the flow of international capital into Miami as being responsible for the city's commercial growth and necessary for continued expansion.

"The major problem is that for years we relied on only a few trading partners, primarily Venezuela," he says. "When economic conditions there worsened, we were hurt."

"We were too tied to one product—Latin America," agrees Dennis Nason, general manager of the Miami branch of Credit Suisse and current president of the International Center, Miami's forum for offshore trade and finance. "But we have been maturing, and now are strongly tied to Europe, the Far East and Africa, as well as the Caribbean and Latin America."

Miami, the gateway to the Caribbean and South America, also is in an excellent location for the world's economies to cross. The emerging infrastructure and expertise available in Miami also is winning nods from multinational enterprises.

As an example of Miami's far-flung endeavors, the large local personal products company Windmere Corp. recently sent its attorney, Cyrus Hornsby, to the People's Republic of China to form one of the first trading companies acceptable both to the laws of that Communist country and to U.S. corporate regulations. The project was so successful that companies from Japan and elsewhere now want to form joint ventures with Windmere's Chinese trading company.

"Miami's emergence as an international banking center is the result of many factors," says Bowman Brown, a banking specialist with the Miami law firm of Shutts & Bowen. "The area's geographic location and cultural and economic ties make it almost as much a part of Latin America as of the United States. Miami's population is approximately 58% Latin in origin. Spanish is widely spoken and the city has a Latin character."

According to Tony Villamil, senior vp and economist for Southeast Bank N.A., Miami's proximity to Latin America and the comfortable bilingual environment provide an irresistible lure for the affluent in the Caribbean and South America. More than 1.5 million Latins visit Miami each year, and with them comes money—lots of it.

This money spurred a boom in international trade, transforming a sleepy tourist town into a major import-export center. More than $5 billion in goods flows annually through the Port of Miami.

To facilitate the trade, international banks began eyeing the city. In the city today there are more than 90 foreign bank agencies and Edge Act banks, which are subsidiaries of U.S. banks licensed to engage in foreign trade.

Miami's international banks surpass New York both in number and in volume of assets, according to the Greater Miami Chamber of Commerce. Total offshore deposits are estimated at $10 billion to $15 billion. "Those deposits are increasing at a rate of 50% a year," Credit Suisse's Mr. Nason says.

James Whisenand, an attorney for many of the foreign banks, says this growth "is especially significant when you realize that six years ago, we had no foreign agency or Edge Act banks here."

This money's impact on Miami is fairly substantial. According to a recently completed study by Robert Grosse of the University of Miami's International Banking Institute, the international sector accounts for about $800 million to $900 million of Miami's $20 billion annual payroll. That is a much higher ratio than most other U.S. cities.

Miami's banks, foreign and domestic, have a distinctly multinational flavor. Recently, for example, the Private Bank & Trust Co., which provides European-style services, opened its doors on Brickell Ave., Miami's fashionable version of Wall St.

"They may only have 30 clients the first year," Mr. Whisenand says, "but they will be very substantial clients."

Many of the banks now have offshore owners. For example, Miami National Bank now is controlled by a Spanish group headed by Francisco de Borbon, the Duke of Seville, currently a Miami Beach resident. Other banks are owned by Brazilians, Ecuadoreans, Portuguese.

All this international capital in Miami has spurred the growth and sophistication of many support services, but some bankers and executives believe Miami doesn't market itself well.

National law firms vigorously compete for the offshore clients. The Big 8 accounting firms tailor their services to a multinational clientele. Commercial office areas vie for tenants with boasts of international amenities. One Miami suburb, Coral Gables, is the haven for more than 100 multinational corporate headquarters.

Despite the burgeoning growth of such service indus-

'Smurfs' cleaning up in international economy

Now for the seamy side of Miami's multi-billion-dollar international economy.

Bundles of offshore dollars flowing into Miami are tainted by drugs, gunrunning and other exotic activities. That's where the Miami "smurf" comes in. And in Miami, these smurfs definitely are not for kids, and the more appropriate color for them is green, not blue.

A smurf, in Miami's "Spanglish" lingo, is someone who travels from bank to bank converting $9,900 in hundred-dollar bills into money orders.

Why $9,900? Because a $10,000 cash transaction must be reported to federal banking authorities.

So anyone—drug smuggler, corrupt South American politician sandbagging money away in the U.S., clandestine arms dealer—with a lot of hundred-dollar bills uses "smurfs" to transform those bills into money orders that can be privately deposited into a bank account.

While the international banking business has been booming in Miami, some have criticized the city's marketing of its operations.

young city, and we still don't have our act completely together," Mr. Nason says. "We are still building the infrastructure [to support international trade], and we still are in transition from what we were to what we will be."

The infrastructure is taking shape, however. Mr. Nason says that within recent weeks, Miami took the first steps to the creation of a World Trade Center.

"In international banking, I think we are maturing and there is a general shift to private and investment banking along European lines," Mr. Whisenand says. "This should draw even more foreign capital to Miami and will even more firmly establish Miami as a world financial and trade center." AA tries, the city is lamentably lax in selling its international skills. "We have not marketed ourselves well," Mr. Nason say. "I guess you could say that banking is not a very sexy subject to market, but that's no excuse for us not being more aggressive."

Although many Miami advertising agencies have handled prestige tourism accounts, few have won kudos for marketing international financial services.

Miami "agencies really don't have much skill in dealing with foreign markets," says Sandy Tinsley, chairman of Tinsley Advertising, one agency that has promoted the city's trade and finance through work for the Port of Miami, the City of Coral Gables and the Dade County (greater Miami) Economic Development Coalition.

Looking to the future, Miami has more problems than just marketing itself to the world. It has crime—on the wane, perhaps, but still real. And Miami's international elite, new to the field, still are uncomfortably trying to adjust to a changing world economy.

Much-publicized drug smuggling accounts for an estimated $8 billion annual local cottage industry. Also, massive amounts of cash flow into a variety of unlikely and often unsavory enterprises.

Major league multinational financial scams also are a part of the Miami milieu. Mr. Whisenand's law firm represents the Venezuelan government, which is trying to recover $800 million allegedly misappropriated by a fugitive financier, Florida's largest banking group and a once-powerful Miami law firm.

Money laundering has been hit hard by regulators, but still surfaces. Miami's Sunshine State Bank was closed last month; investigators suggested that it was the first bank that may have been purchased for the primary purpose of laundering funds.

Of greater concern to the bankers and merchants is how to turn Miami's boisterous international infant into a mature and stable adult global community.

"Our future continues to rely on a vibrant Latin American economy," Mr. Villamil says, noting that Miami has trailed the rest of Florida in economic recovery because the debt-plagued Latin economies have been anything but vibrant. "We're a

Tourism trade shifts strategy to lure travelers

By Maureen Glabman

Henry Flagler didn't have the title, but he was Florida's most important early tourism official.

Mr. Flagler came to the state before the turn of the century, built a railroad along its east coast, erected at least five hotels near its tracks and then advertised Florida as a resort in northern newspapers. He created the first important device to make Florida a tourist state—accessibility between the North and South.

Things have only gotten better since Mr. Flagler came south, because tourism has grown to become Florida's largest industry. In the past, the weather was used to lure tourists, but a new strategy uses activities in the state as the bait.

State tourism today is a $22 billion industry, according to Rene Welti, assistant director, Florida Division of Tourism. An estimated 30 million out-of-state visitors arrived in 1985, a 7% increase from 1984.

Some of the reasons for the boom are apparent. College students migrate south to Florida for spring break and families fondly view the state as the domain of Disney World.

Helping to round out potential visitors' visions of the state is Florida's Division of Tourism and Economic Development, which presides over a $9.3 million statewide budget. Additional individual county and city agencies have tourist-luring war chests that total $36 million.

A bill that would have more than doubled the division's budget to about $20 million with a tax levied on accommodations, taverns, attractions and rental cars was defeated before the state legislature adjourned June 6.

However, the state gave the division an additional $500,000 for its 1986-87 budget. The state's tourism picture still could change radically if voters approve a casino gambling referendum in November.

During the 1960s and 1970s, tourism helped keep Florida's economy on even footing when it traveled a rocky road because of real estate investment speculation and double-digit inflation. Although tourism has had a steadying influence on the state's economy, over the years it has developed its own sensitivities, hinging on the dollar's strength overseas and the price of gas, to name just two.

Florida gets a lion's share of Latin American business. But Latin currencies are volatile, and the state cannot bank on a steady deposit of Latin tourist dollars. In response, tourism officials search for business within the U.S. and from Europe.

Strategy is a word heard a lot in state tourism circles. Florida's tactic once was to attract winter-weary tourists through a six-year campaign created by Mike Sloan Advertising, Miami, and tag lined "When you've got it bad, we've got it good."

Although officials called that strategy successful, the planning has changed. For the first time in the state's history, tourism ads do not focus on weather but on the diversity of available activities.

The first ad campaign created by Miami-based Beber, Silverstein & Partners, which took over the state account last year, stressed diversity in big winter and spring pushes in 36 U.S. print and tv markets.

More than 80% of the campaign, which carried the theme, "We got it. Florida," was delivered through broadcasting.

Several tv spots opened with views of grassy areas, cowboys and horses—scenes not usually associated with Florida. They were followed with attraction and beach scenes. "What we were saying is that there is so much to see and do in Florida," Beber partner Sid Levin says.

The state also has begun its first major in-state summer print campaign, which is running in 25 Florida newspapers this month.

The theme, "Play in your own back yard," headlines a four-page, four-color ad of 32 Florida flings and a calendar of summer events. Some 44 radio stations were given accompanying public

Summer tv spots convey another theme: Family fun. Tourism division-financed studies showed Florida was losing family business because families typically travel to cooler climes during the summer. To counter this, the agency created tv spots that show a grandfather and son fishing, a mother and daughter at the beach and a little girl smiling. The voiceover says: "The best thing about your Florida vacation is the smile on your child's face."

"All along we've been going after the sun idea, promoting winter business," Mr. Welti says. "Now we're promoting Florida as a year-round travel destination."

Counties take initiative on inviting visitors

The lure of Florida's sun, sand and surf notwithstanding, the state's counties and cities are leaving nothing to chance. They are backing up Florida's tourism budget of $9.3 million with another $36 million in individual efforts. The aggressive tourism drives are financed in part by a 2% state tax on accommodations.

Some counties and cities, notably the Miami-Fort Lauderdale and Orlando areas, are big winners in attracting tourist dollars. The other cities and regions are competing to increase their take in the tourist trade.

Much of the tourist action is centered in the Orlando area where popular attractions such as Sea World and Disney's Epcot Center and Magic Kingdom are located. More than 10 million visitors passed through Orlando last year, says Bill Peeper, executive director, Orlando/Orange Convention and Visitors Bureau. Orlando will have 60,000 hotel rooms at the end of 1987, up from 40,000 in 1984.

Although Disney has an estimated $17 million promotions budget, the bureau has a mere $500,000, most of which goes toward salaries, Mr. Peeper says. The low budget is the result of the county's bed tax revenue having been used to build a new convention center. The bed tax goes to 3% next year, and the budget will increase to $1.7 million.

Orlando will have 60,000 hotel rooms at the end of 1987, up from 40,000 in 1984.

Broward County's Tourist Development Council has a $5.5 million budget, $2.5 million of which advertises a diversity theme. Created by BDA/BBDO, Atlanta, and placed in northern markets, Broward's four-color "Imagine That" ads stress its restaurants, sports, water activities, hotels and cultural events. Of the 3 million Broward visitors last year, several hundred thousand flocked to Fort Lauderdale and Pompano Beach during collegiate spring breaks.

Palm Beach County, which has a $3.4 million budget, is spending $1 million on a spring-

The Last Time This Much Happened In One Week

The Garden Of Eden, circa 1980, by Erasure S. Field

The growth that begot Florida begets some wonderful things in Orlando. In a jiffy.

Consider that in a week's time, this market creates 475 new jobs, hosts 192,000 visitors, welcomes 560 new residents, earns $172 million and spends $109 million on retail purchases. And, of course, The Orlando Sentinel distributes 1,745,403 newspapers — which are read by nine out of 10 metro area adults.

Which, when you think about it, is not bad for seven days' work.

Tourism shifts strategy

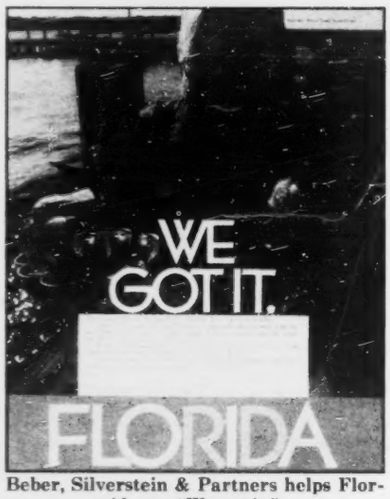
dar of events will draw some tourists who might want to avoid the crowd at New York's Statue of Liberty unveiling. "We're listing 25 July Fourth events," Mr. Welti says. "That's our counter to July Fourth in New York."

Although this will be a good year for New York tourism, says Vivian Deuschl, spokeswoman for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration in Washington, prospective Florida and New York tourists are not in the same economic bracket. "Families will head to Florida this summer because a hotel room that might have been unaffordable in winter is reasonable in summer," she says.

It is too soon to tell if Florida's summer campaign will be a success, Ms. Deuschl says. "You can't overestimate the fact that people think Florida is hot in summer. And in summer, people don't want to go someplace that is hotter than where they are. They want to get away from it—to Alaska for example."

In addition to advertising, the tourist division takes part in trade shows, serves free orange juice at six of seven welcome centers, educates the state's hotel and restaurant personnel on the value of service, finances research and staffs foreign offices in London, Toronto and Frankfurt.



Beber, Silverstein & Partners helps Florida say "We got it."

Florida competes with Sunbelt states, including California and Texas, during the winter, and Colorado, Canada and northern states in summer, Mr. Welti says. Despite the fact Florida does not spend as much as other states—Illinois spends $15.5 million and Michigan allocates $11.8 million to Florida's $9.3 million—the southern state is better known as a tourist destination.

"Florida has the strongest tourism image of any state because they've been promoting it longer," Ms. Deuschl says. "For years, states like Illinois didn't have big tourism budgets. Florida has a big advantage in that people know it as a resort, where a state like Illinois has to work harder."

Until two years ago, she says, California had nearly the lowest state tourism budget. "Now California spends over $6 million. They saw they were losing their share of the market.

"States have looked at tourism as a new source of revenue in view of declining industries," she says. "They are starting to realize that every dollar spent on tourism rolls over 18 times in other areas." U.S. tourism officials say all states combined will spend $216 million on tourism in 1985-86, up 13% from 1984-85.

Mr. Welti says Florida tourism should grow another 7% this year. Some of the factors mirror Mr. Flagler's railroad, continuing improvements in transportation. Others are beyond any tourism director's control.

"It sounds like it's going to be a banner year because there is strong consumer confidence in travel, discretionary income, and fuel and air prices are competitive," he says. "There's also a trend to travel in America because of the weak dollar and terrorism abroad. Consumers are looking at safety as part of travel, and Florida is perceived as a safe destination." AA

Saatchi, Omnicom losses mount

An Advertising Age roundup

The newly created mega-agencies lost nearly $200 million in billings last week as RJR Nabisco and Warner-Lambert Co. joined the growing ranks of advertisers that strictly enforce conflict policies.

Saatchi & Saatchi/Ted Bates Worldwide and the three agencies combining to form the proposed Omnicom Group—BBDO International, Doyle Dane Bernbach and Needham Harper Worldwide—have now lost $550 million in accounts since their mergers in April and May (see chart at right).

The moves from Saatchi, Bates and the Omnicom shops clearly indicate advertisers are reasserting authority over their agencies, serving notice they not only are unwilling to bend the rules as much as the agencies had hoped, but will not let old relationships deter them from sticking to their policies.

In last week's display of hard-ball tactics:

- W-L terminated its 30-year relationship with Bates in the U.S., assigning $68 million in drug and gum advertising to Young & Rubicam, New York, and J. Walter Thompson USA, New York. W-L said the decision on whether to remain with Bates overseas would be left up to

Client splits force shops to pare staff

By BRIAN MORAN

New York—The sluggish national advertising market and a dramatic flurry of client defections—some attributable to megamerger fallout—are prompting units of the major agency networks to trim staff.

Doyle Dane Bernbach this week is expected to make the first in a series of layoffs that could affect up to 200 employes even before DDB's planned combination with BBDO International and Needham Harper Worldwide, to form Omnicom Group, is complete.

Details of the layoffs were being worked out late last week, a DDB spokesman said.

The cuts would come on the heels of the agency's loss of about $32 million in RJR Nabisco billings and the impending departure of $30 million in business from IBM Corp. (AA, June 23). DDB this year also resigned its Kool cigaret business from Brown & Williamson.

The DDB cuts also are an element in the anticipated elimination of redundant positions at DDB and Needham when the completed Omnicom deal creates a combined agency to be known as DDB Needham Worldwide.

Needham says it has made no merger-related cutbacks yet, though the agency has not replaced 16 employes laid off after losing the Xerox account to Ted Bates Advertising here. BBDO says it has made no layoffs.

DFS-Dorland Worldwide, a unit of No. 1 megashop Saatchi & Saatchi, has dismissed close to 100 employes this year. A DFS spokeswoman attributed the reductions to "cutbacks in advertising spending across the board and general economic softening." DFS joined the Saatchi empire earlier this year (AA, March 3).

Last week, merger account fallout saw Ted Bates, another Saatchi shop, lose $68 million in Warner-Lambert business on top of a $100 million Colgate-Palmolive account loss in May. Bates subsidiary William Esty Co. yielded $96 million in RJR Nabisco billings. When SSC&B, an Interpublic Group of Cos. agency, trimmed 40 employes earlier this year, ceo Larry Lamattina cited clients' cautious spending and "flat budgets."

U.S. ad spending so far this year has fallen short of forecasts due to "continued sluggishness in the economy and a much lower than expected inflation rate," according to McCann-Erickson's semi-annual outlook (see story, Page 6).#

'Cosby' smashes upfront records

By VERNE GAY

New York—"The Cosby Show" has broken all network series pricing records by commanding $350,000 to $400,000 for 30 seconds in the 1986-87 network upfront market, up more than 40% per spot over last season's rates.

"Cosby" now becomes the highest-price series ever, with a per-unit cost second only to the last two Super Bowls. Next season the show should deliver to NBC at least $1 million per episode more than last season, when its price almost tripled to $247,000 per :30.

The "Cosby" figures were only the cream of the good news last week at NBC, whose control of the network tv upfront market is even greater than last year.

The No. 1 rated network is expected to close $1.3 billion in upfront business, much of it by July 4, the traditional starting date for upfront deal-making. NBC's total upfront sales would be 30% higher than last year.

That would leave CBS and ABC slugging it out for the remaining $900 million to $1.1 billion expected to be spent upfront this year—or about 41% less than the two networks split last year.

Total upfront spending this year is expected to be $2.2 billion, according to ad agencies, down 12% from last year. However, ABC expects upfront to total $2.45 billion this year, down 4% from last year.

The situation could force ABC and CBS to cut back pricing, though both networks are still trying to tag onto the NBC juggernaut.

No network has ever lowered prime time cost-per-thousand prices from the previous year. But all three networks this year dropped prices about 10% for 1986-87 daytime upfront buys.

Merger fallout prompts layoffs 1

The sluggish national advertising market and a dramatic flurry of client defections—some attributable to megamerger fallout—are prompting units of the major agency networks to trim staff. Doyle Dane Bernbach this week is expected to make the first in a series of layoffs that could affect up to 200 employes.

"Cosby" hits jackpot 1

"The Cosby Show" has broken all network series pricing records by commanding $350,000 to $400,000 for 30 seconds in the 1986-87 network upfront market, up more than 40% per spot over last season's rates.

BA books a winner 3

British Airways bookings have rebounded dramatically in the month following the debut of its "Go for it" U.S. promotion and contests. Net bookings are now coming in at a rate of 64,000 a week. In contrast, bookings plunged to a net loss of 27,000 in the week following the April 14 U.S. raid on Libya.

P&G tries whitener 4

While most of the new-product activity in the $1 billion dentifrice category centers on plaque and tartar-control toothpastes, Procter & Gamble is promoting its restaged Gleem as a teeth whitener. P&G has repackaged Gleem in a metallic-gold box with bright blue-and-orange lettering that now is being shipped to retail outlets. P&G hopes that will steal some of the thunder from Colgate-Palmolive Co.'s expected introduction this summer of a tartar-control formula.

Ad spending slow here 6

U.S. ad spending is faring a bit worse than had been predicted last year, but overseas ad spending is doing considerably better. "Continued sluggishness in the U.S. economy and a much lower than expected inflation rate" led Robert Coen, senior vp-director of forecasting at McCann-Erickson, New York, to paint a bit more pessimistic picture for U.S. spending.

History in the making 24

First, there was the U.S. Bicentennial in 1976, then the upcoming Statue of Liberty centennial. Next up, and the subject of marketing and media plans, is 1987's 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution. The Big 3 tv networks are among the first to jump on this next big event in U.S. history, and several other broadcasters and syndicators are boarding the bandwagon, too.

Honda simply makes it 58

American Honda Motor Co. expects its North American car sales to soar to 1 million units by 1990, but that's not all it expects. Honda's automotive car plans for the U.S. and Canada have many cards yet to be played. Among them: Rolling out the new upscale Acura division; broadening Acura's model lineup, and turning subsidiary Honda of America Manufacturing's local-assembly toehold into a complete manufacturing operation.

Edler in charge 60

When Richard Edler, former local chief of Doyle Dane Bernbach, takes over at McCann-Erickson in Los Angeles July 7, he'll inherit a shop with sagging morale, sliding profits and the distractions of a managerial merry-go-round. Known as a conciliator and low-key manager, Mr. Edler seems undaunted.

B/PAA gets creative message 69

Business-to-business advertisers attending the Business/Professional Advertising Assn.'s 64th annual conference were urged to embrace strong creative concepts to make product advertising stand out. "Good ads are directly related to a good concept, not to company logos, tag lines or design of the ad itself," said Don Just, president of Martin Agency, Richmond, Va.

Gleem's in P&G's eye

By LAURIE FREEMAN

While most of the new-product activity in the $1 billion dentifrice category centers on plaque and tartar-control toothpastes, Procter & Gamble is promoting its restaged Gleem as a teeth whitener.

Cincinnati-based P&G has repackaged Gleem in a metallic-gold box with bright blue and orange lettering that now is being shipped to retail outlets. New network tv advertising from Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, breaks in August (AA, June 23). P&G hopes that will steal some of the thunder from Colgate-Palmolive Co.'s expected introduction this summer of a tartar-control formula of its Colgate brand.

Although the estimated $7 million P&G will spend on Gleem ads pales in comparison to its estimated $35 million-to-$50 million budget for Crest Tartar-Control Formula, P&G is confident the campaign will "reaffirm Gleem's whitening superiority," said a spokeswoman.

Among whitener brands, Gleem, with a 2% share, competes with Lever Bros.' Close-up, which holds a 7% share, and Colgate's Ultra Brite, which hovers between a 1% and 2% market share. J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, is the Close-up agency; Foote, Cone & Belding, New York, handles Ultra Brite.

Powered by Crest Tartar-Control and Colgate's Dentagard, a $250 million plaque/tartar segment has been squeezed out of the $1 billion category. The new segment also includes Chaska, Minn.-based Minnetonka's Check-Up; Plax, a prebrushing rinse in the midst of an $8 million national introduction by Oral Research Laboratories, New York, and Fort Collins, Colo.-based Vipont Laboratories' Viadent toothpaste and mouth rinse.

Crest Tartar-Control leads the segment with an estimated 14.5% share, while the over-all brand has a 37.5% share.

Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, Minneapolis, is the Check-Up agency; Ally Gargano/MCA, New York, handles Plax, and McCaffery & Ratner, New York, is Viadent's agency.#

Surf aims at Tide's turf

Lever brand boosts awareness

By JULIE FRANZ

Procter & Gamble's Tide should be wary: Surf's up.

Surf, Lever Bros.' new laundry detergent, sneaked into the second position for share of advertising awareness among laundry products with 4.1% in ADVERTISING AGE's May adWatch survey.

Surf had been No. 9 in April when 1.8% of consumers surveyed named that brand's advertising first.

Surf's campaign, from Ogilvy & Mather, New York, touts the product's ability to remove not only dirt but odors from clothes. Saying it provides "two kinds of clean," ads call Surf "the new detergent that removes the dirt you can see and the dirt you smell."

Lever said research conducted before the Surf introduction showed that one-third of consumers complained that their current detergent didn't fully remove odors (AA, Oct. 25, '84).

The adWatch survey measures share of first mentions for advertising of different brands in various product categories. Although a change of 2.8 percentage points or more is considered statistically significant—and Surf was up only 2.3 points—its score is still an amazing feat because it has just begun moving into national distribution. Most of Surf's advertising awareness comes from just one of the four regions adWatch tallies.

Introducing SURF: The new detergent that removes the dirt you see and the dirt you smell.
Surf
New Surf removes dirt and odors for two kinds of clean.

Advertising for Lever Bros.' Surf laundry detergent shot into second place in top-of-mind awareness among consumers surveyed in ADVERTISING AGE's monthly adWatch survey.

Surf grabbed half its score from the South Central region, where advertising first broke in test markets last November. Ads for Surf were named first in May by 6.6% of the consumers in that region, while P&G's Tide was named first by 26% of consumers surveyed.

Consumers in the West also began naming ads for Surf more often, with 9% to Tide's 23% of first mentions.

Tide, with its proliferating line extensions and ad themes, far and away remains the leader in top-of-mind advertising awareness in the laundry products category with 26.1% of first mentions in May. That score was unchanged from Tide's April showing. Saatchi & Saatchi Compton, New York, handles Tide.

Lever Bros.' All moved into the No. 3 spot with 3.8% of first mentions, P&G's Cheer was fourth with 2.9% and P&G's Era was fifth with 2.6% of first mentions.

AdWatch is a joint project of AD AGE and SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb. Ad awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample of consumers to name ads, in a variety of categories, that first come to mind from all seen, heard or read in the previous

NEW YORK—Two major marketing and media research subsidiaries of Time Inc. and Control Data Corp. plan to launch a new commercial monitoring service that will compete with the established service of Broadcast Advertiser Reports and with a proposed service from A.C. Nielsen Co.

The service, named MediaWatch, will track commercial activity in the top 75 markets 365 days a year, starting early in 1987. Cost details were not released.

MediaWatch will provide information about commercial daypart placement, budget levels, unit costs and whether specific commercials represented new products, the participants said. Also, MediaWatch plans to track how commercials actually affected product movement.

ScanAmerica, the joint venture between Control Data's Arbitron Ratings Co. unit and Time Inc.'s Selling Areas-Marketing Inc., will operate the service.

"MediaWatch is superior to any previous monitoring service as it will deliver more data that clearly are more precise, more timely and more flexible," said SAMI president Carlyle Daniel.

Like Nielsen's proposed Monitor-Plus service, which is also scheduled to start next year, MediaWatch will use a pattern recognition system. After a spot runs, a computer establishes a specific identification pattern for the specific ad. The next time the commercial runs, the computer "recognizes" and records it.

BAR, which has virtually monopolized commercial monitoring for years, immediately lashed the new service. "SAMI and Arbitron join a list of 10 companies that have come around in as many years. . .[These] companies have given up," said BAR president Jerry Grady. BAR relies on a manual method of recording commercial plays.

Separately, ScanAmerica said that in 1988 it would begin a national "single-source" measurement service.

"Single-source" relates product-purchase patterns with tv viewership patterns. Since 1985, ScanAmerica has collected such data on a limited basis in Denver.

ScanAmerica has used a peoplemeter device resembling the apparatus proposed by Nielsen and Audits of Great Britain. The national service will start with a sample of 5,000 households.

Some preliminary results from the Denver test revealed that, contrary to data released by Nielsen and AGB, viewing levels do not drop when a people meter replaces a diary.

Results from the ScanAmerica panel in Denver showed that households using tv are 17.1% higher when measured by a people meter than with a diary. Network affiliate ratings also were 2% higher.

With the exception of teens ages 12 to 17, the ScanAmerica people meter reported higher viewing levels than the diary in all major viewing levels.

The company attributed its results, in part, to differing "prompting" techniques between Nielsen, AGB and ScanAmerica. Nielsen and AGB have a red light on their meter boxes to remind viewers to record viewing choices; ScanAmerica's system flashes a question mark on the tv screen every 15 minutes.#

Coen sees U.S. ad spending slowdown

Cuts '86 growth outlook to 7.6%

By STEWART ALTER

NEW YORK—U.S. ad spending is faring a bit worse than had been predicted last year, but overseas ad spending is doing considerably better.

"Continued sluggishness in the U.S. economy and a much lower than expected inflation rate" led Robert Coen, senior vp-director of forecasting at McCann-Erickson, to paint a bit more pessimistic picture for U.S. spending, particularly national advertising.

Ad watchers can expect a small improvement in U.S. spending in 1987, however, while increases in international spending will slow down.

Speaking June 25 at his semi-annual Advertising/Media Outlook Seminar here, Mr. Coen, who last December had predicted 8% growth in total U.S. ad spending for 1986, lowered that to 7.6%, projecting a total expenditure of $101.9 billion.

Six months ago, he had forecast national advertising to be up 7.7%, but has now dropped that to 7% for a total of $57.1 billion. And local advertising, which he previously said would be up 8.5%, is now going to be up only 8.2% to $44.8 billion, he said.

While the McCann executive lowered his U.S. spending projections, he said that the 7.6% growth rate still was outpacing the growth of the economy and that it compares "favorably with most nominal GNP estimates that cluster around 5.5%."

In contrast, the overseas advertising picture needs no qualifiers. Mr. Coen expects overseas ad spending to rise 26.7% to $78.3 billion in 1986. And he predicted that worldwide ad expenditures in dollars would rise 15.1% to $180 billion. That's well ahead of his projection in December that the worldwide total would be up 8.2% to $172.6 billion.

But some of that overseas advertising growth comes from favorable exchange rates for the U.S. dollar.

"Ad spending in local currencies has been growing at a rate starting to approach double-digit levels in many countries and, when converted to dollars, a number of overseas ad budgets are showing gains of 25% to 35% over 1985 levels," he said.

Mr. Coen also made his first projections for 1987: U.S. spending will increase 8% to $110 billion, overseas spending will rise 15% to $90 billion and total worldwide spending will increase 11.1% to $200 billion.

That's still below the 8.3% gain

Media feast fuels growth

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

The top 100 media companies as measured by the Leading Media Companies Report of Advertising Age went to dinner in 1985 and ate each other, and if they didn't outright cannibalize the other, they picked away at the pieces.

Thirteen companies in this sixth annual report, in which media companies are ranked on the basis of their revenues from media, are either absent or newly named from the previous year, including No. 1, Capital Cities/ABC. Of the 10 new entries this year, half rose to new revenue highs through acquisition.

The business climate has been ripe for such aggressiveness: Stock typically has been undervalued, attracting megadeals with megabucks; a depressed economy has some media companies electing to take the big buyout; maintaining growth in a tight economy is difficult from within, so acquisition becomes a major recourse. Growth is needed to generate cash flow to retire the debt incurred in the buyout.

In all, among the top 100, there were 95 print transactions involving 142 properties and 113 electronic (tv, radio, cable) transactions encompassing 155 properties. The one check that has humbled the industry from calendar 1985 through the first quarter of 1986—the period covered in this report—has been a poor business climate reflected in the minimal circulation increases, at best, in the major newspapers, a virtual across-the-board decline in magazine ad pages and an abstinence from network tv of national advertisers.

This business climate is forcing media companies to become more aggressive on the sales side. The method of operation of media marketers is changing dramatically: Magazines are cutting their rate bases, launching editions to target just the cream of their subscribers and offering free pages with sizable upfront buys; cable companies are selling videocassette recorders that tape other channels as viewers watch the cable movie; the tv networks in 1985 began offering stand-alone 15-second commercials to "price-in" advertisers formerly priced-out.

Growth among the companies, too, has been affected by government regulations prohibiting crossownership of media in the same market, because acquisitive companies must spin off newly bought media units that duplicate existing properties. Growth also has come as a result of creative responses to encroachment from new forms of competition such as vcrs.

The No. 1 media company again was ABC, although it was bought out by the 16th largest company in the 1985 report, Capital Cities Communications, to become Cap Cities/ABC. The merger percolated throughout the 100 as eight companies bought up properties cast off—primarily because of FCC cross-ownership rules. The merger signaled that all media companies were vulnerable to takeover artists.

A major beneficiary of the deal was the No. 15 Washington Post Co., which expanded into cable for the first time through the acquisition of the entire 375,000-subscriber Cap Cities Cable operation.

And a major tv network to rival the Big Three was created out of Metromedia, No. 28 in the 1985 report, which dropped from the list. Rupert Murdoch's News America Publishing, No. 21, purchased Metromedia's independent tv stations and assembled them into Fox Broadcasting Co., covering 21% of households in the nation. Additionally, 18 affiliates have flocked to Fox, a showcase for the film library of Twentieth Century-Fox, which Mr. Murdoch also bought.

The News America purchase required the sale of Metromedia's WCVB-TV in Boston, purchased by Hearst Corp., and is forcing Mr. Murdoch to sell the New York Post and the Chicago Sun-Times—papers located in cities served by the former Metromedia stations. It was Metromedia's sale of Foster & Kleiser, the outdoor advertising company, to Patrick Media Group that vaulted this fledgling Scranton, Pa., company to No. 52 on the chart.

Rocky Mountain News plants an asterisk on Denver Post ABC publishers statements it finds suspect.

Gannett Co., No. 6, got what it went after in taking over the Evening News Assn., the 40th largest media company in 1984, and the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times, the jewels of the 85th largest media company in 1985, the Courier-Journal & Louisville Times Co. Gannett, with a paper seemingly in every port, spun off much of the broadcasting in both deals, with No. 10 Knight-Ridder taking the Evening News tv units and No. 57 Providence Journal Co. getting the C-J&LT's WHAS-TV in Louisville.

The largest newspaper deal to date occurred in May, 1986, when No. 5, Times Mirror Co., bought No. 49 A.S. Abell Co., owner of Baltimore's Sunpapers.

The purchase came the day after Baltimore lost its other newspaper, the News American, a failing daily closed by Hearst Corp. Only one other market could vie with Baltimore in the media trauma category—Orlando, Fla., where the three network tv affiliates were sold in 1985. H&C Communications, No. 95, now owns WESH-TV (NBC), Cox Enterprises operates WFTV (ABC), and First Media Corp. of Potomac, Md., owns WCPX-TV (CBS).

The other 1985 entries did not return to the 1986 chart because of buyout activity within the chart itself: Metromedia was pieced out; Storer Communications went to No. 19 Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co.; Cox Communications was bought by sister company, No. 13 Cox Enterprises; American Express Co. was bought out by its partner in Warner Amex Cable, No. 35 Warner Communications. Family Media lost its big revenue generator, Ladies' Home Journal, to No. 32 Meredith Corp.; SFN Cos. sold WFTV, its major tv station in Orlando, to Cox Enterprises, and MTV Networks was swallowed by No. 29 Viacom International.

The buyouts have sent corporate directors scurrying for cover under an antitakeover umbrella bearing a litany of measures—all stockholders must get the same deal if a buyout should occur; additional stock is issued to dilute holdings of greenmailers and raise the value of the stock; the number of directors and the percentage required for approval of a buyout is increased, the big stock accumulators are bought off, and valuable media subsidiaries are even sold to add stability to undervalued stock—a sure sign of a pending corporate takeover.

The latter measure resulted in the divestiture by Westinghouse Corp. of Group W Cable. Despite the fact that Group W contributed handsomely to Westinghouse's 95% growth in operating income in 1985, Westinghouse sold it to a consortium led by No. 22 Tele-Communications Inc. and No. 3 Time Inc. (American Television & Communications Corp.) for $2.1 billion, using the proceeds to buy back 25 million of its shares outstanding. This will put more stock under the company's direct control and prop up its perceived value.

The private companies, which might not appear vulnerable to corporate vultures, were not free of takeover attempts. The Courier-Journal & Louisville Times Co. broke up when Bingham family members began squabbling over the direction of the company. Dissident family shareholders of the closely held No. 42 Pulitzer Publishing Co. were enticed by an offer for their stock from a nonfamily member. But a counteroffer from the entrenched side of the family actually running the company apparently has won out. Heirs of R.C. Hoiles are battling for control or dissolution of Freedom Newspapers, No. 37.

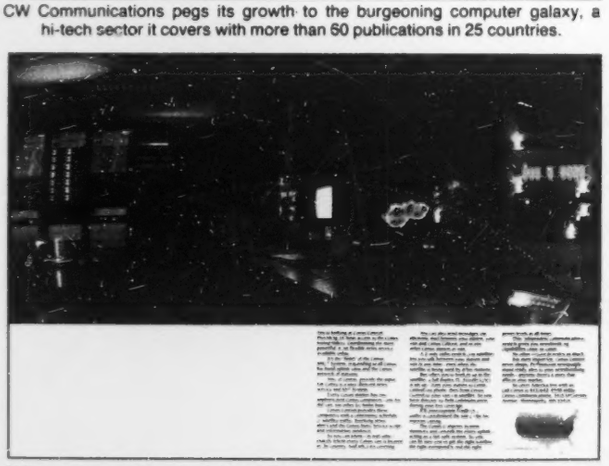
The bottom lines of these defenders-of-the-takeover suffered under the added financial burden often involved in mounting defensive tactics. Multimedia, No. 33, recapitalized by borrowing $625 million and issuing $480 million in debentures as its solution to putting off Jack Kent Cooke, Wesray Capital Corp. and Lorimar Productions (now Lorimar-Telepictures), all of which made bids for the company. Currency used by Affiliated, No. 31, in buying back 727,000 shares and paying for acquisitions in cellular telephones, will be proceeds from the sale this year of its nine radio stations, a divestiture of an entire media division.

Aside from the impact on earnings of the debt from buyouts, media companies labored under pressures caused by a weak economy in most parts of the country. Media operating in Houston found out what happens when the oil and real estate industries, the city's economic mainstays, go bust. No. 58 Houston Chronicle Publishing Co. and No. 45 Maclean Hunter Ltd., operators of the Houston Chronicle and Houston Post, respectively, reported negligible economic movement as did the radio division of No. 70 LIN Broadcasting (KILT am, fm) and the tv side of No. 27 A.H. Belo Corp. (KHOU).

The networks particularly suffered in the national economic slowdown.

Naegele Outdoor helped Morris Communications, its new parent as of midyear, 1985, make a bigger splash on Advertising Age's top 100 media companies chart.

CW Communications pegs its growth to the burgeoning computer galaxy, a hi-tech sector it covers with more than 60 publications in 25 countries.



Aiding news coverage is Hubbard Broadcasting's Conus Control, the conduit between specially equipped news vans, satellites and Conus network stations.

Reader's Digest Assn.'s anti-alcohol poster commissioned by Fallon McElligott went out to 16,000 high schools.

Aggregate revenues of $8.31 billion from the three networks in 1985 was down 3% from the previous year, the first such drop since 1971 when cigaret advertising was taken off the air.

The CBS Broadcast Group's operating profit dropped 12% on a 2% decline in revenues. ABC's net income fell 19% on a 10% decline in revenues—the year-to-year movement particularly affected by strong gains from the Olympics in 1984.

Only NBC showed strength, its operating income rose 53.8% on a 12% growth in revenues—results that came largely because of its strong programming that overtook CBS in prime-time ratings. It also has remained relatively strong during the prolonged sales drought that has continued into the first and second quarters of this year.

The networks have opted for the 15-second stand-alone commercial quicker than expected because of the economy. Further pressure for the tv ad dollar will come from the big "subnets"—News America's Fox Broadcasting Co., covering an estimated 21% of U.S. households through its owned and operated independent stations and not including 18 recently signed affiliates, and No. 9 Tribune Co., covering 18.6% of U.S. households.

The financial performance of the magazine sector at the New York Times Co. was typical of the magazine business in 1985. Its magazine sector suffered from a softness in national advertising and an industrywide falloff in single-copy and some subscription sales. The group posted a 2.5% decline in ad pages from 1984 and a 3.1% circulation decline. Higher rates helped push up revenues and operating income, however.

New York Times Magazine led all magazines in ad pages with 4,360, yet that was down 7.5% from the previous year, causing a decline of 1.3% in revenue from that publication. In the aggregate, ad revenues in the magazine industry in 1985 rose just 4% over-all.

Hearst Corp.'s Good Housekeeping led the women's service pack with 2,032 ad pages, but registered only a 1% gain in pages. Ad pages were off 0.9% at Redbook, 6.9% at Woman's Day, 9.1% at Better Homes & Gardens and 3.1% at McCall's during 1985, according to Publishers Information Bureau. BH&G and Redbook were the only women's service publications to gain in single-copy sales—by 12.1% and 20.1%—for the monitoring period through mid-1985.

Diversification, new editions geared to a segmented portion of subscribers, rate base cutting and discounting of the rate card have captured the industry during this period.

McGraw-Hill, No. 16, which registered a 2.2% increase in net income and 6.4% growth in revenue, rapidly is diversifying into electronic publishing, a sector already rewarding No. 8 Dun & Bradstreet, which had a 22.9% increase in media revenues.

McCall's cut its rate base from 6.2 million to 5 million, reducing its ad rates by 13.6% in 1985 to keep pace in the highly competitive women's service sector, which in addition to the economy has felt the brunt of a refocusing of several R.J. Reynolds cigaret brands. National Geographic dropped its rate base to 8.2 million from 8.4 million and raised its color page rate by 6.4% in late 1985, a year in which the publication had an 0.2% increase in ad pages. The publication, which edged its rate base back up to 8.25 million in 1986, has lost its vitality.

In the men's entertainment segment, both Playboy from Playboy Enterprises, No. 65, and Penthouse and Forum from Penthouse International, No. 78, have been reeling under publicity from the Justice Department's commission on pornography and its influence on convenience store companies, including Southland Corp., some of which have banned the sale of the publications. Both publishers have sued the Justice Department.

Meanwhile, Playboy lost 4.9% in newsstand sales in 1985 as its ad pages dropped 2.6% on a growth of 5% in revenue. In the first six months of 1986, ad pages are off 11%. Playboy expanded its metropolitan editions from three to 13 cities to allow smaller advertisers to afford the magazine, which has a $60,000 national page rate.

The Dallas Morning News brews another "taster's choice" ad against rival, the Dallas Times Herald.

In a more general category, No. 56 Reader's Digest Assn. cut ad rates 3.8% and circulation rate base 8.4% to 16.25 million on Jan. 1 for the Reader's Digest to build back advertising. Ad revenue at the publication dropped 1.1% in 1985 on 0.4% fewer ad pages. With the restructured rate base, Reader's Digest gained 45 pages in the first quarter of 1986, the highest first quarter in the past five years.

Economic performance in the newspaper industry generally was geographically-related, with Florida, the Southwest and Far West showing success, with those in the Midwest and East returning flat performances.

While circulation dropped 0.2% for No. 9 Tribune Co.'s Chicago Tribune and 8.3% for its New York Daily News, Florida contributed the most to corporate growth. The Orlando Sentinel's circulation grew 7.6% to 263,865, and circulation at the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel, increased 22% to 155,197.

The industry wrote obituaries for Hearst's News American in Baltimore, No. 26 Oklahoma Publishing Co.'s Colorado Springs Sun and No. 18 Scripps Howard's Columbus (O.) Citizen-Journal, which was folded when the joint operating agreement with the Columbus Dispatch, owned by No. 72 Dispatch Printing Co., was terminated the first of this year and a buyer could not be found. A JOA is being sought in Detroit by No. 10 Knight-Ridder's Detroit Free-Press and Gannett's newly bought Detroit News. Gannett and Scripps Howard also retooled existing JOAs in Knoxville and El Paso.

The newspaper market also saw a host of papers shift to morning from evening publication, including No. 42 Pulitzer Publishing Co.'s St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Scripps Howard's Knoxville News-Sentinel and No. 62 Lee Enterprises' Southern Illinoisan.

Cable companies have been forced to be an innovative media sector, because of heavy capitalization that runs up debt, fulfilling pie-in-the-sky concessions wrung out of them by franchisee cities, which they willingly accepted to get the contract, and the emergence of the vcr.

Cable industry leader, No. 22 Tele-Communications Inc., capsuled the kind of creative action taking place in the business. TCI plans local origination "super" channels in remote areas of the country where a station can cover a multistate area. Sports, movies and syndicated shows would be the fare in these areas.

TCI signed an agreement with C.O.M.B. Co., a mail order house, to create a cable tv-based merchandising service. The service allows subscribers to shop at home. Tiring of the inroads made by the vcr, TCI joined the vcr revolution by offering 24,000 vcr units at cost to subscribers in an attempt to make cable "friendlier" to vcr owners and encourage the building of film libraries. To further combat vcr competition, TCI and No. 67 United Cable Television Corp. among others are moving quickly into pay per view.

United launched a "First View Theater" package in which the customer gets movies before the movies are aired by premium cable services. Advertising, still relatively untapped as a revenue generator among multiple system operators, increasingly is propping up the bottom line. TeleCable Corp., No. 82, launched its TeleCable Targeting ad program in five markets and raised $4.5 million in ad revenues—hiking the ad revenue per subscriber from $5.50 a year to $10.26 in the test systems, well above the industry average of $7.20 per subscriber per year.

Cable companies, involved heavily in acquisitions since their inception, were themselves subject to ownership changes. Group W Cable, the third largest cable system, was sold to a consortium led by TCI and Time Inc.'s ATC, and Time Inc. is selling 20% of ATC in a public offering to raise cash to buy back stock. Warner Communications, No. 35, bought out its half-partner, American Express Co. in Warner Amex, the sixth largest cable system, and sold its share in MTV Networks to No. 29 Viacom International to help pay for the deal.

Chatty New Yorker ads helped rejuvenate circulation 1.1% in 1985, but ad pages continue to decline.

Outdoor companies, much like magazines, are feeling the slowdown in cigaret advertising, which has fallen from 43% of total outdoor advertising in 1980 to 31% in 1985. Alcoholic beverages have taken a similar dive, from 19% to 11% in the same period.

Winston Network, No. 92, is expanding its outdoor capabilities by developing telephone poster coverage in New York, and expanding its eight-sheet poster business to reach market segments in urban areas where zoning laws make it difficult to put up the big 30-sheet boards. Winston is going after package goods, retail and healthcare categories.#

Top 100's media revenues of $52.7 billion grew 9.5% in 1985 in outpacing the group's aggregate growth in sales of 3.8% to $84.2 billion. Print carved the largest media pie in accounting for 54.7% of total media revenues.

The newspaper market in Baltimore turned topsy-turvy in late May, 1986, as Times Mirror Corp. agreed to buy A.S. Abell Co. the day after Hearst Corp. folded Abell's only competition in the city, the Baltimore News-American.

The acquisition for a reported $600 million in cash is for all Abell properties, which include the Baltimore Sun and Evening Sun, the NBC-affiliate WMAR-TV in Baltimore, the independent WRLH-TV in Richmond, Va., and the company's regional magazine ventures.

The purchase price for the daily, evening and Sunday newspapers is expected to run about $450 million of the total, the largest price for a newspaper to date. The previous record was the Louisville Times & Courier Journal, sold to Gannett Co. two weeks earlier for $300 million.

The Hearst closure of the financially troubled News-American the day before the announced purchase by Times Mirror, already assured the Sunpapers of continued market dominance. With that closure, the Sunpapers will pick up considerably more circulation as well as ad revenues.

The 213-year-old News-American had 10 successive years of circulation declines, and had dropped from a daily circulation of 200,000 in 1984 to approximately 110,000 at the time of closure. Its Sunday paper fell from 290,000 to 140,000 during the same period. It had been losing from $500,000 to $1,000,000 a month over the past few years, according to media analyst, John Morton of Lynch, Jones & Ryan, Washington.

During 1985, the Sunpapers had a strong 3.2% increase in the circulation of the Sunday Sun, restructured its broadcast side, including the acquisition of a uhf tv station, and pulled in two more Pulitzer Prizes.

Abell, whose media revenues climbed 20.5% from 1984 to 1985 ranking the company the 49th largest media company, nonetheless faced declining circulation in its Evening Sun, reflecting a now mature national trend. Los Angeles-based Times Mirror reportedly has no plans to fold the evening into the morning paper. The two have separate staffs but share the same facilities.

Abell reports revenues of $180 million in 1985 generated by A.S. Abell Publishing Co., which operates Baltimore Sunpapers, Mid-Atlantic Country magazine, Ski Racing, Ski Racing International, New England Skiers Guide and a ski tabloid newspaper. This represents a 30% increase in revenues over 1984 totals, and breaks out as $177.7 million in revenue at the newspapers and $2.3 million for magazines.

The Baltimore Sunpapers came on strong in 1985, in both circulation and advertising growth. Publishing's president and publisher, Reg Murphy, says Sunpapers carried 86% of full-run advertising linage in the Baltimore market in 1985, up from 82% in 1984. The advertising increase represented overall growth of categories, led by the daily and Sunday classifieds, Mr. Murphy says.

"We have succeeded by selling Baltimore as a marketplace. Advertisers are beginning to respond to that. We have had to convince them that Baltimore is big on its own. It's not affiliated with any other market," Mr. Murphy says.

In the circulation arena, Sunpapers showed dramatic increases, with the Sunday Sun circulation coming in at 427,785, according to ABC Fas-Fax for March 31, 1986, up from 414,330 in the same period in 1985.

The Morning Sun had circulation of 204,774, according to ABC, up from 194,426, with the Evening Sun dropping to 152,153 from 155,475. The Saturday Sun has climbed to 339,066 from 332,478 the year earlier.

Mr. Murphy links some of the circulation success of the Sunday Sun with the increased popularity of four zoned tabloid editions carried as part of the Sunday paper in outlying Carroll, Harford, Howard and Anne Arundel counties.

"Much of our growth is coming from the suburban areas surrounding Baltimore," Mr. Murphy says. In the first quarter of 1986, he says, advertising volume in these zoned editions was 22% ahead of 1985 figures.

During 1985, the Sunpapers were awarded two Pulitzer Prizes, the 11th and 12th in the paper's history. Graphics and editorial color were enhanced, as sections were redesigned.

"I think it has happened because we have made a much stronger distinction between the two papers. The Morning Sun is a stronger national newspaper, while the Evening Sun is more of a local product. In this market place, the differentiation was important," he says.

Since 1982, A.S. Abell Publishing has been pursuing growth through acquisition in the area of specialized publications such as Mid-Atlantic Country and Abell's stable of ski publications. "There are lots of niches that are not being filled by other publications," Mr. Murphy says. "We see some opportunities for growth in areas that have been overlooked." He notes the company is investigating other publishing acquisition opportunities.

The end of 198., was marked by changes at Mid-Atlantic Country. Effective with the January, 1986, issue, the name of the magazine was changed from Country and leadership of the magazine changed hands. Walter Nicklin, founder and former editor and publisher, left the magazine. He was replaced by Patricia McCarthy, general manager, and Jim Scott, editor.

"The name change clarifies our regional identity," Ms. McCarthy says. "We try to achieve the dual goal of serving the unique travel and life-style needs of people from Pennsylvania south to North Carolina." She says there has been some change in editorial direction, reflecting reader's strong interest in home and life-style sections of the magazine.

Through 1985, ad revenues were up 44% from 1984 to $1.1 million. Ad pages were up 11.4% to 558. In 1985, ad revenues were 53% of total revenues of $2.1 million.

The magazine offered a 100,000 rate base in 1985 and had a yearend circulation of 100,395, according to ABC reports. Circulation growth was aided by a yearend mail drop campaign.

Into 1986, Ms. McCarthy sees continued advertising growth, particularly in the home, furnishings and distinctive real estate categories. "We are bringing in more full-page advertisers, and more full-page color ads," she says.

During 1985, Abell's ski publishing group purchased New England Skiers Guide. From Poultney, Vt., the group publishes Ski Racing, Ski Racing International, a glossy annual directory of ski racing competitors, and Ski Show Daily, circulated during the March Ski trade show in Las Vegas.

In 1985, Abell Communications completed a major restructuring that began in 1984 with the sale of its six radio stations. As part of that transaction, on June 1, 1985, Abell acquired WRLH-TV, in Richmond, Va., from TVX Broadcasting Group of Virginia Beach.

According to Arnold Kleiner, president of Abell Communications, WRLH-TV, a uhf station, is the No. 1 independent station in the market. Richmond ranks as the 55th media market in areas of dominant influence as measured by Arbitron Ratings Co.

Abell Communications also owns and operates WMAR-TV, the ABC affiliate in Baltimore, the 21st ADI. Revenues at the station were enhanced by NBC's ratings surge in 1985, says Abell. The station also continued to carry away games of the Baltimore Orioles. WMAR-TV's "grandfathered status" that permits joint ownership between the stations and newspapers cannot be transferred under new ownership, so Times Mirror will either have to trade or sell the station.

Prior to Times Mirror, Abell has been owned by heirs of Arunah Shepherdson Abell, founder of the paper in 1837, and several other families who have bought into the papers over the years. The largest block of stock was held by the Abell Foundation.

Ackerley Communications, one of the nation's largest out-of-home media companies, is eyeing broadcast stations for acquisitions as it completes the purchase of its fourth tv station since 1983, and it remains interested in newspaper properties despite two aborted attempts to move into print in the past 18 months.

The Seattle-based company, whose media revenues increased 15.2% for the year, expects a similar 15% growth in over-all sales for 1986, according to Barry A. Ackerley, president, ceo, cfo.

The nation's 93rd largest media company derived 73% of its 1985 media revenues from outdoor and airport board operations and 27% from broadcast. The company generated $8.1 million in revenue from its Seattle SuperSonics National Basketball Assn. franchise. The basketball team, acquired in 1984, has never made money for Ackerley.

Since 1983, Ackerley has spent $95.8 million to acquire four of its current five tv stations, the latest a $13.1 million purchase of KCBA-TV in Salinas, Cal., its three radio stations and the Sonics. KCBA-TV is a Spanish-language station with four affiliated low-power tv stations from Santa Barbara to Monterey Bay, an audience equal to an ADI ranking in the top 50 markets. Ackerley also has a tv property in Bakersfield. It is reported Ackerley wants to convert the Salinas station, hooked up to the SIN Network, to English-language.

In 1985, the company completed the purchase of KVOS-TV in Bellingham, Wash., for $27.1 million, acquired from WBC Broadcasting Corp., a spin-off of Miami-based Wometco Broadcasting, and rock radio stations KSGO in Oregon City and KGON (fm) in Portland, Ore., for $6.75 million, acquired from the Des Moines Register & Tribune Co. Ackerley filed March 31 with the FCC for approval of its purchase of KCBA-TV from Sainte Broadcasting Co., Modesto, Cal.

Ackerley has purchased the rights for KSGO to broadcast University of Oregon football and basketball games starting this fall, "which we think will be very helpful" in the ratings of the solid-gold-format station, Mr. Ackerley says.

Four of the company's five tv stations are in fast-growing western markets: Colorado Springs, Colo.; Bakersfield and Salinas, Cal., and Bellevue, Wash. After spending millions updating equipment, all five have the top-rated local news and locally originated programing in their markets, according to Mr. Ackerley.

Ackerley finances its expansion through long-term debt, a strategy Mr. Ackerley says will continue. The company's debt at the end of 1985 stood at $132 million, compared with $97.5 million at the end of 1984. Although its revenues have grown rapidly, Ackerley's bottom line continues to droop. Ackerley sustained a net loss of $8.87 million in 1985, compared with losses

Mediamerge Communications answered a questionnaire sent to the company by Ad Age in early February. If the editors had not heard from Mediamerge by late March, the company was telephoned for a response.

The company is headquartered in Media, Pa.

The company is ranked seventh in the U.S. by revenues from media properties only. Ad Age's definition of media is explained on Page S-6.

Media revenues, total revenues and net income were obtained from company annual reports and financial statements wherever possible.

Sales by media are estimated by Ad Age with the help of company sources. Publicly held companies' sales by media also are estimated in many cases.

Ad Age bases annual company profiles on interviews with company executives.

of $7.3 million in 1984 and $769,000 in 1983.

Mr. Ackerley brushes off the year's losses and insists profits are not the true measure of his company's performance. "We're a cash flow company," he says. "We're like a cable system . . . our liquidity is good." The company's cash flow from operations hit $25.6 million in 1985, up from $24 million in 1984 and $22.3 million in 1983. Cash flow is revenue less commissions, discounts and operating expenses. The losses result largely from non-cash expenses such as amortization and depreciation.

By Mr. Ackerley's measure, the company has done well: Since 1983, gross revenues have increased 42%; net revenues have grown 43%. Continuing into 1986, Ackerley will add in the first full year of revenues from KVOS-TV and KSGO and KGON (fm), and add partial-year revenue from KCBA-TV.

Ackerley's diversification strategy targets companies that complement its advertising presence in major metropolitan markets. The $20 million acquisition of the SuperSonics, for example, ties in with Ackerley's outdoor boards, airport displays, and radio and tv stations in the Seattle area.

However, two attempts by Ackerley in the past 18 months to acquire newspapers have not been successful.

In 1985, Ackerley's $156.5 million bid to acquire the assets of the Des Moines Register & Tribune Co. fell short of Gannett's bid of $200 million. Although Gannett took the newspaper, Ackerley succeeded in picking up the two Portland-area radio stations.

Earlier this year, Ackerley dropped out of the bidding for the newspaper, radio and cable tv assets of the Tribune Publishing Co. of Tacoma, Wash., publisher of the 108,000-circulation Tacoma News-Tribune. McClatchy Newspapers of Sacramento and Viacom International Inc. of New York acquired the assets for a reported $205 million.

Mr. Ackerley says he still wants to buy a newspaper in the right market and at the right price, but considers broadcast a higher priority. "We have a lot of room to grow in the tv area," he says.

Mr. Ackerley, a former advertising salesman for Better Homes & Gardens magazine, began building his company in California, where he and some partners purchased outdoor board companies, later selling to Gannett. He moved to Seattle in 1975 and bought the Foster & Kleiser area unit from Metromedia and Obie Outdoor Advertising of Eugene, Ore. In 1976, Ackerley Communications moved into south Florida and two years later into the Boston area. The company moved into airport advertising in 1980.

Ackerley Communications is the nation's third largest outdoor advertising company, with about 11,100 signs concentrated in Seattle/Tacoma, Wash.; Portland/Salem, Ore.; Miami/Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and Boston/Worcester, Mass.

Prospects for growth through acquisition in the outdoor business are limited because there are few, if any, board companies for sale that concentrate in the top 25 ADIs. During 1985, Ackerley acquired a net of just 100 new signs. In 1985 Ackerley became a member of Outdoor Network/USA, a Gannett outdoor-buying service. As a member it pays an undisclosed commission to ON/USA for outdoor advertising arranged by the Gannett affiliate.

Although Ackerley Communications generally avoids publicity, Mr. Ackerley recently has been in an acrimonious battle with Seattle officials over changes in the Sonics' lease for the Seattle Center Coliseum, where the Sonics play home games.

Mr. Ackerley has requested the city provide 4,500 parking spaces, with revenue to go to the Sonics; give three years of free rent; share concession sales and allow the Sonics joint management of the coliseum. Without the concessions, Mr. Ackerley says he would like to build a new arena on city-donated land or build an arena outside Seattle. Ackerley could buy out of the remaining nine years of the lease for $3.1 million.

Mr. Ackerley says the lease concessions in addition to an improved win-loss ratio would make the team profitable. The Sonics had an operating loss of $1.3 million in 1985 and a loss of $793,000 in 1984.

Seattle Mayor Charles Royer labeled Mr. Ackerley's demands "extortion," and as of late June the city and team owner had not resolved their differences.

Ackerley Communications has an unusual ownership structure. The company in 1980 issued $20 million worth of junk bonds through Drexel Burnham Lambert to which were attached warrants convertible into common stock. A year ago it issued common stock in exchange for the warrants. Mr. Ackerley personally owns 90.3% of the common stock outstanding that has voting rights; the balance of the voting common is owned by about 40 individuals and corporations. Trading in the voting common, handled by Kidder Peabody, the investment banking company, occurs infrequently.

First Chicago Investment Corp., an affiliate of First of Chicago, owns 100% of an issue of non-voting common stock and four series of preferred stock.

Parade, which showed a 23% gain in circulation and 26.1% gain in ad revenues in 1985—not all its own doing—and The New Yorker, which became part of Advance Publications' growing media properties, were major forces that pushed revenues up about 6.8% for the year.

New York-based Advance, the privately held company owned by the family of the late Samuel I. Newhouse, is the nation's seventh largest media company with 1985 media revenues estimated at $2.03 billion.

Advance, controlled by Mr. Newhouse's two sons, S.I. Newhouse Jr. and Donald Newhouse, does not release financial data on the company. However, growth estimates were made by applying those of the newspaper industry in general to the company's 1984 revenues based on an analysis by John Morton, newspaper industry analyst for Lynch, Jones & Ryan, Washington. Newspaper operations contribute the majority of Advance's revenues.

Storm clouds continued to hang over the Newhouse empire in 1985. The Internal Revenue Service is seeking estate taxes and penalties amounting to some $914 million from the estate of the late S.I. Newhouse. The family argues it owes only $47 million. The case has yet to be settled.

Another case involves a grand jury investigation of allegations that S.I. Newhouse Jr. illegally tried to monopolize the newspaper market in Cleveland by conspiring with industrialist Joseph Cole, owner of the Cleveland Press, to fold that newspaper in 1982.

Advance, which owns the Cleveland Plain Dealer, has been accused of paying Mr. Cole $14.5 million for the newspaper's circulation list, which normally is considered all but worthless once a paper is folded, and thereby effectively paying Mr. Cole to fold the paper, giving the Plain Dealer a monopoly in Cleveland. The case also has yet to reach disposition.

Newhouse, with large newspaper and magazine interests, continued to build the latter through acquisition by buying in May, 1985, the New Yorker Magazine Inc., publisher of The New Yorker and several other publications. Advance, which paid $165 million for New Yorker Magazine Inc., is selling some of the other properties such as Raven Press and Horticulture.

The New Yorker fell upon hard times in 1985 as a result of an advertising page erosion that has plagued the magazine since 1981. According to Publishers Information Bureau, the magazine had $52.7 million in ad revenue in 1985, down 12.4%, on a drop of 15% in ad pages to 2,997, its lowest total since 1945. Since 1981, ad pages have fallen 30.4% from 4,309.

Circulation at The New Yorker, however, is on the rise, with a total of 506,103 reported to ABC at yearend, an increase of 1.1% from a year earlier. Circulation, spurred by a $2.5 million promotion campaign, climbed to the 540,000 level in June, 1986. The magazine responded by raising its rate base to 525,000 while increasing its rates 14.8%, effective Oct. 6, 1986. This is the first increase in the circulation rate base since 1981.

Among the company's other magazines, owned via its Conde Nast Publications subsidiary, ad pages for Bride's decreased 5% to 1,814, but ad revenues increased 1.3% to $22.9 million, according to PIB. Circulation was up 0.2% to 342,912, according to ABC. At Glamour, ad pages were off 1.3% to 2,135, while ad revenues climbed 8.4% to $76.5 million. Circulation was up 0.5% to 2,300,807.

Gourmet's ad pages increased 14.7% to 1,142, while ad revenues soared 33.4% to $18.6 million. Circulation was up 49.1% to 991,026. At Gentlemen's Quarterly, ad pages were off 3.1% to 1,863, but ad revenues were up 10.4% to $29.5 million. Circulation fell 1.3% to 633,501. House & Garden increased ad pages 5.9% to 1,160 and increased ad revenues 9.2% to $20.6 million. Circulation rose 2.9% to 591,694.

Mademoiselle's ad pages were off 10.7% to 1,503, and ad revenues were off 4.5% to $34.1 million. Circulation was up 2.1% to 1,236,392. Self ad pages were up 2.1% to 1,182, and ad revenues were up 8.6% to $26.3 million. Circulation was up 1% to 1,077,090. Vanity Fair ad pages were up 28.4% to 431, and ad revenues climbed 52.7% to $6.2 million. Circulation was up a whopping 50.5% to 399,792. Vogue ad pages were off 6.4% to 3,246, but ad revenues were up 6.2% to $71.5 million. Circulation was off 3.2% to 1,179,339.

Parade, the Sunday newspaper distributed magazine and Advance's largest circulation publication, got considerable spillover circulation when Gannett Co. bought the old Family Weekly from CBS Magazines in early 1985. Gannett subsequently dubbed it USA Weekend and redesigned the magazine to look like its national daily newspaper, USA Today.

By the time the dust settled, Parade had been picked up by 145 new newspapers and its circulation had increased 23% to 30.8 million. Also in 1985, Parade benefited from the best automotive ad space order it had ever received: a 25-page order from General Motors. It ended the year with ad pages up 2.7% to 657 and ad revenues up 26.1% to $198.4 million.

Among Advance's four leading newspapers, daily circulation at the Star-Ledger in Newark, N.J., rose 3.9% to 452,148 and 3.2% on Sunday to 682,469. Circulation at the Plain Dealer was down 2.1% to 454,042 daily and stable at 549,580 on Sunday. What is media?

Pinning a definition on media is a lesson in futility. As soon as a consensus is seemingly reached, "media" slips out from under those constraints.

This year, 17 of the companies on the top 100 media chart contained "communications" in their titles, a word that seems broad enough in the case of many of these companies to still identify activities that ranged far from the classical forms of media that show up in the names of most media companies: Broadcasting, newspapers, printing, publishing, cable, outdoor, news and media.

Drawing a cue from the implied idea that "communications" is more than media (but not that much more), the editors opened up their traditionalist eyes to let new forms of communications slip under the media door.

Advertising Age's definition of media in this sixth annual report has opened up to encompass total market coverage units within newspaper companies in general, and also from companies as freestanding as their inserts—in short, direct marketers.

Videodiscs, subscription-based information networks that provide everything from electronic news services to analysis of corporate returns and commodity information to farmers, specialty advertising calendars and the networking of news and information via satellite to member stations also merged into the definition.

Media, of course, continues to be cloaked in the traditional mantle in which revenues from communications vehicles are derived from advertisers or subscribers—which is the language that ruled the first few Ad Age top 100 media issues.

Still on the doorstep, but not included in Advertising Age's interpretation of media, are program production, motion pictures, syndication activities, book publishing and revenues derived by ad rep companies for sales made to non-owned broadcast stations. The classical view still dominates.

But what about those companies fixated on electronic catalogs or mass Mylar balloon floatings? Will they be the "media" of the future?

Affiliated Publications boasted record sales and earnings for 1985 despite a difficult year at the Boston Globe, the company's lead property, and a disappointing performance by its broadcasting units.

With the resignation of Michael Janeway as Globe editor followed by the elevation of John Driscoll, a Globe editorial veteran, to the top editorial spot, and a resumption of daily circulation gains, the newspaper appears to be back on track. The situation with Affiliated Broadcasting is less clear. In March, 1986, the company put all its radio station properties up for sale.

Affiliated, ranked 31st among media companies, registered a 6.8% increase in revenues over 1984, down from the previous year's 17% gain. Operating income rose 6.8% over 1984 to $65.2 million in 1985, but again that gain was less than the previous year's 19.8% jump.

The Globe continues to provide the bulk of Affiliated revenues, $349.4 million in 1985, up from $326.5 million the year before. Globe operating income rose from $60.4 million in 1984 to $68 million in 1985, which is more than Affiliated made in total operating income. (There were income losses in "other" and "general corporate" segments.)

Advertising linage in 1985 increased 2.1% over 1984, slower than the 10.9% increase the previous year. The Globe's daily circulation rose to 514,097 in March 31, 1986, from 510,567 the year earlier, according to the ABC Fas-Fax report. The Sunday Globe circulation reached 811,149 for the same period, up from 802,891.

Affiliated Broadcasting had only a small gain, from $16.3 million in 1984 to $16.6 million in 1985, but operating income nose-dived from $3.4 million in 1984 to $683,000 in 1985. Much of that decline is being attributed to the startup costs of the two fm stations acquired by Affiliated in 1985, KHEP-FM in Phoenix and KFYE (fm) in Fresno. During 1985 the company sold four stations, WHYN (am, fm) in Springfield, Mass., and WFAS (am, fm) in White Plains, N.Y., for a combined price of $12.8 million.

In March, 1986, Affiliated put all nine radio properties up for sale. "It was not an issue of profitability. It was time to do other things," says John Giuggio, president of Affiliated Publications and the Boston Globe. According to reports published in the Globe, the sale of the stations could generate $65 million to $75 million. There is no firm plan to sell the stations either as a group or individually. "We want to try to do it quickly," Mr. Giuggio says.

The company has stated it will use a portion of its proceeds from the broadcast sale to finance the buy back of 400,000 shares of stock. The remainder of the money will be used to finance future acquisitions, particularly in the cellular telephone area where the company sees a "window of opportunity," Mr. Giuggio says. The company also is shopping for "a meaningful newspaper acquisition," he says. If successful, the Globe will no longer be an only child.

The company paid more than $19 million to buy back 400,000 shares of its own stock from Warren Buffett, chairman of Berkshire Hathaway and who is credited with orchestrating the merger of Capital Cities Communications and American Broadcasting Cos. In addition, the company purchased 327,000 more shares of its own stock over the past six months. Mr. Giuggio dismisses suggestions that the buy back was meant to counter any unfriendly takeover and says there were no further plans to buy back stock.

Although the company is firmly in the hand of the Taylor family and changes made last year in the way the board of directors is organized make an unfriendly takeover unlikely, the investment community is reading a poison pill strategy into a recent Affiliated plan to dilute the company's stock.

Affiliated owns 45% of McCaw Communications Co., which is not consolidated in Affiliated financial reports except for its earnings share on the equity side. McCaw is a multiple system cable tv operator and microwave common carrier concentrated primarily in the West. It suffered a net loss of $17.6 million in 1985 on operating revenues of $77.8 million, compared with an operating loss of $4.7 million in 1984 on operating revenues of $36.4 million.

McCaw, combined with Affiliated, operates 35 cable systems, up from 26 last year. Four more cable tv systems are operated by Affiliated and McCaw as a joint venture. The company also sells and services mobile telephones and pagers to 68,300 customers in eight western states. In January, 1986, McCaw signed an agreement to purchase interest in 12 cellular partnerships owned by MCI Communications Corp. The $120.1 million price tag also includes MCI's paging systems.

In November, Affiliated ended its involvement in the Knight-Ridder Viewtron system being tested in Florida. The company had wanted to expand the system to New England but the Florida test was disappointing. Videotex remains attractive to Affiliated. The company will continue to monitor developments in that area.

Among nonmedia activities, Affiliated purchased a small book publishing concern, Auburn Press, adding it to its Globe Pequot Press property. Other than newspapers and broadcast, book publishing is Affiliated's only other business segment, contributing $1.3 million in revenues in 1985, up 23% from 1984. It suffered a loss of $166,000 in 1985 compared with a loss of $232,000 in 1984. Book publishing will remain a tiny segment of the company's business, Mr. Giuggio says.

The Globe was victorious in its defense of a libel suit filed by gubernatorial candidate John Lakian and stemming from the newspaper's coverage of his campaign. Another libel suit brought by former Massachusetts Gov. Edward King has been dismissed recently by the court.

The resignation of Michael Janeway as top editor at the Globe and his short tenure there was traumatic, Mr. Giuggio says, but it is a small issue in the over-all scheme at Affiliated. John Driscoll appears to have quickly established a firm hand in the editorial room, something Mr. Janeway was suspected of lacking in a newsroom that had been ruled for two decades by Thomas Winship, who retired two years ago.

Mr. Giuggio also gained the vice chairmanship of the Globe Newspaper Co. subsidiary to add to his Affiliated level post as president/coo. Richard C. Ockerbloom, exec vp/general manager at Globe Newspaper, moved up to president/coo.

Allbritton Communications Corp. ended 1985 the way it began, with five daily newspapers and five tv stations, but already in 1986 the privately held,

Washington-based company has dispatched two of those newspapers and is believed on the prowl for media acquisitions.

In 1986, the nation's 81st largest media company already has sold the Union City Dispatch and the Patterson Times, both New Jersey dailies, to a subsidiary of Garden State Newspapers, a company partially owned by Media General. Sale price was not disclosed. Both papers were suffering at the aggressive marketing hands of the Record of Bergen County, N.J.

Although Allbritton would not disclose revenue or income figures, president Larry Hebert acknowledged the company's growth was "on average with industry standards," which would put its total revenues from newspapers and broadcast at about $122 million in 1985, up 9%. He emphasized the company's interest in other properties, principally newspaper and broadcast, but possibly cable as well.

"We're fairly open and are looking at everything," he says. "We sold those papers . . . because we felt the growth was in other markets . . . than northern New Jersey."

On the newspaper side, virtually all growth came from Allbritton's linchpin, the Trenton Times, where ad growth was about 10% and circulation growth was nearly as impressive. As of March 31, 1986, daily circulation was 65,505, up from 62,098 for the year earlier, and Sunday circulation was 84,059, up from 78,797. Those totals keep the Times ahead of its Ingersoll Publications' rival, the Sunday Trentonian, which had circulation of 64,615, up from 63,246, but behind the morning Trentonian's 67,939, up from 67,087 in the previous year.

Michael Moore, president of Allbritton's newspaper division, attributes much of the 1985 growth to the success of the newspaper's newly zoned editions. Within barely a year, the paper has gone from one edition to three zoned editions, with a full-service advertising, business and editorial office in Princeton, N.J. Its third zoned edition, aiming for markets south of Trenton, began April 28, and Mr. Moore already sees "encouraging trends."

Rounding out Allbritton's print triad are the Westfield (Mass.) News and the Irwin (Pa.) Standard Observer, small dailies with a combined circulation of about 21,000. Mr. Moore characterizes both as "stable little situations that operate profitably and serve their communities, but they lack great growth potential."

Classified ads at the Times grew about 20% last year, according to Mr. Moore, while all the dailies enjoyed classified growth of about 15%.

In broadcast, Allbritton's empire includes the same five fiefdoms: KATV, Little Rock, Ark.; KTUL-TV, Tulsa, Okla.; WCIV, Charleston, S.C.; WJLA-TV, Washington, and WSET-TV, Lynchburg, Va.

All, with occasional variation, are either first or second in their markets, according to Mr. Hebert. "We've been very pleased with our results and hope to continue our operational and financial gains."

Singing One's Praises

Belo Corp.'s WFAA-TV released its "Spirit of Texas" theme song to the public domain in 45 rpm at a Dallas supermarket chain in February, 1986. Recorded by the popular Texas band, Mason Dixon, and written by Jim Kirk, the song, featured in a music video airing on the station, embodies the interaction of WFAA-TV with the community through triumph and tragedy. The melody has been the station's theme song for two years.

A.H. Belo Corp. characterizes 1985 as a year of "assimilation and stabilization" as it experienced the first full year of operation with the four stations acquired from Dun & Bradstreet Corp. That boiled down to a decline in operating earnings, a drop that has continued into 1986.

The Dallas-based media company, ranked 27th among the nation's media companies in 1985 based on revenues, suffered a 56% decrease in net earnings. That decrease, however, was a decline of only 16.8% in net operating earnings when excluding nonrecurring gains in 1984 of $25.5 million that elevated 1984 net earnings to $54.1 million compared with $23.8 million in 1985. The continued decline is attributed to weak broadcasting margins, especially in Houston, and to general economic conditions in Houston and Dallas.

Through the first quarter of 1986 ended March 31, Belo had net earnings of $1.6 million, down 33% from the corresponding quarter a year earlier. The drop reflects continued softness in advertising linage and local spot tv sales, increased costs associated with higher circulation and increased tv programing costs, according to Belo. Net operating revenues for the quarter were $90.2 million, up 5.3%, divided into $53.8 million in newspaper publishing, up 6.4%, and $36.4 million in broadcasting, up 4.2%.

Belo's 1985 media revenues of $385.1 million were up 8.7% over the previous year. That broke down into $221.2 million for newspapers, up 12.9%, or 57.4% of total revenues, and $163.9 million for tv and radio broadcasting, up 3.4%, or 42.6% of total revenues. Publication of the Texas Almanac accounts for 0.02% of total revenues.

Earnings from operations in 1985 were $84.5 million, down 7.2%. Of those earnings, $32.7 million or 38.7% were from newspaper publishing (down 2.2%), and $56.8 million or 67.1% were from broadcasting (down 9.4%). Earnings were reduced by corporate expense and other business activities totaling $4.9 million.

Newspaper advertising revenues, principally from the Dallas Morning News, totaled $191.1 million in 1985, up 13.1% from 1984, while advertising volume rose only 0.6% to 6.1 million ins. The company attributed its increased ad revenues primarily to 11% increases in ad rates in January and September, 1985.

The News' full-run advertising share charted by Media Records rose 1.5% in 1985 to 55.4%, represented by a 52.9% share of retail, 54.6% share of general, and 58.6% share of classified in the local market. For the second year in a row, the News published more full-run advertising than any other newspaper in the country, according to Media Records figures, and led the nation in classified advertising linage in 1985.

The News celebrated its 100th anniversary in the fall of 1985 with publication of 10 special sections, each of which focused on a 10-year segment of "100 Years with the News."

Circulation revenues in 1985 rose 8.6% to $15.1 million. The News increased its home delivery rate to $9 from $8 a month beginning December, 1985. During calendar 1985, the News widened its circulation lead over the Times Mirror-owned Dallas Times Herald to 146,619 copies daily and 169,130 copies Sunday.

In the ABC Fas-Fax report for the six-month period ended March 31, 1986, the News sustained its lead over the Times Herald, circulating 145,646 more daily copies and 173,643 more Sunday copies than the rival. The News' daily circulation in that report was 390,275 in 1986 vs. 368,683 in 1985 and Sunday circulation was 521,727 vs. 476,004 in 1985.

In January, 1985, Belo's new 220,000-sq.-ft. offset printing facility in Plano, Tex., began printing newspapers for distribution. About one-third of the News circulation is printed at the plant, along with some advance sections for the entire circulation. Belo's board approved a five-year capital spending program of $103.4 million to expand the new facility by adding four more offset presses, tripling the plant and enabling production of the entire newspaper there by 1990. The plant includes state-of-the-art offset presses, fiber optics and laser scanners for transmission of page images from the downtown plant, high-speed inserters and a computerized distribution system.

Belo's wholly owned subsidiary, Dallas-Fort Worth Suburban Newspapers Inc. (formerly News-Texan Inc.), reported 68,119 as the 1985 average daily paid circulation for its six daily suburban community newspapers. Total operating revenues of the subsidiary increased 15.7% in 1985, which Belo says was attributable to increases in ad revenue of 3.4%, circulation revenue of 17.6% and job printing of 70.2%. The group will relocate to a new central facility in Arlington, Tex., during 1986.

Belo's flagship tv station, WFAA-TV, Dallas, was first in over-all share at sign-on to sign-off, 5 p.m. news and prime time throughout 1985. Also, the station was dominant in the 10 p.m. news block. In the first quarter of 1986, WFAA-TV laid off 21 employes in a cutback attributed to "continuing flat business performance." The ABC affiliate is feeling the effects of ABC's own Nielsen ratings slump as well as the impact of video recorder penetration and soft general economic conditions, the company says.

In Houston, Belo's KHOU-TV began to register audience gains in the fall of 1985 after extensive research and programing changes. Belo says the station now is ranked No. 2 over-all in the Houston tv market. The plunge in oil prices has severely depressed the city's economic activity.

Belo's Sacramento (KXTV) and Hampton-Norfolk (WVEC-TV) properties also improved ratings and financial performance in 1985, the company says. In Tulsa, the company's KOTV continued to rank No. 2. Phillip J. Keller was named KOTV vp-general manager in September.

KZEW (fm), Dallas-Fort Worth, continued to be rated high among its target market of 18-to-34-year-old men, Belo says. In Denver, KOA ranked No. 4 in its target market, and was Denver's No. 1 am station overall. KOAQ (fm) finished the year fifth in its target market, Belo says.

In late 1985, Belo moved some of its personnel from the Dallas Morning News building and from other downtown buildings into the new 17-story Belo Bldg. across the street from the News headquarters. Belo is a limited partner in the partnership that constructed the building. The company in January, 1986, purchased more than a block of downtown Dallas as an investment and for future development. The property is adjacent to almost four blocks the company owns between the Dallas Convention Center and Union Station along Young Street.

A portion of Belo's capital expenditures in 1985 went toward development of an electronic library at the News. The newspaper linked its database to that of Datatek, owned by Oklahoma Publishing Co., which made the News library available through DataTimes, a subscription database.

Belo completed arrangements for a $500 million, 10-year revolving line of credit with a group of eight banks led by the First National Bank of Chicago and InterFirst Bank Dallas N.A. as co-agents. The agreement, announced in late January, 1986, replaced an existing term loan for $330 million originated in 1983.

The company, which earlier had said it was interested in further expansion of its newspaper holdings, was mentioned among the media companies considering acquisition of the Los Angeles Daily News and the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times Co. However, it did not join in the bidding for either.

To further ensure it would not be the subject of an unwanted takeover effort, Belo, in early 1986, created a new class of preferred stock that will enable stockholders to get an equal return on their investment in the event of an attempted takeover. The previous year, Belo stockholders voted to require changes in bylaws to be approved by a two-thirds vote.

During late 1985, the News closed its Selective Media Services operation because the unit's profit return was determined insufficient. While experiencing increased competition from larger direct mail operations, Newsweek, one of the cornerstones of SMS' package, withdrew from alternative methods of distribution, leaving SMS with a much less desirable offering.

Belo spent almost $9 million for advertising during 1985, compared with 1984's advertising cost of $8.2 million and 1983's $11.2 million. The figure represents total advertising expenses incurred outside the company on behalf of the News and Belo's individual broadcast properties.

At the beginning of 1986, the News promoted Jack Freudenfeld to advertising director from display advertising director. Marvin Veal, director of classified advertising, assumed the added title of director-advertising information systems. Russell Dealey, formerly assistant to the senior vp, was named advertising services manager, succeeding Larry Kreamer, who retired. Jerry Coley, formerly an assistant retail advertising manager, was named retail sales manager.

Berkshire Hathaway, a multifaceted holding company whose Omaha-based chairman, Warren Buffett, is perhaps better known than the company, recorded modest gains in its lone media property, the Buffalo News.

The News, which reported a 6% increase in revenues in 1985 despite a slight across-the-board circulation decline, is, however, far from the company's only media interest. The parent has major holdings in Cap Cities/ABC, Washington Post Co., Time Inc. and Affiliated Publications.

The News revenue makes Berkshire Hathaway the 90th largest media company in 1985.

Berkshire, which had its roots in the New England textile industry before shutting down all of its textile operations in July, 1985, is involved in insurance, banking, candy, home furniture, steel service industries in addition to apparel, and owns West Coast-based Blue Chip Stamps, a trading stamp company.

Berkshire's earnings without investment gains were $92.9 million, up 32% from 1984. However, investment gains in 1985 of $342.9 million brought net earnings to $435.8 million, compared with the prior year net earnings of $148.9 million, which included investment gains of $78.7 million. Most of the investment gains in 1985 were from the sale of General Foods common stock to Philip Morris Cos. in PM's successful tender of General Foods.

Berkshire, which obtained the News in 1983 when it bought the newspaper's parent, Blue Chip Stamps, runs the newspaper through the 105-year-old Buffalo Evening News Inc., Buffalo, N.Y. Blue Chip Stamps purchased the News in 1977.

The News in 1985 had a Monday through Friday circulation of 317,024, down slightly from 317,750 the year earlier, according to ABC Fas-Fax reports for the period ended March 31, 1986. Saturday circulation was 282,081 compared with 282,050 in 1985, and Sunday circulation of 370,748 compared with a year-earlier total of 373,071.

The News publishes seven editions daily and is the only metropolitan daily newspaper in its 10-county distribution area. It ranks among the leaders in penetration in the country's top 50 primary markets, with a 79% penetration daily and 82% on Sunday. It is ranked 25th in circulation among the nation's daily newspapers. It employs 970 people fulltime.

The newspaper generated 1985 revenues of $107.9 million, up 6.1%, and produced operating profits of $29.3 million, up 9.7% from 1984. The News had net earnings of $14 million in 1985, up 9.3%.

Ad linage increased at the News in 1985, although the gain was attributed to preprints. Run-of-press linage was down.

In early 1986, Berkshire Hathaway bought an 18.7% interest in Capital Cities Communications when it took 3 million shares at $172.50 a share, or $517.5 million, helping Cap Cities' $3.5 billion purchase of American Broadcasting Cos., which was completed in January.

As part of the deal, Berkshire Hathaway relinquished voting control of its stock to Cap Cities ceo Thomas S. Murphy, or to Daniel B. Burke, if and when he succeeds Mr. Murphy as ceo, for as long as either heads the company. It also agreed to give Cap Cities the right of first refusal to repurchase stock until Jan. 3, 1997, and agreed to restrictions regarding the sale of its holdings, particularly to a larger holder, without the approval of Cap Cities' management.

In Mr. Buffett's 1985 letter to shareholders, he waxes humorously about his timeliness in investing in Cap Cities over the years:

"Of course, some of you probably wonder why we are now buying Cap Cities at $172.50 per share, given that your chairman, in a characteristic burst of brilliance, sold Berkshire's holdings in the same company for $43 per share in 1978-80. Anticipating your question, I spent much of 1985 working on a snappy answer that would reconcile these acts: 'A little more time, please.' "

As of the end of 1985, Berkshire Hathaway reported holding 900,800 shares of ABC, which it bought for $54.4 million and has a market value of slightly less than $109 million. The company also holds 1,868,600 shares, or 16.6%, of the Washington Post Co. The shares sell for about $164 on the American Stock Exchange, giving erkshire Hathaway holdings worth 306.4 million. The Post last year ought from Cap Cities its cable tv oprations in the Midwest, West and outh. Those cable tv operations serve 5,000 subscribers.

Berkshire Hathaway also holds 036,461 shares of Affiliated Publicaons, which it bought for slightly more an $3.5 million and values at $55.7 illion. Affiliated's main holding is e Globe Newspaper Co., which pubshes the Boston Globe. Berkshire also s 847,788 shares bought at $20.4 illion and valued at $52.7 million, in me Inc., publisher of Time magazine d other national publications.

Blade Communications improved its cable tv operations, rebuilding both the Erie County and Monroe systems during the past 18 months. The improvements increased the Erie County system's capacity from its original 12 channels to a capacity of 44 channels. The three cable systems are estimated to generate $19 million from subscriber fees in 1985. Buckeye Cablevision produces local ad revenue, although the company declines to give details.

A cable spokesman says Blade Communications has not emphasized local advertising at its two smaller systems, "but at the one in Toledo, we have, and it's growing nicely." He says there should be some advertising growth at the smaller systems as the company gains experience with Buckeye Cablevision. "Many cable operators don't even bother with it," he says of local advertising for small cable systems.

Newspapers, the largest component of media activity at Blade, had estimated revenues of $136 million in 1985. John Blair & Co., New York, the 25th largest media company, last year began a restructuring program that could lead to the company's acquisition later this year.

Bidding for the company had heated up by early June, 1986, between Reliance Capital Group, perceived by Blair as a "white knight," and Macfadden Holdings, as a knight-errant whose initial offering included a condition that the Advo-System unit at Blair would be sold off for $100,000. However, as of mid-June, a Macfadden counterbid included more cash per share than Reliance Capital and an assurance that Advo would not be divested.

Media revenues, which climbed from 85.4% to 87.1% of total revenues in 1985, came largely from Blair's marketing services segment, which included its Advo-System and freestanding insert business, and its tv and radio properties. Most of the company's nonmedia revenue is derived from its broadcast representation companies, which had revenues of $66 million in 1985, up 6.1% from 1984.

However, in 1985, media operations contributed a $16.3 million loss compared with a $26.1 million gain the prior year. Over-all, in 1985 the company reported a loss of $29.1 million compared with a gain of $10.5 million the prior year.

In the media area, Blair's losses came from its marketing services unit, which in 1985 consisted principally of Advo-System, the Hartford, Conn.-based direct mail facility and the Blair Sunday newspaper freestanding inserts. For the year, revenues from marketing services were $449.9 million with an operating loss of $30.7 million.

Blair purchased Advo in March, 1984, for about $35 million. Another $70 million was invested in Advo to improve its facilities and expand its distribution. At the time, Blair believed that the combination of Advo and its inserts would create a synergy in the marketplace to benefit both marketing programs.

The reality turned out otherwise. The insert, once the market leader in a field of four, slid uncontrollably into fourth place. And Advo generated consecutive losses despite being scaled back from an average weekly circulation of 45 million to 30 million.

The inserts changed leadership again in 1985, as the division had done the year before when Advo president Jack Valentine replaced Bob Henim, the division's founder. This time, in March, it was Mr. Valentine who stepped down, to be replaced two months later by Edward Fuhrman, a former package-goods marketer at General Foods. Under Mr. Fuhrman's direction, the division began to come back and in October, it published its single largest issue. But that proved to be too little, too late.

Just a month later, with the company's entire debt hovering about $300 million, Blair announced a sweeping reorganization that included the sale of its freestanding insert and three printing companies. Before the year was out, the insert division had been sold to Quad/Marketing, Pewaukee, Wis., for about $12 million, and one of the three printing companies was sold as well. This spring, the other two printing companies were sold, completing the restructuring program. The sale of the four properties is estimated to have brought in about $100 million, which will be applied to Blair's debt.

The considerably trimmed down John Blair turned out to be an attractive takeover target.

In April, Macfadden Holdings, a New York-based publishing company, launched a $25 per share takeover bid that was rejected by Blair's board of directors as inadequate. Especially distressing to the board, even more so than the $25 per share price it considered low, was Macfadden's proposed plan for disposing of Advo. Contained in Macfadden's offering was the proposed sale of Advo to California investor Paul Bilzerian for just $100,000. The suggestion that Blair had turned a $100 million investment into just $100,000 in two years was maddening, and the board began seeking a friendly partner to make a higher bid.

First, Blair found what it considered to be a more suitable buyer for Advo in Warburg, Pincus Capital Partners, a New York investment banking concern. Warburg has agreed to purchase a one-sixth interest in Advo for $10 million. For that, Warburg will receive a majority of the preferred shares and, hence, a controlling interest in the company. The remainder of the stock will be distributed directly to Blair's shareholders.

Sources close to Advo suggest those Advo shares will have a market value of about $5, but Wall Street analysts suggest the initial market value may be closer to $2. That would peg the market value of Advo at anywhere from $22 million to $55 million, a great deal more than the $100,000 offered by Mr. Bilzerian, but equally far from the $100-plus million invested by Blair.

Second, Blair found a white knight to acquire the remainder of the company in the Reliance Capital Group, an investment concern controlled by Saul Goldstein. Reliance Capital is offering $27 a share for about two-thirds of Blair's shares and debentures worth a similar amount for the remainder.

Macfadden, however, upped its cash offer to $30 a share and other notes for a total bid of $340 million, and reversed its position on selling Advo. Blair's stock has been trading at more than $28 per share, and has been valued as high as $32 a share.

Throughout these various takeover bids, Blair's broadcast properties repeatedly have emerged as the attraction. In 1985, Blair went on the air with its fifth tv station, WSCV, Miami-Fort Lauderdale. The company says the station captured 33% of the South Florida Spanish-language audience.

An important key to its success, Blair says, was that the station had introduced programing tailored to the Hispanic residents of South Florida, including an hourlong news program format.

In contrast, Blair's other Spanish-language station, WKAQ-TV, San Juan, was hurt by local economic conditions. Sales came back sharply in the fourth quarter, however, and continued to lead in audience share.

The remaining Blair radio and tv properties turned in a solid performance, the company says, and the division had revenues of $99.4 million, up 11.7%, and posted operating profit of $14.3 million, down 8.8%.

The past year brought no change in Bonneville International Corp.'s lineup of media holdings—two tv stations, and five am and seven fm radio stations—and little internal growth, leading to an 0.8% increase in revenues for those properties in 1985 over the previous year.

Instead, the Salt Lake City-based company switched personnel and formats, the latter involving numerous call letter changes. An equally flat performance also was turned in by its nonmedia business encompassing music syndication and telecommunications.

Bonneville, ranked 84th in the nation on the basis of its media revenue performance, is a closed corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church. Last year marked the retirement of company president Arch Madsen, who became president emeritus. Rodney Brady, who had been the president of Weber State College in Ogden, Utah, succeeded him on July 1, 1985.

Among Bonneville's broadcast operations, home-based KSL-TV and KSL radio continued to be the dominant stations in Salt Lake City. KSL radio remained a strong No. 1, with a 12.9 over-all rating, in a market in which fm predominates with 72% of the listening audience. KSL holds a 40% share of the am market.

KOIT (am, fm), San Francisco, tried new formats. KOIT moved from easy listening to light rock, and although it was the No. 2 station in the easy listening genre, the market had "a hole in the 25-to-49 age group big enough to drive a truck through—sideways," says Jack Adamson, the new senior vp at Bonneville, who oversees KSL tv and radio in addition to broadcast operations in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago and New York.

Chuck Tweedle became the new vp-general manager at KOIT (am, fm), replacing Cary Johnston-Winston, when she left the radio combo to become vp-general manager of KBIG-FM in Los Angeles, a position formerly held by Mr. Adamson. Mr. Adamson now occupies the post formerly held by Jay Lloyd, who died last September.

With a new manager on board, KOIT took the plunge into a new format last June, taking a more circuitous route than its fm sister station. Sporting new call letters, KXLR, the am station adopted "trendformat," which is used extensively in Great Britain. In-depth discussion is coupled with light jazz and New Age music. Information is presented in "magazine, rather than newspaper format," Mr. Brady says. Although the new approach was enthusiastically received by a small segment of the viewing audience, "we couldn't get any numbers on it," Mr. Adamson says, and the format was pulled off the air in January, 1986, following a six-month maiden run.

Mr. Adamson remains optimistic about trendformat and believes "the souffle didn't rise, but perhaps we took it out of the oven too soon." For the time being, however, KXLR is once again KOIT-AM with an adult contemporary format. Because trendformat is a low-cost format that can be sold in tandem with fm to advertisers, the trendformat trial was, at the very least, a worthy "experiment to see what you can do with am radio in markets already strong with news and information stations," Mr. Adamson says.

Another Bonneville station, KAFM (fm) in Dallas, also changed its format and call letters. KAFM became KZPS-FM and moved from a contemporary hit radio, youth-oriented sound, up the chronological scale to adult contemporary in early March, 1986, mainly because of increased competition. The new sound, which contains elements of contemporary jazz, is "highly researched, and our unaudited numbers show solid gains on both new formats in Dallas," Kenneth Hatch, president-ceo of KIRO Inc. and a senior vp at Bonneville, says.

KAAM became KZPS in Dallas and switched from an adult contemporary format to Music of Your Life, a syndicated service of music of the '50s and '60s.

KMBZ, an information/sports radio station, and KMBR (fm) in Kansas City, an easy listening station, together hold a dominant position in that market. According to Mr. Hatch, the two stations form "an ideal selling combination of information/news and easy listening," since both formats encourage audience crossover, Mr. Hatch says.

Last October, KMBZ lured the World Series champion Kansas City Royals from KCMO, the local CBS station, and Mr. Hatch is confident the acquisition of the Royals will cause ratings to climb beyond the 12-plus ranking the station currently enjoys.

KMBR (fm) is an example of what Mr. Hatch calls Bonneville's ULTRA format—easy listening music coupled with news at the top of the hour. Bonneville serves 155 stations in 85 to 90 of the top 100 markets in the country with its ULTRA format.

Bonneville's frontrunner in the adult contemporary mode continues to be Chicago's WCLR (fm), with its "Chicago's Lite Rock" theme. Starting in April, WNSR (fm), Bonneville's New York broadcast property, also made the leap into soft rock and adopted new call letters, WRFM (fm). Research showed slippage in the easy listening category, and this triggered WRFM's switch to the new format as "New York's Soft Rock."

Seattle properties, KIRO, KSEA (fm) and KIRO-TV, Bonneville's CBS affiliate, continued to do well. According to Messrs. Brady and Hatch, KIRO radio is the dominant news station in the Northwest by a wide margin. The news-radio and sports station picked up additional major league franchises for broadcast last year, including the Seattle Mariners baseball team, basketball's SuperSonics and Seattle's National Football League team, the Seahawks. In addition, KIRO radio picked up the rights to broadcast the University of Washington Huskies sports events for $1.5 million.

KIRO-TV is the No. 1 news station in the market both in terms of ratings and in the amount of news programing it broadcasts daily, Mr. Hatch says.

Bonneville Broadcasting System, an easy listening music syndication company, headquartered in Northbrook, Ill., is the largest easy listening music syndication in the country, serving more than 150 stations.

Bonneville Telecommunications, under newly appointed president Blaine Whipple, formerly vp-finance at Bonneville, continued to move ahead on its teletext program, which utilizes CBS news feeds and local news and passes it via signals from KSL-TV and telephone lines to tv set subscribers and home computer users.

The division also operates transponders, which it leases to such clients as Western Union Industries and Southern Pacific Transportation Co., but because the demand for use and programing is low compared with the number of transponders in orbit, this segment has not shown any growth.

However, Bonneville Telecommunications has been busy developing informational systems for such clients as Chicago First National Bank, American Can Co. and Thiokol Chemical Corp. The Telecommunications division also developed an information network for Dow Jones, which began operating in April, that feeds data to major stock exchanges. In addition, the subsidiary signed major contracts with privately owned networks, like the Hilton Hotel chain, for which it provides teleconferencing capabilities. Other new product development activities are in the works, Mr. Whipple says.

Bonneville Media Communications, a full-service communications company that also offers advertising agency services, greatly expanded its business role this past year. The Mormon Church has been a major client for 14 years, both for programing and advertising.

The company's multimedia division, which puts together multiple-slide presentations and other multimedia events for national and local companies, numbers among its clients such companies as American Express,

Rockwell International, Boise Cascade and Blue Cross and Blue Shield. The programing department at Bonneville Media prepares special and corporate films for clients.

The greatest area of growth has been in the advertising agency sector, however. A natural extension of the award-winning work the agency has done for the Mormon Church was to expand its roster of clients to other cause/relief organizations.

The most recent new client, Boy Scouts of America, joined Bonneville Media's agency in April. In January of this year, Church World Service, a relief organization headquartered in New York, left Ketchum Advertising in favor of Bonneville Media to develop its radio and tv campaigns. The National School of Safety Center in Sacramento, Cal., became a Bonneville client last year.

Advertising and corporate film work focuses on the problems of drug abuse, violence and truancy on school campuses. Recently, the Houston Film Festival bestowed an award for Bonneville's work on that account. The advertising arm of Bonneville has earned more than 300 creative awards.

Bonneville Media plans to enter the commercial sector, including such industries as healthcare and communications. In particular, the agency seeks "clients who can utilize the emotional kind of sell we specialize in," says Jeffrey L. Hilton, vp-marketing at Bonneville.

More recently, Bonneville Media entered the world of media buying, further expanding its full-service communications company role.

In addition to the personnel changes already cited, John Scott Davenport, Bonneville International's director of research, was named vp-research and analysis. Former assistant general counsel, Bruce Reese, became vp-general counsel.

Like many of the top media companies that concentrate on print properties, Cahners Publishing Co. expects relatively flat revenues and earnings in 1986, unless its financial results are lifted by acquisition as they were in 1985.

Media revenue growth of 5% at Cahners, all from magazines, was much less impressive than the company's over-all revenue growth of 10.4% in 1985, most of that coming from Cahners' growing expositions and trade shows division.

Cahners' media revenues come from 16 business publications, ranking the publisher as the 55th largest media company. Based in Newton, Mass., Cahners is a division of Reed Publishing U.S.A. Revenue totals in this profile are all for Cahners.

Cahners, however, plans to build on its existing titles while waiting for advertisers to become more confident about the economy and let loose of their advertising dollars. "We're trying to run better by battening down the hatches and waiting for the storm to pass, for the sun to come out again," says Bill Platt, president of the magazine division. "We want to publish good quality magazines and not spend our assets for now," he says, adding the proverbial "unless a particularly good acquisition comes along."

That "particularly good acquisition" would be one of high quality offering strong growth potential in keeping with the publisher's growth strategy. At the same time, Cahners is weeding out magazines that don't show that potential. The idea is not to have a large number of titles, but to own magazines that dominate their markets and have room to grow, Mr. Platt says.

He refers to a magazine's life cycle to illustrate the company's decision to sell or fold several magazines this year. Appliance Manufacturer, which was sold to Corcoran Communications, Solon, O., earlier this month, was the No. 1 magazine in its field with 60% of the market. But the market was a "shrinking pie" because many appliances are made overseas, he says. The magazine no longer offered the growth Cahners looks for.

Bar Business, which was published for eight issues starting in September, was killed because it failed to attract the advertising needed to support the magazine's high costs, although it received strong readership interest, he says.

Other media operations sold were Cardiovascular Medicine, which from the time it was purchased never met the company's expectations, and the newsletter division, sold to the staff member who headed the division.

A purchase that was termed a "major acquisition" was that of R.R. Bowker Co., publisher of three magazines: Library Journal, Publishers Weekly and School Library Journal.

Cahners will be on the lookout for other publishing properties in 1986 and expects to announce one such major acquisition in the next few months. According to Mr. Platt, the company is talking to major publishing companies that have a lot of good properties on the market.

During the year Cahners also bought Physicians Travel & Meeting Guide, Electronic Purchasing and launched two spinoffs of EDN, EDN Product News and EDN Career News. The latter two publications are doing well because of the strength of EDN, according to Mr. Platt, and because the industry is eager for product and recruitment news.

Electronic Purchasing, launched as a monthly magazine to compete with an every-other-week buyers guide paper, gives Cahners editorial coverage in every area of the electronics business, which is predicted to be a growth area for the company. A major sales push for the magazine will start in September. Cahners also expects the medical healthcare area to be a major growth area. The most troublesome category for Cahners is the computer magazine group, reflecting the softness in the computer market.

Total circulation for the company's publications is now about 2.5 million. Ad pages were relatively flat for 1985, reflecting an industrywide trend for magazines, whether consumer or business. Total ad pages were about 49,000, down from 50,000 the year before. The ad page leaders for 1985 were EDN at 5,912 pages; Restaurants & Institutions, 4,480; Design News, 4,968; Interior Design, 3,216; Electronic Business, 2,237; Electronic Packaging & Production, 1,875; Purchasing, 2,304; Emergency Medicine, 1,696; Mini-Micro Systems, 1,674; Professional Builder, 1,775, and Modern Materials Handling, 1,942.

When Capital Cities bought American Broadcasting Cos. on Jan. 3, 1986, it officially became the world's largest media conglomerate with media revenues of $3.84 billion, a figure equal to 89% of total revenues of the merged operation.

Capital Cities, now Capital Cities/ABC Inc., quickly encountered the most difficult and complex year in its history. Accustomed to fast growth and high profit margins and a self-described "lean" management style, Cap Cities' suddenly faced a poor financial picture in 1986 and a merged partner characterized by a huge payroll and management bureaucracy.

The expected corporate culture clash was over almost before it began. ABC found itself transformed quickly as new managers replaced some of the best known names in broadcasting and some of the company's best known broadcast properties were sold. Fred Pierce, the president, resigned in January, only one week after the companies completed their merger.

Cap Cities immediately began the task of transformation. Other top ABC execs departed before and after the merger began, including Tony Thomopoulos, president of ABC Broadcast Group; Everett Erlick, general counsel, and Ben Hoberman, president of radio. Cap Cities immediately began shrinking the payroll. As many as 300 positions in various divisions of the company have been eliminated, with more expected. Before his departure, Fred Pierce had ordered the layoff of 350 employes in August, 1985. The layoffs affected almost 3% of ABC's 13,000 employes.

A number of new executives were added to the corporate roster. John Sias, formerly president of Cap Cities' Fairchild Publications and group vp of Metromedia Inc. in the 1960s, was named president of the ABC division of Capital Cities/ABC. Michael Mallardi, formerly chief financial officer for ABC, was named president of the company's broadcasting division. The owned-and-operated tv station group, the largest such group in the country, was split into eastern and western groups. Named to the presidency of the western region was Kenneth Johnson, formerly president-gm of Cap Cities' KTRK-TV, Houston. Lawrence Pollock, formerly president-gm of WPVI-TV, Philadelphia, was named president of the eastern stations.

In addition to changes in the personnel roster, four tv stations, eight radio stations, a newspaper and the cable division of Cap Cities were sold to meet FCC cross-ownership rules. The sale of properties before the merger yielded about $920 million in pretax gains for the company. ABC also phased out its movie division last year. Cap Cities sold its 53 cable systems to Washington Post Co. for $350 million.

The financial performances of both ABC and Cap Cities differed dramatically in 1985, mainly because of revenue shortfalls at the ABC tv network. Cap Cities had a record year in both earnings and revenue. For the first time in Cap Cities' 31-year history, net revenues exceeded $1 billion, reaching $1.02 billion, a 9% increase over 1984. Net income in 1985 was $142.2 million, a 5% increase. ABC's net revenue fell 10% to $3.3 billion while net income plummeted 19% to $158.4 million.

ABC's fall was related primarily to the extraordinary gain realized from the Olympics in 1984 as well as its continued drop in prime-time network ratings. Broadcast revenues dropped 14% to $2.84 billion last year while operating income in the division dropped 20% to $340.8 million. ABC broadcast figures include cable. The plunge would have been greater had it not been for a record year in local sales for owned-and-operated tv stations. Top executives at the company warned earlier this year that the ABC tv network could suffer a financial loss in 1986.

Cap Cities' broadcast segment revenues, minus cable, finished the year at $293.7 million, an 8% gain, while income from operations increased 3% to $145.8 million.

Both companies fared significantly better in other areas. ABC's publishing segment's revenues gained 2% to $322.1 million while income from operations increased 4% to $35.5 million. Cap Cities' publishing division increased revenues 9% to $642.6 million while income from operations grew 4% to $138.5 million.

Cable tv-related ventures also grew at both companies last year. Cap Cities' cable division, sold to meet FCC regulations prohibiting tv networks from owning cable systems, had revenues of $84.6 million, an 11% gain, with income from operations of $5.2 million, up 100%.

ABC's new technology sector (including ESPN and the Arts & Entertainment Network, among other enterprises) cut in half 1984's loss. Revenues were $129.0 million last year, a 101% increase over 1984. The loss in the division shrank from $44.6 million in 1984 to $17.3 million last year.

ABC's network performance, pallid in comparison to the triumphant 1984 season, had a few bright spots. The network has had and continues to have a more successful new product development track than CBS, which fell to the No. 2 position in prime-time household ratings. Despite this, ABC's total household audience dropped to 12.8 million from 13.07 million in 1984. The network's season-to-date average, a 14.9 rating and a 23 share, was 18% behind NBC's season leading average and 13% behind that of CBS. Thomas Murphy, chairman of Cap Cities/ABC, told a shareholder meeting that a priority in 1986 was "restoration of prime-time audience levels for ABC tv network to at least parity with CBS and NBC."

The final season average also reflected a decline over the entire year: ABC had a midseason rating average of 15.7. Two strong performances turned in by the network were the World Series last October and "North and South," the miniseries that ran during November sweeps. The six-part series averaged a 38 share, three points ahead of the 35 guaranteed to sponsors. The sequel, an equally ambitious broadcast, also had a successful run by garnering a 33 share over six nights in May.

The man responsible for the epic's creation, Brandon Stoddard, was elevated to the presidency of ABC Entertainment, replacing Lew Erlicht last November. Mr. Stoddard was formerly vp-miniseries.

The network suffered setbacks in two other programing areas, daytime and early morning. While CBS gained in total households at ABC's expense, ABC managed to hold onto its No. 1 ranking. It was not so lucky in the morning: the long-running and highly successful "Good Morning America," fell behind a dazzling and faster-paced "Today" on NBC-TV. However, ABC's evening network news broadcast, "World News Tonight," gained strength last year.

Besides a cost-conscious new management, one of the sharpest changes foisted on ABC was the slew of station sales that occurred after the merger was completed.

Eight radio stations were unloaded before the merger for more than $100 million. Gannett Co. acquired ABC's Denton (Dallas), Tex.-based KTKS (fm) for $16 million; Malrite Communications, Cleveland, bought ABC's KSRR (fm), Los Angeles, and Cap Cities' KLAC and KZLA-FM for $75 million, and Park Communications, Ithaca, N.Y., purchased Cap Cities WPAT-FM and am sister WPAT, Paterson, N.J. for $49 million. Price Communications Corp. purchased Cap Cities' WKBW, Buffalo for $14 million. Silver Star Communications-Detroit Inc. bought WRIF (fm), Detroit.

Cap Cities also obtained an 18-month temporary waiver from the FCC to hold onto several major market radio stations. Cap Cities says it needed the deferral to study the relationship between the owned-and-operated radio stations and the ABC Radio Networks, the largest radio network operation in the U.S.

Cap Cities/ABC could be required to divest by mid-1987 at least seven of the following stations: WABC, WPLJ (fm), New York; KABC and KLOS (fm), Los Angeles; WLS, WYTZ (fm), Chicago; KGO, San Francisco; WJR, WHYT, Detroit; WMAL, WRQX (fm), Washington; WBAP and KSCS (fm), Dallas-Fort Worth; WPLO (am), WKHX (fm), Atlanta, and WPRO and WPRO-FM, Providence, R.I.

Cap Cities/ABC also sold four tv stations to comply with FCC ownership regulations. Scripps Howard Broadcasting purchased WXYZ-TV, Detroit, for about $220 million. The company also purchased WFTS-TV, Tampa, for about $40 million.

Whitcom Investment and partner Cook Inlet Region Inc., Anchorage, Alaska, purchased WTNH-TV, New Haven/Hartford, Conn., for $170 million. William Paley, the former chairman of CBS, is one of the partners of Whitcom, which owns a third interest in the International Herald Tribune. A group made up of the Jackson Brothers, O.J. Simpson, Julius Erving and Edward Lewis, ceo-publisher at Essence Communications, publisher of Essence magazine, bought WKBW-TV, Buffalo, N.Y., for $65 million. With the exception of WXYZ-TV, each of the tv stations formerly was owned by Capital Cities. The aggregate net proceeds from the radio and tv sales was about $650 million.

Cap Cities/ABC also could have been required to sell WPVI-TV, Cap Cities' top affiliate in Philadelphia as a result of the merger. The company received a permanent waiver to keep the station.

Cap Cities' Red Bank, N.J., Daily Register and Ocean County Reporter was sold to Price Communications, New York for 7.5 million. Also, in August, 1985, the company sold its other New Jersey weekly in Toms River, N.J., Ocean County Reporter. ABC Publishing/Midwest division also added to its holdings in 1986 with the purchase of P.E.M.C.O., a trade show management company in Des Plaines, Ill.

CBS Inc. survived takeover attempts by Ted Turner, Marvin Davis, Ivan Boesky and Fairness in Media, a conservative group allied with Sen. Jesse Helms (R, N.C.) in 1985-86, but it experienced a difficult year that saw profits plummet and its position as the top-rated tv network in prime time fall to second place behind NBC.

Future leadership at the New York-based media company, ranked the second largest U.S. media company, continues to be a matter of speculation. While Loews Corp. chairman Laurence A. Tisch says he would amass as much as 25% of CBS stock, many believe the powerful New York financier is now heir apparent to the seat William Paley, CBS' founder and former chairman, occupied for more than five decades. The Loews' stake, which was 17.9% in June, 1986, also should provide a shield against any further hostile takeover activity.

Operating profits declined sharply in CBS' three core businesses. Operating profits fell 12% to $360.6 million in 1985 at CBS/Broadcast Group because of a soft advertising climate, especially during the fourth quarter, according to the company. Revenues increased 2% to $2.79 billion.

CBS/Publishing recorded a $41.1 million operating profit last year, a 30% decline from the year before, as revenues grew 14.8% to $710.7 million. The segment sold Family Weekly to Gannett in early 1985 for $42.5 million and purchased the 12-title consumer magazine business of Ziff Corp.'s Ziff-Davis Publishing Co. in February, 1985, for $362.5 million. CBS remains the largest publisher of special interest publications in the country.

CBS/Records Group, which was hurt by the absence of superstar album releases, posted operating profits of $87.2 million, a 29% drop from the year before. Revenues declined 3% to $1.22 billion.

CBS also completed the purchase of five radio stations from Taft Broadcasting Co. in 1985 for $108 million.

Financial matters dictated many key business decisions in 1985. In August, the company purchased 21% of its outstanding stock as an anti-Turner-takeover maneuver. The near-Draconian measure put substantial debt on CBS' balance sheet but effectively put off Mr. Turner in his $5.4 billion attempt to buy CBS.

While Turner—and presumably future suitors—were turned away by CBS' massive recapitalization, the effect on the company was traumatic. The stock buyback plan was largely responsible for the 88% decline in net income.

A month later, in seeking to pare employes from its massive payroll, CBS offered early retirement to 2,000 employes, or 7% of its work force. Employe cutbacks in most divisions continued into 1986. Several top company officials, including James Rosenfield, senior exec vp, CBS/Broadcast Group, also took early retirement.

In efforts to reduce the huge debt, CBS divested several marginally profitable properties. The plan was to quickly erase $300 million in debt on the balance sheet. As a result, KMOX-TV, St. Louis, was sold to Viacom International. CBS Toys and CBS Software were sold. CBS sold its interest in Tri-Star Pictures, which it co-owned with Coca-Cola Co.'s Columbia Pictures and Home Box Office. There were even rumors that the CBS magazine group might be put on the block.

The combination of ESPN and CFA College Football is one that advertisers are finding virtually unbeatable. Saturday nights this fall ESPN will be bringing the very best in college football into America's living rooms with exclusive live, prime time CFA coverage. With a line-up that includes defending national champion Oklahoma, Texas, Notre Dame, Penn State and Nebraska it's not surprising that upscale men are turning from the networks to ESPN in record numbers.

And these men form a very impressive line-up of their own. For instance, ESPN's average football viewer buys 30% more imported cars, does 82% more business travelling and buys 44% more life insurance than the national norm.

Without ESPN, your television budget is underdelivering these upscale men. Just 10% of your national TV budget allocated to ESPN will dramatically increase its effectiveness. You'll be reaching the men who spend and do more, and you'll be doing it at a much lower cost-per-thousand.

The "asset redeployment" successfully netted the nearly $300 million CBS sought. In an unrelated action, CBS also sold its Dallas-Fort Worth cable tv system, Black Hawk Cable Communications. CBS purchased the 19,000-subscriber system in 1982 for experimental purposes.

The company also was enmeshed in litigation during the year. In April, CBS sued the New York-based arbitrageur Ivan Boesky, charging he had amassed his 8.7% stake in CBS by using his stock as collateral to purchase more stock. The company also charged he was committing "greenmail." Mr. Boesky later dropped much of his $247.1 million stake as part of a settlement and agreed not to increase a minority ownership position.

CBS became embroiled in a lawsuit with Ziff Corp. Filed in May, CBS' suit charged that $4 million in expenses were not reflected in Ziff's statement of the magazines' earnings. Some analysts, however, estimated CBS may have overpaid as much as $40 million for the magazines. The outcome is pending.

Last October, Laurence Tisch, chairman of Loews Corp., purchased 11.3% of the company's stock. While CBS officials quickly dubbed the relationship a "mutual love affair," most observers read Mr. Tisch's action as a prelude to eventual takeover. Mr. Tisch subsequently was awarded a seat on the CBS board.

Loews, a $5 billion conglomerate with interests in hotels, real estate, financial services and tobacco, said it intended to purchase up to 25% of the company. But eventual takeover is expected. In documents filed with the SEC, Loews disclosed it had held talks about acquiring CBS after Mr. Turner made his bid.

Mr. Tisch, very active in New York financial, political and philanthropic activities as well as a close friend of former ABC chairman Leonard Goldenson, has been viewed as a stabilizing influence at the beleaguered company. Many consider a successful takeover of the company unlikely without the blessing of Mr. Tisch.

CBS concentrated heavily on marketing the tv network in 1985 and 1986, efforts sharpened by a general downturn in the over-all network economy in 1985, which saw three network revenues decline nearly 3% to $8.31 billion, the only single-year drop since cigarets were taken off the air in 1971.

CBS became the first network to sell stand-alone 15-second spots, a policy since adopted by its rivals. The network in part hopes to attract new advertisers to the medium via the shorter unit. So far the success of the venture is uncertain. CBS also aggressively courted advertisers by cutting multiyear deals, including an unusual late-night multiyear contract with Procter & Gamble. The network also initiated an early assault on the "upfront" children's market, in which advertisers purchase inventory 52 weeks in advance. By cutting early deals with advertisers, CBS secured more than half of all children's advertiser budgets, despite its second-place position in Saturday morning viewership.

The network's program schedule also underwent dramatic change. While CBS audience circulation in 1984 was matched in 1985, the network still slid to second place behind NBC. This was the first such decline for CBS in five years. The network's staple programing—"Kate & Allie," "Newhart," "60 Minutes," "Murder, She Wrote," "Knots Landing"—maintained ratings strength in 1985-86. CBS' "Sunday Night Movie" was also a major success for the network. However, "Dallas" suffered some ratings erosion.

CBS' new product development was also weak last year. The only shows developed in 1985 that will return to the 1986 schedule are "Twilight Zone" and "The Equalizer." CBS was once again forced to recast its Wednesday night schedule in 1986-87. Wednesday has been the weakest night on the CBS schedule. In a risky move, the network will move "Knots Landing" to 9 p.m. (ET) from 10 p.m. The show will compete with two strong shows on the NBC schedule.

Special programs in 1985 included "Death of a Salesman" and miniseries "Space," "Kane & Abel" and "Christopher Columbus." "Space," telecast in April, 1985, was a major disappointment for the network. The other miniseries scored well in the Nielsen ratings. In another key development in programing, longtime program chief Harvey Shephard left the company for a post at Warner Bros. He was replaced by Kim LeMasters.

In sports, the network signed a new four-year contract with the National Basketball Assn. and the U.S. Open.

News underwent two major executive changes in 1986. Edward Joyce resigned under fire as president of the division earlier this year. In May, "The CBS Evening News with Dan Rather" replaced its executive producer, Lane Venardos, with Tom Bettag. The shift comes as "CBS Evening News," after five years as the top-rated network news show, fell to a tie with NBC's "Nightly News" in April. "The CBS Morning News" continued to lag the other network morning news shows in the ratings. A new prime-time news program, "West 57th," also premiered late 1985. The show has had lackluster ratings.

There was personnel turmoil in the entire division during the past year. As a result of the Turner assault, more than 125 jobs were eliminated. Then Don Hewitt, the "60 Minutes" producer, approached top management at the company about purchasing the entire news division. Representing a group of CBS employes, including Dan Rather, Mr. Hewitt expressed concern that the division might be sold in the event of a hostile takeover of CBS.

In July, 1985, CBS Radio acquired five radio stations from Taft Broadcasting Co. The new stations are KTLR-FM, Houston; WLTT (fm), Washington; KTXQ (fm), Dallas-Fort Worth; WSUN and WYNF (fm), Tampa-St. Petersburg. CBS Radio's RADIORADIO, a youth-oriented network, also added new program feeds last year.

The CBS Publishing Group underwent major changes. Management was revamped twice while 11 top execs—nine from Ziff-Davis and two from CBS—departed.

The increase of $91 million in revenues for the segment, up 15% in 1985, came largely from the 12-title consumer magazine group from Ziff. Profits declined sharply because of the charges associated with the acquisition.

Last September, a new CBS Magazine Network called Magnet was created out of the new group, comprising 11 magazines and 20 million readers. CBS added seven titles from the Ziff-Davis Magazine Network to its existing four.

Central Newspapers, the nation's 28th largest media company, faces two directions at once—the slowing industrial/agricultural heartland from its Indianapolis headquarters, and the growing Sunbelt, from its major operation in Phoenix—and the financial performance of its papers in 1985 reflected "what was going on in the local economy," company executives say.

During 1985, a Central Newspapers publication for the first time topped the half-million circulation mark. The Sunday Arizona Republic passed that total with an average 508,008 for the six-month reporting period ended March 31, 1986, up 2% from the corresponding period a year earlier. The morning Arizona Republic also was up almost 2% to 331,491 during the same period.

The Phoenix market, despite its growth tied to electronics, aeronautical products, food processing and year-round tourist and sports activities—industries that enabled the market to surpass Indianapolis in the 1970s in population—could not isolate itself from the national trend of declining evening papers.

The Phoenix Gazette suffered the biggest drop in circulation in the chain, down 10% to 112,976.

A source at Phoenix Newspapers Inc. says the drop was caused mainly by the Gazette's change from carrier collections of subscription fees to "office pay" or central billing.

The resulting longer-term invoices, for higher amounts than the familiar weeklong charges, have tended to discourage some subscribers, the source says, who also adds that the Gazette circulation is moving up again in recent months.

Indianapolis, its growth stymied by the loss of gear and machine companies but actively engaged in a downtown renaissance, was inhospitable to the Indianapolis Star during the March 31, 1985, ABC reporting period in which circulation dropped 0.8%, to 225,759 daily, from a year earlier.

Central, concerned about sagging circulation at the Indianapolis Star during 1985, saw a drop in the evening Indianapolis News of 1.5% to 128,387 for the March reporting period, but the drop was less than the 2.2% decline experienced a year earlier. The Sunday Indianapolis Star total was up 0.5% to 394,643.

Other Central Newspaper properties are in Muncie, Ind., a university and manufacturing city with a population of 130,000, and Vincennes, a historic Wabash River port, university town, and farming center with varied manufactures and total city-county (Knox) population of about 43,000. Here, Elihu Root founded Indiana's first newspaper, the weekly Indiana Gazette, in 1804. The print shop burned, and in the summer of 1807, Mr. Root started the paper again as the Western Sun, the forerunner of today's Central Newspapers' daily, the Vincennes Sun-Commercial.

Circulation at the Sun-Commercial was off 3% to 14,846 for the daily and 3% to 16,097 for the Sunday edition. Circulation of the Muncie papers was flat. The morning daily Muncie Star dropped 1% to 29,374, and the Muncie Evening Press circulation dropped 2.1% to 15,408. The Sunday Star also dropped 1.5% to 35,193.

Two other specialized weeklies published by Phoenix Newspapers include the Arizona Business Gazette and City Life. Central president Frank Russel says the company is pleased with the performance of both. Arizona Business Gazette, issued Mondays, is a full-sized paper, founded in 1880. ABC shows 5,250 net paid for the Dec. 31, 1985, period, a 46% increase from 3,600 in 1984.

City Life, a Wednesday tabloid launched in 1983 and covering arts and entertainment, has a distribution of 23,000 nonpaid and displayed in free-standing racks and 90,000 inserted in Wednesday copies of the Republic and Gazette. Issues run about 56 pages each with a vellum cover and average about 90 ads for an advertising-editorial break of 52-48.

City Life advertising sales manager Pete Miles says, "We want to attract a broad base of readers, including those who may have stopped reading the 'regular' newspaper. Our readership is in the age 25-to-55 range—which is broader than our competition New Times with an 18-to-40-year range."

Central's Telegroup cable subsidiary offers videotex services called Teleguide at many of Phoenix's high-traffic locations—hotels, shopping centers, schools, transport terminals. Not a part of the Phoenix Telegroup are other Teleguide services in which Central has interests, operating in several California cities: Los Angeles, Sacramento, San Francisco and San Diego.

A major event of 1985 at Phoenix Newspapers Inc. was the resignation of publisher Darrow (Duke) Tully the day after Christmas. He left his position after stating that for 30 years he had fabricated information about Air Force service in the Korean and Vietnamese wars and a nonexistent degree from Purdue University.

He was replaced as publisher by Arizona Republic editor and columnist Pat Murphy, who had pursued and written the truth about his boss, leading to the resignation. Mr. Tully is now with Wick Newspapers as publisher of the Williston (N.D.) Daily Herald and ceo of the Williston Plains Reporter and Sidney (Mont.) Herald, both weeklies.

Referring to these changes, Central's Mr. Russel says: "Pat Murphy has full responsibility for the papers. We have run two credibility surveys, and they show that the papers have not been damaged by the Duke Tully affair."

In activities ancillary to newspaper production, Mr. Russel says the company has installed new state-of-art printing presses to enhance output at its Southwestern production plant in Mesa, Ariz.

The joint-venture project to develop a newsprint mill in Washington State has a slight setback with the withdrawal of one partner, the Chronicle Publishing Co. (San Francisco Chronicle), leaving Central, McClatchy Newspapers (Sacramento Bee), Kearns-Tribune Corp. (Salt Lake Tribune) and Copley Newspapers, San Diego. They are looking for a fifth partner, according to Mr. Russel.

Central Newspapers was the creation of Eugene Collins Pulliam, one of this century's patriarchal publishing titans. Mr. Pulliam, who died in 1975, created at least three newspaper chains, married three times, assembled considerable wealth and left an extended family of many journalist relatives. Rather than give Central Newspapers to the family, he left it in the hands of a three-person trust that is to run it until 21 years after the death of all his descendants living in 1973. Since the youngest of these was a great-grandson, then 2, that should keep Central in the trust's hands at least into the 2040s or 2050s.

The tv division at Chris-Craft Industries Inc. showed strong revenue growth of 11.1% from its seven stations in 1985 over 1984 but a nominal 0.3% improvement to $42.7 million in operating income because of slow advertising growth and increased programing costs.

The division of New York-based Chris-Craft, which earned the company a 68th ranking among the nation's media company, is comprised of two units—BHC Inc., which owns and operates two vhf stations, and Minneapolis-based United Television Inc. (UTV), which owns and operates three vhf stations and two uhf stations and is 50.3% owned by BHC. The division also gained on Dec. 23, 1986, its fourth independent—KUTP-TV, a uhf station in Phoenix, the 23rd area of dominant influence, according to Arbiton.

The station group, ranked ninth among tv broadcasters, serving 10.3 million homes and covering 12% of the nation, operates in five of the nation's top 25 largest markets. Ad sales are boosted by near total inclusion in national spot ad campaigns and strong local advertising bases. In the past year, revenues from local advertisers slightly exceeded revenues from national spot advertisers. Value Line Investment Survey predicts advertising will be up 7% to 9% for 1986.

Los Angeles-based KCOP, the company's strongest station, posted record earnings in 1985, according to the company. Both Arbitron Ratings Co. and A.C. Nielsen Co. show the station recorded its largest audience during November, 1985. Arbitron had KCOP tied with the CBS owned-and-operated station, Monday through Friday, sign-on to sign-off. KCOP also is the only major market independent station to air first-run programming for 90 minutes in the 6 p.m.-to-8 p.m. time period.

Profits at KPTV, Portland, Ore., and KMSP-TV, Minneapolis, were hurt by entry into their markets of new uhf stations within the past few years.

A $5.8 million news upgrading in 1984 has strengthened news ratings at several stations: KCOP is within one rating point of tying the 10 p.m. news leader; KTVX-TV, Salt Lake City, an ABC affiliate, increased its early news share 36% from November, 1984, to November, 1985, and KPTV recorded its highest news ratings in the station's history.

At its annual meeting in May, Chris-Craft confirmed it was holding talks with MCA Inc. about becoming a minority partner in WOR-TV, Secaucus, N.J. MCA, a Los Angeles-based entertainment and real estate company, earlier agreed to buy the station from RKO General, a subsidiary of Akron-based GenCorp, and find a partner to help operate it. A Chris-Craft spokeswoman says the company is looking for possible acquisitions, although no particular station seems likely at press time.

In 1984, BHC and UTV agreed in principle to a corporate combination of their stations. As of June, 1985, that decision was postponed indefinitely. The tv division continues its association with Operation Prime Time, which offers first-run programing to independent stations.

Chris-Craft's total revenues grew 11.5% over 1984 as net income from continuing operations increased to $18.3 million compared with a loss of $21.4 million in 1984—a loss precipitated by a $28.1 million loss by BHC. That BHC loss was its equity share of large losses from discontinued operations by Warner Communications Inc. Chris-Craft switched from an Aug. 31 fiscal yearend to Dec. 31. All 1984 figures are unaudited.

In December, 1983, Chris-Craft swapped 42.5% of its tv broadcast properties in exchange for 19% of WCI stock in an effort to thwart a takeover attempt of WCI by Rupert Murdoch's News America Corp. Chris-Craft, through BHC and UTV, became WCI's largest shareholder. Chris-Craft has increased its holdings and now owns 29.3% of WCI securities.

In February, 1986, WCI agreed to increase its board of directors to 16, adding two and increasing Chris-Craft's representation on the board from three to six. The companies also agreed on methods and procedures for implementation of WCI's right of first refusal in the event of "certain tender offers for or other significant events."

Rumors of the WCI and Chris-Craft relationship persisted throughout the year: WCI would go private, or Chris-Craft would take it over, or Chris-Craft chairman Herbert J. Siegel would give up the battle for control of WCI and take Chris-Craft private with cash generated from selling its stake in WCI. Mr. Siegel controls 42% of the company.

According to Value Line Investment Survey, both Chris-Craft and WCI want to disentangle themselves from one another, yet no solution has been agreeable to both parties. However, a company spokeswoman says the two companies have no plans to break their ties, as both are making money and "everybody is happy."

Chris-Craft's income through ownership of WCI securities was $30 million, up 268% from 1984, reflecting the income gains by WCI on the sale of investments, record earnings in its filmed entertainment and recorded music division, improved results from its broadcast and cable communications division and reduced interest expense.

In other areas, subsidiaries of UTV gained minority interest in cellular telephone systems in Austin, Tex., in 1985. Applications for other markets await FCC lottery.

Chris-Craft's other operations are contained in an industrial division that manufactures continuous-web specialty films, foams and fiber materials. Its operating income of $1.9 million grew 14.3% in 1985 on revenues of $22 million, up 14%.

Among management moves, John C. Siegel, 33, and William D. Siegel, 31, sons of chairman Herbert Siegel, were elected vps in 1985.

Chronicle Publishing Co. reported modest gains from its newspaper, broadcast and cable operations in 1985, a year lacking the revenue stimuli provided in 1984 by the Democratic National Convention and the Super Bowl.

The nation's 46th largest media company, San Francisco-based Chronicle Publishing includes the San Francisco Chronicle, three tv stations and a cable tv operation. Newspaper operations in the Bay Area and in Illinois are the major producers, with revenues of $129 million, followed by the broadcast group's $93 million in revenues.

Extensive real estate holdings, as yet mostly in the development stage, make only a small contribution to total revenues, but a book publishing group and a videotex system (not classified as a media property) add another $5 million in sales to bring total corporate revenues to $260 million.

The company is wholly owned by the family trust of the M.H. de Young estate and has published San Francisco's leading newspaper since 1895. Publisher Richard Tobin Thieriot is a great-grandson of founder Michel H. de Young, as is Francis A. Martin III, president of Chronicle Broadcasting Co.

Daily circulation of the Chronicle, as reported in the March 31, 1986, ABC publisher's statement, was 553,258, down slightly from the 554,979 in the corresponding period a year earlier. The company's Sunday paper, under a joint operating agreement with Hearst Corp.'s San Francisco Examiner, shares 50-50 in the Sunday Examiner & Chronicle, which has a combined circulation of 709,398, down slightly from the 717,426 in 1985.

"Our 1985 circulation took a little beating," assistant publisher Phelps Dewey says, pointing to the lack of the big media events that captured the Bay Area in 1984 as affecting the year-to-year comparison.

"At present," he says, "the downward trend in circulation has reversed itself at the Chronicle."

The paper has taken a number of steps to upgrade the product, including a $40 million plant expansion in the East Bay Area, which is now in full operation. In April, 1985, it beefed up its business coverage on Mondays with an expanded Business Extra section, which Mr. Dewey reports has been "very successful."

Another extra feature was added on Mondays, the SportsExtra, made up of the normal sports section and six to eight extra pages of outdoor sports news, specially designed to appeal to the participating sports fan. The extra features, Mr. Dewey says, help make Monday editions more popular with advertisers.

Penetration rate of the Chronicle, criticized for being lower than most papers its size, is defended by Mr. Dewey, who notes, "We have the largest circulation area of just about any regional paper in the country." The area extends from Bakersfield in the south to the Oregon border, with the circulation from the coast deep into the state. Bulk of the Chronicle circulation, however, is Bay Area suburban "where we have a lot of competition from a some very respectable papers in San Jose, Oakland and Santa Rosa."

On the other hand, market penetration of the Bloomington (Ill.) Pantagraph, the company's other daily, is at the 87% level. The March 31, 1986, ABC figures for this smaller, concentrated market places daily morning circulation at 53,057 and 56,865 on Sunday, up from 52,941 and 56,104, respectively, in the year-earlier period.

The Bloomington market has been far less dynamic than the Bay Area. Seeds of rapid growth in that market have been planted, however, with the announced construction of Chrysler and Mitsubishi auto assembly plant there. "We're looking to substantial growth in that market in the next few years," Mr. Dewey says.

KRON-TV, the NBC affiliate in San Francisco, which, according to Mr. Dewey, ranks No. 1 in the market in prime time and is second in news ratings only to KPIX-TV, the CBS affiliate. The company also owns NBC affiliate WOWT in Omaha, Neb., and KAKE-TV, the ABC affiliate in Wichita, Kan., both top stations in these markets.

Western Communications, the company's cable tv subsidiary, reports 177,000 subscribers, up from 150,000 in 1984, for its five cable systems. Western continues to experiment with pay-per-view operations and has been running commercial spots on its cable system in Monterey, Cal., the latter a move that will be extended to its other systems in the coming year.

The past year also saw Chronicle Information Services, a division of Chronicle Publishing, acquire Computer Sports World, a Las Vegas-based sports videotex operation. The new company's database offers sports scores, standings, statistics, injury reports and other sports information via home computers and telephone communications. Computer Sports World also offers statistical analysis for parimutuel betting.

Bay Area Teleguide, a public access videotex system in the company's CIS division, has increased the number of terminals in operation—mostly in heavily trafficked San Francisco locations—to more than 300. Two new branch offices are located in Palo Alto and Oakland. Total monthly accesses to the system now number about 6.1 million, Mr. Dewey says, pointing out, "When you get up into figures like that you know the system is beginning to become an advertising medium."

The purchase of two cable systems helped push the cable subscriber count up 170,000 to 1,137,000 at Continental Cablevision, which showed a 30.5% revenue gain because of that subscriber growth in 1985.

Privately held Continental, the 39th largest media company, also participated in a large stock buy-back plan in early 1986 to lessen Dow Jones & Co.'s 25% interest in the company. Dow Jones is the only corporate stockholder in Continental.

Continental, based in Boston, is the seventh largest multiple system operator in the U.S., operating 92 cable systems in 14 states. It closed out 1985 providing basic service subscribers with 1.3 million supplemental pay tv subscription, a 17% increase over a year earlier. As a result of its acquisition of two systems during the year, the company's asset base increased to $676 million, up 18.6% over 1984.

In February, 1985, Continental purchased for $13 million the remaining 60% it did not own of Commonwealth Cable Corp., Westfield, Mass., serving the Springfield-Chicopee area. As part of the purchase, Continental acquired a 68% interest in Natick Cablevision Corp., Natick, Mass.

As a clustering strategy, the next month Continental also purchased 3,000-subscriber PCNH Inc. system in Hampton, N.H., from Tele-Communications Inc., Denver, for $3.3 million. The system name since has been changed to Continental Cablevision of New Hampshire. The following month, TCI assumed Continental's 50% interest in Stellar Continental Cable, Chicago, which the company divested for $5.5 million.

Continental's Jacksonville, Fla., system was its success story in 1985. The system had 82,000 subscribers when acquired by Continental in 1984. It reported 120,000 at the end of 1985.

Continental carries a systemwide pay to basic ratio of 1:1.5, ranking it among the top 10 companies in the industry with such a high ratio. In addition to pushing increased pay units, Continental's various operating entities are seeking advertising revenues generally on a local level. Some of the New England systems are hooked up to various interconnects. The majority of advertising sales, however, are handled by an in-house sales force on a system-by-system basis.

Continental last December issued $200 million in subordinated debt to raise funds to buy back 6 million shares in what was termed a recapitalization plan. Continental then paid Dow Jones $50 a share, or $100 million, for 2 million shares of Dow Jones' 3.1 million shares, reducing DJ's stake in the company to 17% from 24.7%.

DJ, which needed the cash to finance its acquisition of Telerate, a computerized financial data company, had purchased the stock in 1981 at $25 a share. Continental had only 450,000 subscribers when DJ invested in the company five years ago.

Continental's president, Amos Hostetter, assumed the post of chairman last February. Succeeding him as president was Timothy Neher, previously exec vp.

Copley Newspapers recorded another year of continued growth for all its newspapers in 1985 in increasing companywide media revenues by 7.9% over 1984. Earlier this year the company acquired its 12th daily.

La Jolla, Cal.-based Copley, which operates newspaper properties concentrated in California and Illinois, also runs the profitable Copley News Service. The company's only nonmedia activities include a resort hotel and a computer service.

Copley, ranked the 38th largest media company, had combined daily circulation from its five California papers and six Illinois papers exceeding 727,500, up from 711,600 a year earlier, according to Robert F. Crouch, vp-finance.

The company's expanded coverage in a rezoned market area in San Diego resulted in increased circulation of its flagship newspapers, the morning San Diego Union and the evening San Diego Tribune. The Union reported an average daily circulation of 234,004 for the March 31, 1986, ABC audit period, up 5.1% from the same period in 1985. The evening Tribune's average daily numbers rose to 124,724, up 1.7%.

Copley president Hubert Kaltenbach attributes much of the San Diego circulation growth to the expanded coverage in five zones: Central or metropolitan, North County, North Coastal, South Bay and East County. Both the morning Union and the afternoon Tribune went from three to five main editions that were geared to meet the population growth in these metropolitan and suburban areas.

The broader coverage included communities served by smaller widely read evening newspapers, such as the Californian in El Cajon, Times-Advocate in Escondido and Blade-Tribune in Oceanside. Both Copley newspapers are expanding neighborhood news to win over new subscribers who have moved to San Diego to work in the growing high-technology and biomedical fields.

Advertiser acceptance of the new zones, however, has yet to meet earlier expectations at Copley. After failing to attract sufficient ad revenues, last fall the Union and Tribune cut back the number of days it sells space in its zones from six days a week to three.

Early this year Copley expanded its Midwest media base with the acquisition of the Courier in Lincoln, Ill., a daily with circulation of 7,000. The company's other Illinois newspapers include the State Journal-Register in the capital city of Springfield and five other dailies that ring metropolitan Chicago. All posted modest circulation gains during the past year.

Going into 1986, Copley's cable tv partnership, Copley/Colony Inc., began to generate its first revenues from its ownership and operation of cable tv systems in Southern California. The partnership is a joint venture with Colony Communications, owned by the Providence Journal Co., Providence, R.I.

The corporation currently has six cable franchises: Wilmington, San Pedro, Harbor City, Lomita, Costa Mesa and Cypress. It also covers part of unincorporated Orange County, which is presently inactive because there are too few homes to justify new construction. However, at the end of 1985 the cable franchises included more than 97,000 homes, with construction of five of the six franchises now virtually completed.

Copley continues to operate an electronic classified ad service called CLEO (Computer Listing of Employment Opportunities) in California. The service lists jobs in professional and technical areas, such as engineering and computer programing. The ads are purchased by area businesses and accessed by personal and business computer users via telephone. The system has been expanded from its base in Los Angeles to include all major metro areas in California.

The past year saw Copley put a hold on its negotiations with Chronicle Publishing and Hearst Corp. in San Francisco, McClatchy Newspapers in Sacramento, Kearns-Tribune Co. in Salt Lake City and Phoenix Newspapers Inc. to form an entity called Ponderay Corp., which would produce newsprint in Washington state. The venture was expected to be operational by 1987, but now Mr. Crouch of Copley says a decision probably will be forthcoming in the next several months.

Paper raises promo ante

Times Journal Co. spent almost $500,000 in radio advertising in its Washington market promoting circulation and classified advertising for the Journal papers in 1984 and 1985. The company has added tv in 1986, much of it in support of its redesigned Friday real estate section—now a tabloid insert—and will spend an estimated $1.5 million in radio and tv promotional efforts. The campaign covers the five suburban daily newspapers.

With circulation of its western states properties showing slight decreases—attributed to the depressed agricultural economy—and circulation at its Minneapolis paper holding close to year-earlier levels, Cowles Media Co. registered only slight revenue gains in 1985.

The Minneapolis-based company, whose lead property is the Minneapolis Star & Tribune, ranked the 47th largest media company in 1985 on the basis of its media revenues, which were up only 3.7% over the previous year. However, earnings increased by 22% to $19.2 million. Cowles' revenues and earnings come 100% from media.

The daily Minneapolis Star & Tribune had a decline of less than 1% in circulation to 382,499 for the six-month ABC report ended March 31, 1986. The Sunday Star & Tribune, however, showed a 3% increase to 612,604. James Alcott, vp-administration for Cowles, attributes the growth to editorial improvements made over the past two to three years. He says the new subscriptions came from the paper's primary market area.

Knight-Ridder Newspapers's competing St. Paul Pioneer Press & Dispatch showed a 5.6% decline in its daily circulation and a slight decline in Sunday.

The Star & Tribune raised its single copy price for the daily to 35 cents from 25 cents, and the Sunday price to $1.25 from $1. The increase was attributed to rising production costs.

Cowles announced this spring that it will accelerate its move to a new printing and production plant. Originally scheduled to be built in stages, reaching completion between 1985 and 1992, the plant now will be completed by late 1987. The company says it will save $10 million by this change, bringing the cost down to $100 million. The first two presses in the new plant will begin running in April, 1987, with the remaining three in operation by early 1988.

In November, 1985, Cowles sold its Information Publishing unit, a commercial printer, to American Spirit Company. After offsetting tax benefits, the proceeds of the sale were reported to be $2.9 million.

Cowles is monitoring the progress of its videotex pilot program, launched in October, 1985, and working to improve the service it provides to shoppers in the city's skyway system. The company reports it is getting 45,000 to 50,000 "touches" a week on its touch-screen information terminals. The first advertiser contracts are up for renewal this October.

The company is planning its growth strategy and is not ready to reveal what steps it might take, although expansion plans might include acquisitions in either print or broadcast.

The Rapid City Journal moved into a new $8 million printing and mailroom plant this year and David C. Sharp became president and publisher of the paper in November. He had been director of advertising.

David Cox became Cowles ceo; he already held the title of president.

The merger of Cox Communications into Cox Enterprises Inc. in 1985 created the 13th largest media company in the U.S. It cost the Cox family $1.26 billion to acquire the nearly 60% of stock it did not own in Cox Communications.

The combined unit reports 1985 media revenues of $1.37 billion, up 7% from revenues of both companies in 1984 before consolidation. Newspapers generated $644 million of the revenue; broadcasting, $311 million, and cable, $421 million, according to Cox Enterprises vp-cfo John R. Dillon. Broadcasting totals exclude a $50 million contribution from TeleRep, a media rep firm.

Anne Cox Chambers, once the U.S. ambassador to Belgium, and her sister, Barbara Cox Anthony, now lead a family that controls 97% of the stock of Cox Enterprises. Another 3% is reserved for management.

The company owns 21 daily newspapers, 22 weeklies and three monthlies. It also owns eight tv stations, 12 radio stations and 24 cable systems.

Cox in March, 1985, added the Orange Leader in Orange, Tex., to its newspaper stable. The daily has a 20,835 circulation, according to ABC audit reports for March 31, 1986. Cox sold Guide Newspapers in New Orleans after accusing the New Orleans Times-Picayune of using predatory pricing to try to monopolize the area's suburban print advertising market. Times-Picayune eventually bought the rival Guide's printing plant and offices for $8 million. The lawsuit then was dismissed.

The company's flagship newspaper, the Atlanta Constitution, had circulation of 251,042 for the six months ended March 31, 1986, compared with 235,044 for the same period in 1984, according to ABC.

The afternoon Atlanta Journal circulation averages rose to 187,816 from 185,112.

In broadcasting, the company in early June, 1985, agreed to buy WFTV in Orlando for $185 million, or $60 million more than SFN Cos. paid for the station 11 months earlier. The ABC affiliate is the eighth tv station owned by Cox.

In cable, Cox has embarked on a program to sell almost 30 of its operations. Among those sold after December or pending sale are Lewistown, Lockhaven and Tyrone, in Pennsylvania; The Dallas and Lower Columbia, in Oregon, and Great Neck, N.Y.

Cox boasts 1,318,260 basic cable subscribers, an increase of 3.9% over 1984. Its system in San Diego, Cal., is the largest in the U.S., with 266,125 subscribers.

Even with its divestiture of 282,000 customers, Cox remains the fifth largest multiple system operator in the country, according to Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau. Cox Cable reports an 11% increase in revenues.

Despite all the activity, Cox says it remains on an even course. "The Cox family has controlled both of these companies," Mr. Dillon says. "So it's really business as usual." And the usual is a far cry from the 1890s when 28-year-old James M. Cox paid $26,000 for the Dayton Evening (now Daily) News.

Twenty-two years later, Mr. Cox, by then also owner of the Springfield (O.) Press-Republic, was running for president.

Cox lost that 1920 race to Warren G. Harding. His running mate: A young New Yorker named Franklin Delano Roosevelt. After losing the election, Cox devoted himself to the media business, acquiring WHIO, the first radio station in the Dayton area in 1934.

Today, WHIO is No. 1 in am radio in Dayton with its adult contemporary format. And WHIO-FM's "beautiful music" format topped the fm list.

Cox also has established TeleRep, its national tv sales representation company. Cox says TeleRep is the third largest rep company in the U.S. in both billings and coverage. Coverage exceeded 63% of the nation in 1985.

Cox's Television Programming Enterprise is involved in syndicating several popular shows, including "Entertainment Tonight," "Star Search" and "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous." It plans a new entry this fall called "You Write the Songs," a showcase for talented new songwriters with Ben Vereen as host.

In September, Cox plans to syndicate the popular network cartoon program "The Smurfs."

Cox, which bought On Cable cable tv program guide in 1984, ceased publication during 1985. It closed the 1.5 million circulation monthly in the face of tough competition from the 5.5 million circulation Cable Guide. On Cable's general manager says when Cox went private, efforts at a merger collapsed and On Cable was stopped because it was unprofitable.

Cox reports one major change in personnel.

James O. Robbins took over as president of the Cable Television Division, replacing David Van Valkenberg, who joined a cable operation in Denver.

The company also has minority interests in two Florida papers, both nonconsolidated subsidiaries whose performances are not reflected in the revenue figures. They are the Miami News, once rumored to be about to close because of a circulation slide (that slide continued with circulation of 58,387 in March 31, 1986, vs. 60,286 in the previous ABC reporting period), and the News and Journal in Daytona Beach. Cox owns 49% of the Daytona Beach operation; 15% of the Miami News.

The News operates under a joint operating agreement with Knight-Ridder's Miami Herald.

Cox also owns 80% of Landsburg Co., which develops network series, movies and first-run syndication programs mainly for broadcast tv.

Cox's newest tv acquisition, WFTV in Orlando, continued for a seventh year to be the news leader in its market. Its Dayton, O., station, WHIO-TV, has led the market in news for at least a decade. It has double the news audience of the second-place station.

In Atlanta, Cox's headquarters city, ABC affiliate WSB-TV, the flagship station, is locked in what the station's vp-general manager Andrew Fisher calls a "back and forth battle" with Storer's CBS affiliate WAGA-TV and Gannett's WXIA-TV NBC affiliate for dominance in the crucial 6 p.m. news hour.

Recent Arbitron figures show WSB-TV with a 15 rating and 26 share for that time period; WAGA-TV, with 16/27, and WXIA-TV with 14/24. The February Nielsen's showed WSB-TV with a 16/28; WXIA-TV with 16/27, and WAGA-TV with 14/24. Says Mr. Fisher, "It's so close that it's fair to say it's a tie."

Crain Communications Inc., a new entry to the list of top 100 media companies, is in a period of digestion following a number of startups, relaunches and other editorial and business-side moves in 1985.

Crain, ranked 94th among the media companies in 1985, is called "one of the fastest-growing companies in publishing" by the Wall Street Journal. In 1985, the company's total revenues grew by 15.3% as its media business increased by 19%. The company focuses on specialty business publications such as ADVERTISING AGE, Automotive News, Crain's Chicago Business and Crain's New York Business. Publications represent 93% of total company revenues. Printing and consumer operations account for the remainder.

The Chicago-based company is expected to resume its ambitious growth activities after its digestive phase, which was not an inactive period on the acquisition side. The company in March purchased Media World, a London-based monthly covering the U.K. media scene.

A key development in 1985 was the introduction of two new weekly business publications: Crain's New York Business and Crain's Detroit Business, which join Crain's Chicago Business and Crain's Cleveland Business. CNYB, with a circulation of about 85,000, was introduced in January, 1985, and is facing fierce competition in the New York market.

The $7 million Crain expects to spend on the startup of CNYB, which has had a number of editorial-side changes since its debut, makes it the company's most expensive launch. To help reduce the competition CNYB has encountered, Crain in August, 1985, bought a rival local business paper, New York CityBusiness, from MCP Inc., Minneapolis, and merged it into CNYB.

Last September saw the introduction of Crain's New York Business Radio Network, a customized business news minute prepared and reported by CNYB editorial staff.

Crain's Detroit Business, which was introduced in February, 1985, has a circulation for the six months ended Dec. 31 of 31,198, which included 13,966 paid. It is being called the company's fastest-growing publication in terms of subscribers and over-all acceptance.

ADVERTISING AGE continued its leadership in the advertising trade field while facing intense competition from other trade publications as well as stepped-up coverage of advertising, marketing and media in consumer magazines and newspapers. Circulation for the six months ended Dec. 31 rose 2.8% from the year-earlier period, to 87,469, although advertising linage was down about 8%.

Early in 1985, AD AGE revamped its Thursday edition to emphasize features and "soft" news articles rather than the original news focus the publication had when it was introduced in April, 1984. But advertisers still did not respond to Thursday, and publication was discontinued in March, 1986. Many of Thursday's features since have been combined into the traditional Monday edition.

The only other publication discontinued at Crain was Crain's Illinois Business which ceased publication in late May, 1986. The company cited insufficient advertising. The quarterly, founded in 1982, had a controlled circulation of 25,000. The company at the same time decided not to exercise an option to buy a 50% stake in Washington Journalism Review, owned by H&C Communications. The company recently ended an arrangement in which it assisted WJR in its noneditorial functions.

Automotive News published its largest issue ever Oct. 30, 1985, a 378-page special issue marking the centennial of the automobile. Its 190 ad pages represented $1.26 million in billings, a Crain record. Articles and photos from the issue appeared in 100 newspapers via the Crain Syndicate. AN's circulation for the six months ended Dec. 31 rose 3.9% from the year-earlier period, to 64,246.

AutoWeek, the auto-enthusiast newsweekly, last September disclosed plans to change to a glossy 8½-by-11-in. magazine format from its tabloid format in order to compete better with the "buff books," the mainstream consumer auto magazines. The change, which took effect with the Jan. 6, 1986, issue, enables AutoWeek to reproduce color photographs with higher quality. Its smaller size is expected to make the weekly more competitive on newsstands. Circulation for the six months ended Dec. 31 rose 12.5% from a year ago, to 161,111.

City & State, a new tabloid newspaper focusing on the financing of local and state governments, was introduced in January, 1985. Circulation for the six months ended Dec. 31 totaled 30,697, including 781 paid; a long-term goal is a circulation of 100,000. C&S' parent publication is Pensions & Investment Age, which has a circulation of about 40,000.

Crain's Chicago Business, which has had notable growth on the advertising side, last September began producing local business reports to be aired by WBBM radio, Chicago. Circulation for the six months ended Dec. 31 fell 0.7% from a year ago, to 46,681.

Detroit Monthly is the new name, effective January, 1986, of what formerly was known as Monthly Detroit. The city monthly doubled its circulation as of last October, adding an equal amount of controlled circulation to its paid circulation by matching the demographics of its paid subscribers. Detroit Monthly's paid circulation for the six months ended Dec. 31 rose 1.4% from the year-earlier period, to 40,561; with the controlled circulation of 40,000, total circulation exceeds 80,000. A new publisher, Patricia Venuti, formerly advertising director of Crain's New York Business, was named in May.

Modern Healthcare increased its frequency to 26 issues a year, beginning in January, 1985, from 16. Circulation is about 79,000.

Crain entered a new communications field, radio, in January, 1985, when it set up Crain Broadcasting, a new subsidiary, to operate WWUS (fm), Big Pine Key, Fla., serving Key West.

The station was acquired from Lower Keys Broadcasting Co. and its owner, Robert Bell. The station complements Crain publications Florida Keys Magazine and Humm's Guide to the Florida Keys. These two publications and a telephone sales unit comprise Crain Press, the Reno-based sector of which was sold.

Crain established a joint book publishing venture in March, 1985, with National Textbook Co., Lincolnwood, Ill., in which the latter took over the operation of Crain Books, which had been Crain's independent book division.

The company's nonmedia activities in 1985—primarily outside printing, seminars and computer services—accounted for $7.2 million in revenues, compared with $9.1 million in 1984.

In the personnel area, Crain last year named William Morrow as senior vp-operations, based in Detroit, from managing tax partner of the Detroit region offices of Touche Ross & Co. H.L. Stevenson, former editor-in-chief of United Press International, became corporate editor.

Dispatch Printing Co., Columbus, ., took dramatic steps to reverse a ownward trend in circulation at its ad property, the Columbus Dispatch, y switching from evening to morning ublication, filling the time frame va- ated by its competitor, which shut own after termination of a joint oper- ting agreement between the two apers.

There was little movement on the evenue side at Dispatch Printing Co., he 72nd largest media company in 985, as revenues increased an esti- nated 2.8%. The private company, wned by the Wolfe family, publishes he only daily newspaper in Columbus nd a statewide regional magazine, nd also owns and operates two tv and wo radio stations.

Morning circulation and lack of ompetition, however, should stimu- te growth at the Columbus Dispatch, hich entered the morning field Jan. 1, 986. The switch marked the demise f Scripps Howard's Citizen-Journal, he market's longtime morning news- aper.

The beginning of the end for the cripps Howard paper began three ears ago when Dispatch Printing in- ormed Cincinnati-based Scripps oward it would not renew a joint op- rating agreement struck in 1959 and cheduled to expire Dec. 31, 1985. nder the JOA, the Citizen-Journal as housed and produced at the Dis- atch facility.

The JOA had become an albatross or Dispatch Printing, preventing the ispatch from converting to the po- ntially more lucrative morning mar- et. It also prevented the Citizen-Jour- al from becoming an afternoon aper. Scripps Howard closed the Citi- en-Journal on Dec. 31, 1985, rather han compete head-to-head with the ispatch in the morning, enter the af- rnoon market or sell the paper.

Dispatch Printing for a long time ad seen that more and more money ad to be spent on the Dispatch side ust to keep the numbers even," ac- ording to Terry De Vassie, assistant rculation director of the Dispatch, hile the Citizen-Journal "grew by its wn volition," he says, with promo- on supplied by the Dispatch as part of e JOA.

Just before the switch to morning, ispatch circulation dropped to less an 200,000. However, circulation for e three-month period ended March 1, 1986, rose to an unaudited 238,000 n a daily basis and 371,500 on Sun- ay. The Dispatch implemented an an- ual January rate increase, but a spe- al audit conducted by ABC will re- lt in an adjustment of the rates to flect the current cost per thousand. Most recent audited figures for the six- onth period ended Sept. 30, 1985, laced circulation at 202,114 for the vening edition and 362,745 for the unday paper. Those figures represen- d a slight decline from the preceding 2-month period.

Under the JOA, Scripps Howard as responsible for staffing and main- aining the Citizen-Journal on the edi- rial side, but the Dispatch provided xecutive positions and a separate cir- ulation staff for the Citizen-Journal. he same advertising staff served both apers. When it became apparent that he Citizen-Journal would cease publi- ation, the Dispatch operated with a ared-down crew in order to keep jobs pen for Citizen-Journal personnel in those departments for which it was responsible. As a result, the Dispatch was able to save jobs for Citizen-Journal executives, according to Mr. De Vassie, retaining salary and benefits, though not necessarily at the same position level.

Since the transition to morning, the Dispatch added 50 new employes to its editorial department to provide increased coverage, particularly in sports and local news. The Dispatch also increased coverage of the six counties contiguous to the paper's home, Franklin County. In August, 1985, the Dispatch launched a new zoned product, "Neighbor News," which covers six separate, marketable zones within Franklin County to serve advertisers and those readers.

The zoned editions replaced the paper's total market coverage product, which had suffered a lukewarm response from advertisers. Dispatch's tmc vehicle, in existence since 1978, had delivered advertiser's preprints within a midweek extra edition. But, Mr. De Vassie says, the program was disbanded in May, 1985, because the midweek edition "was usually void of preprints" and the zoned edition was already in the works.

The expanded and now morning edition of the Dispatch was promoted in January via sampling to 123,000 Sunday-only subscribers. It represented the only promotion of the Dispatch's morning edition and was "one of the single best things we did during the conversion," Mr. De Vassie says. Surveys revealed 59% of the Citizen-Journal circulation had overlapped the Dispatch to begin with, and the promotion enabled the paper to pick up 20% of the sampled audience. In order to avoid lawsuits from Scripps Howard, the Dispatch could not speak to the Citizen-Journal audience via direct contact and had to dispose of all its existing records on Citizen-Journal subscribers. A new subscription drive was launched the first week in April.

During the past year, the Dispatch began using Knight-Ridder's database and library service, Vu-Text, as an electronic library. The Knight-Ridder service is used by 21 other newspapers and the Associated Press.

Ohio magazine, a statewide regional publication, increased circulation to 100,580, of which 95,864 are subscribers. Subscription rates increased May 1 to $15 a year, up from $12. The monthly magazine averages 112 to 128 pages an issue.

WTHR, Dispatch's NBC-TV affiliate in Indianapolis, ranked No. 3 in the 6 p.m. news slot with a 20 share. It was bested by the ABC affiliate with a 23 share and CBS affiliate with a 22 share. WTHR's "Jeopardy" and "Wheel of Fortune" hour of programing dominates the 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. time period, doubling its closest competitors. The station's February primetime seven-day average tied with CBS in the Indianapolis market. NBC's over-all high ratings with programs such as "The Cosby Show," which commands a 50-plus share, continue to rub off favorably on WTHR, says Brian Beglane, director of marketing.

"AM Indiana—Track 13" debuted April 28 as the only local morning show in the market. It competes with "Donahue" in the 9 a.m. to 10 a.m. slot, Monday through Friday, and also will be opposite Oprah Winfrey's new show next fall. Hosted by Dick Wolfsie, former host of "Good Morning, New York" on WABC-TV, New York, "AM Indiana" airs from a broadcast studio in Indianapolis' Union Station, recently converted into a mall.

The promotional campaign at WTHR, "People you can count on," is echoed at Dispatch's second tv holding WBNS-TV, a CBS affiliate in Columbus. WBNS-TV ranks No. 1 in the 6 p.m. news slot in that market, Monday through Friday, followed by WCMH-TV (NBC) and WTVN-TV (ABC). A.C. Nielsen Co. ranks the 6 p.m. news at a 33 share and 18 rating, while the Arbitron rating stands at a 34 share and 18 rating.

WBNS-TV continues to feel the pressure exerted by new independent station WTTE, which "took 8 or 9 shares away from the over all market," says John Haldi, WBNS-TV program director. The station has restructured several time periods this past year. Notable are the unusual placement of "Trapper John, M.D." in the 10 to 11 a.m. slot and the airing of "M*A*S*H" reruns at 5 p.m., just before the local news. "M*A*S*H's" numbers climbed from single to double-digit shares and the show provides "a strong lead-in to the news," Mr. Haldi says. Last summer, the local news program was moved back a half-hour to 5:30 p.m. to compete directly with its two network-affiliate competitors. As a result, WBNS's local news program has conquered that time slot.

WBNS-FM is an easy listening radio station in the Columbus market. WBNS, the am station with an adult contemporary format, is billed as "the adult alternative" in tv and outdoor board advertising.

Donrey Media Group continues to do what it does best—grow and change. In recent months, Donrey added four new midwestern daily papers, a cellular phone company in Tulsa, Okla., and a catfish farm in Nevada.

The company, ranked the 48th largest media company, has its administrative headquarters in Fort Smith, Ark. But its president-ceo and sole owner, native Oklahoman Donald Reynolds, directs the media conglomerate, which he founded in 1940, from its new national headquarters in Las Vegas, site of the chain's largest newspaper.

Donrey remains "bullish on acquisitions," exec vp Fred Smith says. By mid-1986, the company owned 54 daily newspapers, 55 nondailies in 12 states, seven radio stations, one tv station, five Cablevision franchises, 12 outdoor advertising markets with about 13,000 outdoor boards, a 50% interest in Kilgore Cable system, Kilgore, Tex., and a 40% interest in Falcon Communications Cable, Los Angeles County, Cal.

With an ongoing program of acquisitions for growth, Donrey seeks newspapers in small to medium-size communities, often when they are passing from the hands of their founders or longtime owners and are going through transitions in management, reorganization or finance. For example, in 1985 Donrey bought the Norman (Okla.) Transcript from its two owners, a trust held by the wife, son and daughter of ex-publisher Harold Belknap, and Belknap's successor, Don Frensley. And it bought the Minot (N.D.) Daily News from the two families who had owned and managed that paper for about 65 years, the Dobsons and the Davies.

Daily circulation of the five-evening Norman Transcript fell slightly to 17,027 in the March 31, 1986, ABC reports compared with the corresponding period a year earlier. Sunday circulation during the same period was up 101 subscribers to 18,305. Daily circulation of the six-evening Minot Daily News fell 4% to 28,233 during the period.

Also in 1985, Donrey acquired the evening Clinton (Ia.) Herald and the evening Altus (Okla.) Times and its Sunday paper. The Clinton Herald dropped 2.1% in circulation, to 20,411 in March 31, 1986. The Altus Times carried a daily circulation of 5,963, down 13% for the period. Sunday was 6,703, down 11%.

Making a nonmedia but communications-related acquisition, Donrey bought a 92% interest in Tulsa's nonwireline car phone system, called Cellular One. Tulsa is one of 28 cities where Donrey has applied for cellular franchises.

Cellular One, which began services March 21, 1986, now has 10 cells or area transmitters around metropolitan Tulsa, two more than competitor United States Cellular Telephone Co., a subsidiary of TDS.

Donrey has been open to innovation in news and advertising dissemination. For example, in Bartlesville, Okla., the city's daily newspaper, Donrey's Examiner-Enterprise, and the Donrey Cablevision system are running a test of cable tv delivery of newspaper news, sports, classified ads and other material. If successful, Donrey says it may expand the print-cable linkage to other towns with a Donrey newspaper-cable tv combo.

All such new approaches haven't worked out for Donrey the past year. In Las Vegas it dropped out of a videotex partnership called InfoView because it wasn't producing to the company's expectations. Also, in Las Vegas, Donrey no longer participates in a new approach to outdoor advertising called MultiVision. This 14-by-48-ft. outdoor board has a computer-controlled mosaic surface of 35mm electronic cubes that alter the image every 20 seconds to 30 different advertising messages. The problem was poor resolution in the board graphics.

Donrey entered outdoor advertising in 1963 with its purchase of the Naegele properties in Las Vegas. Today it is a major force in U.S. outdoor, serving 12 markets in the Midwest, Southwest and Northwest.

"Donrey Outdoor had a record year in 1985," says Don Burris, vp, Donrey outdoor, broadcast, cable division. "This was despite the falloffs—the cutbacks—in tobacco and alcohol advertising," he adds. This falloff is made up by working the territory more energetically to get local independent advertising from banks, car dealerships, new types of products and services—car leasing, frozen yogurt, fast-food, he says.

The heart of Donrey continues to be its newspaper business, with dailies ranging from the Las Vegas Review-Journal, with 105,478 daily circulation on March 31, 1986, up 3.7%, and 122,090 Sunday, up 5.2%, to the Wewoka (Okla.) Times, with 1,610 for both daily and Sunday.

Combined average daily circulation for the 54 Donrey daily papers was about 874,000 in 1985, up 14.3%, largely through acquisitions. The 1985 tally also includes about 30,000 additional subscribers from Saturday editions in Bartlesville and Norman, Okla. Sunday's combined circulation for 1985 of 647,000 was up 9.7%.

A move with important implications for Donrey's newspaper acquisition program was a federal judge's ruling in August, 1985, that the subscription list acquired by Donrey Media Group when it bought the Washington (Ind.) Times-Herald is a depreciable asset for tax purposes. The company was aided in its case by the research of Morton Research, Washington, and Urban & Associates showing that the subscription list had a useful life of 23 years. The ruling is subject to IRS appeal.

Also related to its acquisitions program and increasing over-all efficiency is Donrey's new Information Systems Plan. This is a computer-based strategy for reaching out from Fort Smith headquarters to link Donrey units in a management information system. It should help to gather data quickly, avoid high information costs, and cut expenses in making acquisitions by reducing staff requirements.

Donrey ventured into a fast growing new food industry in 1985—catfish. The company capitalized on the geothermal springs at Donald Reynolds' Duckwater, Nev., property, using them for aquaculture. In a venture called Donrey Catfish Growers, catfish are being raised, processed and sold to wholesalers.

Mr. Reynolds conducts two nonprofit foundations to benefit the communities in which he does business. Donrey Public Foundations raises funds to send children to summer camp. The Donald W. Reynolds Foundation makes contributions and grants to aid civic and charitable organizations in health, culture and education. Each year the foundation awards $100,000 to junior-year journalism students at 10 selected universities. In 1984, the University of Nevada-Reno named its new journalism school the Donald W. Reynolds School of Journalism and Center for Advanced Media Studies.

Dow Jones & Co., New York, took steps in 1985 to expand beyond its traditional print media activity encompassing the Wall Street Journal, community newspapers and Barron's by purchasing a major share of Telerate Inc., a computerized financial data company.

The nation's 17th largest media company in media revenues, New York-based Dow Jones experienced slow growth in 1985, when over-all revenues and net income grew about 7%, which reflects its media activity because media account for 94.1% of DJ's total revenues.

DJ gave a boost to its most profitable division—information services—through its $282.3 million purchase of 32% of Telerate from Exco International, a British financial services company. DJ's share evolved from a deal it struck with Oklahoma Publishing Co. in August to acquire a combined 52% interest in Telerate Inc. The outlay is the largest in the company's history.

Telerate is expected to enhance DJ's existing news ticker and stock and news retrieval services among its electronic publishing offerings. DJ hopes its own and Telerate's data eventually may be accessible to home users and small companies worldwide.

The company moved to reduce its acquisition debt on the Telerate deal by selling 8% of its 25% interest in Boston-based Continental Cablevision back to Continental for $100 million in January, 1986.

During 1985, Dow Jones' leading publication, the Wall Street Journal, saw its advertising linage drop 5.2%, although increased rates ensured an advance in ad dollars. The company attributed the decline to industrywide softening in advertising during the year, although ad linage in 1984 did little more than break even as well. Classified advertising in the WSJ was off significantly during 1985, particularly help wanted and condominium ads.

DJ plans to boost the WSJ's ad rates about 7% in 1986. National and regional rates were increased 9.5% and 8%, respectively, in late 1985. The paper also has increased its annual subscription fee to $114 from $107. The 50¢ cover price remains unchanged. To further offset weakened ad revenue, the paper plans to trim costs in 1986 and keep them in line with revenue increases. The plan includes a hiring freeze.

So far in 1986, the WSJ has not rebounded. Ad linage for the first quarter ended March 31, 1986, declined 10.4%. The ABC six-month average as of March 31, 1986, placed the WSJ's circulation at 1,985,559, down from the year-earlier figure of 1,990,025, which was off 4.4% from 1984.

In a move to boost specialized advertising, the WSJ in 1985 expanded its editorial content with the introduction of special one-time sections on small business, financial planning and new technology. The paper expanded coverage of personal finance, completed its changeover to front-end pagination and bolstered its press capacity to 72 pages from the former 64-page limit.

The paper's plans to construct a $20 million printing plant in Oklahoma City were held up during the year over concern about local laws. Because the WSJ runs liquor ads, company officials feared that the printing plant would violate a 1959 Oklahoma law prohibiting alcoholic beverage advertising.

Negative publicity for the WSJ surrounding the R. Foster Winans case surfaced again in 1986 when the former reporter was convicted on 59 counts of conspiracy and criminal securities, wire and mail fraud and was sentenced to 18 months in prison and fined $5,000. Mr. Winans was convicted of leaking advance information about topics of the WSJ's "Heard on the Street" columns to outsiders.

DJ's Ottaway Newspapers showed a 3.7% gain in advertising volume during 1985 and a 12.9% gain in ad revenues for its 22 dailies.

On the magazine side, the weekly Barron's showed slight gains in advertising linage on a per-issue basis and in circulation during 1985 and an over-all ad revenue improvement of 6.1% because of higher rates. Circulation in 1986 gained 1.4% to 264,200. American Demographics took off as circulation increased 38% to 14,500 and ad revenues rose 46%. Together, the two magazines had estimated revenues of $32 million.

Both Barron's and the Ottaway operation remained static the first quarter ended March 31, 1986. Ad linage for the period was up 2.5% at Ottaway and 0.1% at Barron's, although advertising at the latter was off 7.6% on a per-issue basis. Both Ottaway and Barron's recorded modest circulation increases during the quarter.

During 1985, ad revenues at the company's Asian Wall Street Journal increased 17.2% and circulation gained 4.9%. The paper's European edition gained 16.9% in circulation and 25.4% in ad revenue, although it continued to operate at a loss.

DJ's information services, which include database publishing and the DJ news wires, recorded 1985 operating earnings of $17.7 million, up 160.3% from 1984, on revenues of $102.2 million, up 19%. The unit in 1986 plans to develop its Corporate America Wire specifically to serve executives.

DJ's major nonmedia activity is book publishing, which totaled $54.6 million in 1985, up 10%. The company also generates revenues from newsprint operations.

Amid the mania of corporate takeovers, DJ has taken steps to retain its independence. Shareholders at its annual meeting in April, 1986, adopted anti-takeover measures that include staggered terms for board members, "fair price" measures requiring a prospective purchaser to make the same offer to all stockholders, and the inclusion of noneconomic factors among "relevant factors" considered in prospective takeover moves.

Pulliam, a newspaper titan

Central Newspapers is the creation of Eugene Collins Pulliam. Born in Ulysses, Kan., Mr. Pulliam learned his craft from William Rockhill Nelson, publisher of the Kansas City Star when Mr. Pulliam was a reporter for the paper. From 1930 to 1934, he and Texas millionaire Charles Marsh built a 25-paper chain called General Newspapers, but Mr. Pulliam pulled out when he became uneasy with the strong commercial orientation of Mr. Marsh. Mr. Pulliam took the Oklahoma and Indiana papers, but then sold off all but the two Vincennes, Ind., papers which he merged, before assembling today's Central family. He died in 1975.

BUSINESS WITH BILL*

[Frankly, an advertisement]

Yes, frankly, this is an ad. Our objective? If we can reflect to you the uniqueness of our Bill Communications' properties, then you can judge us even better as a reader, perhaps an advertiser, and maybe even a future fellow employee.

John Hartman
Chairman of the Board
Bill Communications, Inc.

Back in 1970, when I first joined the Company, Market Statistics was a friendly place. After the reorganization in 1971, it remained friendly, but it also became a place to explore, develop, and grow. We formed a nucleus of skillful, hard-working professionals, with Bill Communications management behind us, encouraging us along the way.

In just a few years, Market Statistics is at the top of the demographic research community in the nation. Our statistical publications rank high in prestige, our individual sales analyses are being used by our clients in their marketing decisions, and our demographic reports are commonly referred to by firms across the economic spectrum. The diversity of our business keeps our professional interest at high levels, but we pursue only those ideas which we feel will be of value to our readers and clients and at the same time will satisfy our professional standards. In this pursuit of advancement, it's important to know that the support of our corporate heads at Bill will always be there.

I'm proud of my long association with Bill Communications and, specifically, with Market Statistics, where we still retain our humanity in the midst of the business labyrinth.

"We aren't in the business of selling advertising, we're in the business of making magazines that serve our readers well." A cliché? I thought so, the first time I heard a Bill corporate officer make that pronouncement. But I hadn't worked at Bill Communications very long before I learned that behind those words is surprising substance.

At Bill, the commitment to editorial excellence is a "given" that colors every corporate endeavor. In the budgetary process, for example, editor and publisher make their case as a team for each year's budget—and together stand accountable for the results. It is never a case of "let's see how little you can spend to put out the book" but rather, "justify what you need to do the best job possible."

The climate of cooperation born of shared risks and rewards helps foster good team relationships—and thus, good editorial content—here at Restaurant and Hotel Design. It keeps all of us in synch as we pursue our common goal of producing the best possible magazine for our specialized field.

Freedom . . . to succeed . . . or to fail . . . What more could one ask for in business? By freedom, I mean being provided the financial tools, the responsibility and management encouragement to realize your own personal concepts of effective, profitable business communications.

The only restrictions I've found on evaluating a new or different publishing opportunity at Bill is that it must (1) fill an editorial need in the marketplace, (2) offer the opportunity for becoming a quality publication, and (3) provide a good long-term potential for profitability against the calculated investment.

The hallmark of BillCom is decentralization and what's called participative management. Decentralization precludes the layers of hierarchical authority that, in a large corporation, blunt the impact you have on the corporation.

Participative management means that everyone you work with participates in the decision-making. It's one of the toughest management concepts . . . and it can cause problems. But when it works, it is by far the most rewarding for the person.

Above all, you have the freedom to succeed, and to fail. And the proof of the value of this freedom is in the pudding of success I've watched BillCom enjoy over the past 24 years.

Since divesting itself of high-performing Corinthian Broadcasting two years ago Dun & Bradstreet Corp. has generated just as strong, if not stronger, performances from its more scaled down and focused media properties. In 1985, the New York-based company recorded year-to-year growth in media revenues of 22.9%.

Media at D&B, the 8th largest media company, accounted for 62% of total D&B operating revenues and 75.7% of total operating income.

D&B derives its media revenues from two business segments: the largely ad-generated publishing segment, with 22 trade and professional publications produced in the segment's technical publishing division as well as telephone directories and airline schedule guides; the marketing services segment, which includes Donnelley Marketing cooperative mailing programs, A.C. Nielsen Co.'s marketing and media research groups and high-tech researcher Dataquest.

D&B's only nonmedia business segment is business information services, which includes D&B credit services, administration of small-business group insurance plans, commercial collection and computer services.

The publishing segment contributed 6.8% of total operating revenue and 8.9% of total operating income in 1985. The segment is basically comprised of Technical Publishing's 22 magazines, which posted moderate revenue gain on lower operating income. The unit's ad pages dropped, reflecting the downturn in heavy industries and the technology markets served by the publications.

Datamation, which serves the information-processing market, and Test & Measurement World, a magazine serving engineers responsible for testing high-tech products at the point of manufacture, both experienced growth during the year. D&B says Highway & Heavy Construction boosted its market share and showed a gain in ad pages as a result of that industry's rebound.

During 1985, D&B expanded its activity in Yellow Pages classified directory publishing via the Donnelley Directory subsidiary. Early in the year, the company split Donnelley into units handling Yellow Pages for telephone companies and for independently published directories. Donnelley acquired four classified-directory companies during the year and published new directories in Florida, Oklahoma and Texas. Donnelley during the year also launched Talking Yellow Pages, a service that allows telephone users to access databases of information on products and services.

Donnelley Directory lost two major contracts during the year, with Bell of Pennsylvania and Diamond State Telephone in Delaware. The company says it plans to market its own Yellow Pages directories in those areas in 1986.

Also in the publishing segment, D&B's Official Airline Guides had an acceptable year, as usage of the on-line version of the service increased.

In the first quarter of 1986, the publishing segment led all segments in revenue growth with a 23.3% gain, compared with business information, up 9.8%, and marketing services, up 5%.

D&B's only major 1985 divestitures were the sale of three A.C. Nielsen Co. units: Compucon, Neodata France and Neodata Germany. However, most of the 13 cash acquisitions for which D&B paid $66 million in 1985 were to support Nielsen and Donnelley.

A.C. Nielsen Co., acquired by D&B in 1984, fell to pressure from the three major networks to delay the introduction of its people meter until September, 1987, a year later than planned. Tested since January, 1986, the meters were showing lower demographic ratings for several popular prime-time shows. This called into question whether the traditional diary method had been overstating viewing levels in prime and daytime.

The rise of the people meter marketed by London-based AGB Research forced Nielsen management to consider alternatives to its tv audience measurement methodology.

Nielsen's marketing research unit in 1985 introduced Scantrack Plus, a device used by major package-goods companies to supplement scanning-produced marketing data with information on in-store promotions and couponing. By yearend, 25 major U.S markets were covered by Scantrack Plus. Nielsen plans to add information on tv advertising spending and tv viewing to the service in 1986.

Effective last Jan. 1, A.C. Nielsen president N. Eugene Harden was elected an exec vp of D&B. James Murray Jr., D&B Plan Services, was named to the additional post of senior vp-customer information needs.

The company in 1985 also acquired: Thomas Cook Travel USA, formerly the North American travel agency division of Thomas Cook Group Ltd.; National Group Administrators, a third-party insurance administrator, and Southwestern Directory Co., an independent Yellow Pages publisher.

Static circulation and a modest increase in total advertising despite a decline in ad pages in the business fortnightly, Forbes, led to a flat year in media at parent Forbes Inc.

The New York-based company owned by flamboyant editor-in-chief Malcolm Forbes ranked as the 89th largest media company in media revenues in 1985, which accounted for an estimated 75.7% of total revenues.

Forbes' also publishes American Heritage and Forbes Special Situation Survey, that latter through the Forbes Investors Advisory Institute. The survey, usually issued monthly, is a 7-8 page report on a special stock situation. Subscription is $500 annually.

Nonmedia holdings at Forbes are real estate holdings—Laucala Island in the Fiji Islands, Sangre de Cristo Ranch and Lake of the Ozarks, a resort.

The only recent change in the Forbes' media family has been the January, 1986, purchase of American Heritage, the 137,316 circulation every-other-monthly history magazine. Forbes bought the publication from American Heritage Publishing Co. and Samuel Reed, a principal investor.

Forbes magazine retained its position in 1985 as the third largest magazine in ad pages, according to Publishers Information Bureau, with a total of 3,711, down 3.2%. It trails rival and No. 1 Business Week, which had 4,214 pages, down 15.2%, and People magazine with 3,866, down 4.9%. The declining pages mirrored the general over-all malaise in the magazine field in 1985.

The company's benchmark for 1985 was surpassing rival Fortune in ad revenues for the first time in its history. PIB initially reported Forbes' gross ad revenue at $115.72 million, up 5.5%, compared with Fortune's $115.74 million, a 3.6% increase. PIB, however, later found $100,000 in previously unreported ad revenue for Forbes. That number, says Don Garson, communications director at Forbes Inc., put Forbes ahead of Fortune. While Business Week ad revenues dropped 8.5%, they continued ahead of both rivals, at $169.1 million.

Mr. Garson says Forbes, which has "never been shy about" calling attention to itself, would have used the information in a splashy new ad campaign had it known earlier. Mr. Garson says it may still call attention to the matter.

Forbes circulation reached 732,607, up less than 1% from 1984.

American Heritage has had few changes since the ownership turnover. Ad pages in 1985 ran about 45% ahead of 1984 levels, but 1984 levels were token. Currently, advertising is about 20% of editorial. The publication started taking advertising in 1981. American Heritage, bought for an estimated $8 million to $9 million, has been sold twice in the past eight years. McGraw-Hill sold the 31-year-old magazine in 1978. The magazine generated an estimated $2.3 million in revenues in 1985.

The purchase of the publication brought into the fold another Forbes family member, Timothy Forbes, named to the new post of president of American Heritage. The younger Forbes, 33, is a 1976 graduate of Brown and a former screenwriter whose credits include scripts for the "Disney Sunday Movie" and other films. Forbes Inc. intends to move American Heritage from Rockefeller Plaza location to its Fifth Ave. offices in New York later this year.

Malcolm Forbes, Forbes' editor-in-chief, is said to be a longtime subscriber and fan of American Heritage, which in 1985 won two National Magazine Awards for general excellence and best single topic issue.

Forbes continued to run its hard-hitting "capitalist tool" trade ad campaign via Doremus & Co., New York. A recent spread promoting the Forbes 500 singled out its competitors as "downright silly" and "obsolete."

In 1985, Forbes also began its first tv campaign to boost circulation, though Mr. Garson says it is meant more as an image-building campaign than a circulation drive. The upbeat campaign, via Zadoc Media, New York, features computer-driven animation that visually demonstrates its script. The commercial notes, for example, that Forbes doesn't "follow the herd," a comment that is followed by animation showing a herd of sheep. The campaign is airing on Financial News Network and Cable News Network.

Forbes says its average reader has annual household income of $138,935 and has a net worth of $1.146 million.

While Forbes' illustrious editor-in-chief has never appeared in a campaign for his magazine, Mr. Forbes this year was seen in another commercial touting the New York Post. A good friend of Rupert Murdoch, owner of the Post, Mr. Forbes agreed to be part of that paper's campaign to promote its business pages. Mr. Forbes is seen standing in front of his desk, holding the paper and saying that while he reads other newspapers, to keep up to the minute he reads the Post.

In addition to his Post campaign, Mr. Forbes continues to make the news pages regularly with his widely publicized travels and numerous awards. In July, Mr. Forbes promises yet another international escapade—this time a "good-will tour" through Japan with an entourage of motorcyclists.

Mr. Forbes does it all for fun, but as Mr. Garson says coyly, "I'd be lying if I said we weren't the beneficiaries [of the publicity]."

The intrafamily struggle for control of Freedom Newspapers had no apparent effect on the chain's profitability and revenues. A pending court case, however, could result in the dissolution of the chain in 1986.

The Santa Ana, Cal.-based company is ranked 37th in media revenues. All Freedom operations are media. It operates 29 daily and three weekly newspapers in 11 markets across the U.S. (total daily circulation of 953,506), including its flagship, the Orange Country Register in Santa Ana.

This year Freedom continued to expand into broadcast with the March 4 acquisition of WRGB-TV, Schenectady, N.Y., from General Electric Co. for a reported $57 million. Now the owner of five tv stations, the company purchased its first in 1982.

Heirs of R.C. Hoiles, who bought the OCR, then the Santa Ana Register, in 1935, are locked in a battle for control or dissolution of the chain. Principals are the three Hoiles children, who each own about a third of the privately held company, and their families.

Last fall, R.C. Hoiles' son Harry placed the value of the company at $1.01 billion when he offered to buy the other family members' shares for a total of $682.5 million or to sell them his shares for $330 million. Subsequent offers by Mr. Hoiles, which also were rejected, reached as high as $900 million. In the absence of a sale, he has filed suit to dissolve the corporation. The suit is scheduled for trial this summer. Cited among the points of contention is his objection to Freedom's expansion into tv.

This recent litigation has permitted details of the financial performance of the closely held company to surface. Freedom's earnings were $26.4 million in 1984, on revenues of $295.8 million in 1984. Advertising Age estimates total sales increased 10% to $325 million in 1985. The OCR reportedly accounts for more than half of Freedom's revenues and cash flow.

Audited ABC figures show the OCR paid circulation average for the six-month period ended March 31, 1986, was 300,985, up 3.1% from the same period a year earlier. The Sunday OCR increased circulation 4.2% to 340,427. By year's end, the OCR had increased its lead over the Los Angeles Times in Orange County to 115,996 daily and 106,242 Sunday. The OCR gains in Orange County mirrored its over-all gains as the largest circulation newspaper in Orange County, while the Times lost circulation in this affluent suburban area south of Los Angeles.

The OCR offers 32 community editions, which cover the county with zoned advertising capability and local news coverage, providing the newspaper with total market coverage. The community editions are mailed to more than 300,000 households each week. On Tuesdays, they are inserted in the OCR.

In April, 1985, the Register added Orange County to its title, about the time the paper won the Pulitzer Prize for spot news photography for its coverage of the 1984 Summer Olympic Games. The OCR also continued to maintain its technological lead in the industry with the addition of a color pagination system to produce faster and better color, said to be the first of its kind in the world.

Acquisition of WRGB in Schenectedy brings the total number of Freedom's tv properties to five, all CBS affiliated stations, except for WTVC, Chattanooga, an ABC affiliate. WRGB, according to Gary Chapman, tv director for Freedom, was one of the first tv stations to begin broadcasting in the U.S., beginning as a tv testing facility and the lead station for General Electric Co. in 1928.

Four of the five tv stations are ranked the No. 1 news stations in their markets, including WRGB; WTVC; KTVL, Medford, Ore., and KFDM-TV, Beaumont, Tex. Lagging behind but gaining ground is WLNE, New Bedford, Mass., which, according to Mr. Chapman, has moved from No. 3 to No. 2 position in late night news in Arbitron ratings.

Three major construction projects undertaken during 1985 include completion of a new plant for the Appeal Democrat in Marysville, Cal., a two-story corporate office building in Irvine, Cal., and a 180,000-sq.-ft. five-story office tower adjacent to the OCR's existing plant in Santa Ana. The latter two are expected to be completed this year.

Keeping pace with circulation gains at the OCR were increases in advertising linage. According to Media Records, in 1985 the paper ranked No. 1 nationally in full-run daily advertising, No. 3 in classified, No. 4 in retail and No. 4 in total advertising, up from No. 6 position in 1984.

Among Freedom's other newspaper properties, the Colorado Springs Gazette-Telegraph, with a combined daily circulation of 107,448, up 5.7%, is the next largest after the OCR. In early 1986, the company also acquired assets of the defunct Colorado Springs Sun after the rival newspaper ceased publication.

For Gannett Co., Rosslyn, Va., 1985 was a watershed year as it either concluded or began acquisition deals totaling more than $1 billion, including the early 1986 purchase of the Evening News Assn. and an agreement to buy the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times.

Gannett was the nation's sixth largest media company in 1985, its media revenues accounting for 97.4% of total revenues of $2.21 billion. Over-all revenues combined with those of Evening News Assn., Detroit, which Gannett formally acquired in February, 1986, gives Gannett a pro forma reading of $2.51 billion, up an additional 14%.

Gannett, heretofore known primarily as a profit maximizer in small markets and often monopolistic situations, in 1985 suddenly began offering itself as a white knight to the likes of CBS and Time Inc. and gaining the reputation of getting what it goes after. The big deals included the $200 million purchase of the Register & Tribune Co., Des Moines, Ia.; the $717 million acquisition of the Evening News Assn., Detroit, and, early in 1986, the $300 million purchase of Courier-Journal and Louisville Times.

Among the logotypes, mastheads and call letters brought into the Gannett fold during 1985 were the Des Moines Register; Detroit News; WDVM-TV, Washington; KVUE-TV in Austin, Tex.; the Desert Sun in Palm Springs, Cal.; Family Weekly; the Triangle Sign Co. in Chicago; the Star in Peekskill, N.Y.; the Jackson Sun in Jackson, Tenn.; Daily News in Indio, Cal.; the Vinland Times-Journal and the Millville Daily in New Jersey; KTKS (fm), Dallas-Fort Worth, and, in spring, 1986, the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times.

Having brought Gannett into the forefront as one of America's largest media companies, Allen H. Neuharth, Gannett's ceo since 1973 and chairman since 1978, passed on the ceo title to John J. Curley, Gannett's president, in late May at the company's shareholders meeting. Mr. Neuharth will now concentrate on long-range planning and acquisitions.

The top priority within the Gannett sphere of operations is presently USA Today, the almost 4-year-old national daily newspaper that analysts estimate lost $85 million in 1985. The paper, launched in September, 1982, is supposed to break even by the end of 1987, according to Gannett's original five-year plan. Mr. Curley says the paper is on target and will break even in the fourth quarter of 1987.

During 1985, USA Today's ad pages climbed to 3,375, representing a 44% gain in volume and a 67% gain in revenue over 1984.

Despite a price increase from 35 cents to 50 cents in late summer, 1985, paid circulation at USA Today increased 0.5% to 1,168,222 in March, 1986, according to ABC. Total circulation, including so-called bulk sales to hotels and airlines, was 1.41 million as of March, 1986.

In 1985, Gannett pulled 14 of its newspapers out of the ABC in a dispute over bulk circulation. While bulk is not a major issue with most newspapers, for USA Today it is vital. With some 250,000 papers distributed by hotels, airlines and other institutions and another 450,000 cut-rate, bulk sales now coming on stream as a result of a promotion with General Mills, bulk is becoming increasingly important to the national daily.

Gannett, however, apparently rethought its position regarding ABC after 50 publishers, among them the publishers of the country's largest and most respected newspapers, issued a statement supporting the ABC. Gannett returned the 14 dailies to ABC membership early this year.

Gannett's purchase and subsequent revamp of CBS Magazines' Family Weekly helped transform the Sunday magazine business while putting Gannett squarely in the eye of a storm swirling around the remake of FW into USA Weekend. As its name implies, USA Weekend bears a close resemblance to USA Today, and that led some 130 newspaper publishers to drop FW when it became USA Weekend.

Undaunted, Gannett began signing several big dailies, including the Dallas Times-Herald, Denver Post, Chicago Tribune, Houston Post and Detroit News to carry USA Weekend, in the process picking up all but about 200,000 of the 4.5 million circulation it lost to Parade magazine as publishers defected.

In the broadcasting segment, Gannett made some major moves in 1985 that made the company a much bigger force in the business. Though Gannett had tv outlets in Atlanta, Boston, Denver, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Oklahoma City and Phoenix, when it acquired (as part of the ENA deal) WDVM-TV, the CBS affiliate in Washington, gaining a much-sought-after local editorial voice in the nation's capital. It also added KVUE-TV, Austin, Tex., in the deal with ENA. The tv division was separated from radio beginning this year.

In its newly formed radio division, revenues were up 32% in 1985 (though the company does not yet break out the figures for radio alone). Gannett ended 1985 with 14 radio properties. There are now 16, including KTKS (fm) in Dallas, acquired in early 1986, and KHIT (fm), Seattle, acquired in May, 1986. That number will grow to 18 pending FCC approval of a just announced agreement to purchase the combo, KCMO and KBKC-FM, in Kansas City, from Summit Radio of Kansas City for $11.2 million.

Relocation moves also were announced for both the tv and radio divisions. Gannett will move its radio division from St. Louis to Los Angeles in 1986 and its tv division from Atlanta to Washington in mid-1987.

With the number of newspapers running GFV Communications free-standing inserts up 13% in 1985, boosting over-all circulation 2.5%, and the average frequency per insert growing substantially from 1984, total revenues for this producer of Valassis newspaper inserts have improved 28% in fiscal 1986 from the previous year.

The Livonia, Mich.-based company ranked 43rd among media companies with media revenues of $270 million for the fiscal year ended April 30, 1986, up 28% from $211 million in 1984.

In 1985, GFV began to experience an evolution in the type of clients served. In addition to its traditional package goods clients, the company began to serve larger numbers of marketers of healthcare products, small appliances and household batteries. "The variety continues to expand," says Barry Hoffman, GFV general counsel.

GFV is the largest U.S. producer of free-standing inserts. These are the cents-off, coupon-bearing folders reproduced in high-quality paper, four-color and typically placed in Sunday newspapers to promote sale of food, household and personal products. The traditional GFV client presents artwork or film for printing and distribution by GFV. GFV offers a design service for clients needing that help. Its fees are based on creative, printing costs and total circulation.

Total distribution of GFV's Valassis inserts also continues to expand. The number of newspapers served—almost all of them Sunday editions—is up about 13%, to 289 (in early 1986) from about 250 in 1984; frequency in 1985 jumped to 33 times annually from 26 the previous year; circulation per insert is up about 2.5% to 47.1 million from 46 million in 1984; and total annual circulation climbed to 1.56 billion in 1985 from slightly more than 1 billion in 1984.

Between January, 1986, and May, GFV has added 13 newspapers nationwide, with circulations totaling about 910,000. A strategy seems apparent in these additions: They are mostly the same size, between 40,000 and 60,000, except for the San Antonio (Tex.) Express-News with 229,863 for its Sunday paper as measured by ABC for the six-month period ended March 31, 1986. The other newspapers and their Sunday circulations for the same period: In Massachusetts, the Brockton Enterprise, 62,992; Lawrence Eagle-Tribune, 60,750; Framingham Middlesex News, 53,892, and Lowell Sun, 56,365. Also, the Atlantic City, N.J., Press, 87,197; York (Pa.) Daily Record, 40,594 (a morning, six-day paper); Gainesville (Fla.) Sun, 53,646, and Ocala (Fla.) In a seemingly rapid turnover, GFV in the fall of 1985 sold the JAMI Group, a Fort Lee, N.J., list management company GFV had bought in September, 1984. GFV will say only the sale was "for business reasons."

Promotion of Valassis inserts continued at a substantial level in 1985 with spending again, as in 1984, at about $500,000 for print media.

As the marketing needs of advertisers have grown more varied, production of Valassis inserts has become more complex. Products increasingly are being promoted with different messages across the country or even in the same region to meet varying test marketing programs, changing product availability, and multiple advertising strategies.

On line are its two new production facilities, Thomas C. Lane Publishing Co. in Durham, N.C., and Valassis Color Graphics in Wichita, Kan. These are state-of-the-art plants for heat-set offset lithography, using custom-designed printing equipment, robots, wire-guided vehicles for product movement in-plant. The original plant in Livonia, Mich., a Detroit industrial suburb, is the largest of the plants handling heavy production, including those runs that are too big for the other two.

Distribution of Valassis inserts moves through regional centers in Ridgefield, Conn.; New York; Atlanta; Chicago, and Los Angeles. In addition, GFV spots field representatives at various locations around the U.S. to give customers local attention.

A glance at a Valassis insert tells something about the genesis of these slick addenda to the Sunday paper.

George P. Valassis established the four-color, fsis during the early 1970s when he concluded high-volume consumer products—especially food—could not be depicted successfully in only black and white coupons. Operating from his Livonia printing plant, he introduced the four-color, cents-off coupon in the Detroit area.

Today four major players compete in the fsi marketplace, GFV and its three main competitors: NCC, based in Connecticut; Quad Inserts of New York and Pewaukee, Wis., and Market Showcase, New York.

Coupons, as such, are a highly competitive field, including not only fsis but also direct mail, coupon pacs, bound-in magazine inserts and on-door promotions. But fsis are the Valassis specialty, and that's where GFV sees continuing success.

Tv's shareholders split
CBS has surfaced as a potential buyer of Boston's WNEV-TV, one of the few remaining major market stations that's locally owned. But while one faction of WNEV shareholders argues selling for a good price in a bull market, another faction likes running a broadcast station. CBS, with four owned stations, would have five in the top six markets with WNEV.

and to increased advertising revenues.

The over-all gain, which came despite a decline in advertising revenues from the farm periodicals, made HBJ the 76th largest media company. Media represents only 14% of total sales at HBJ, which is involved in parks, insurance and book publishing in addition to trade magazines.

The bulk of HBJ's publishing activity consists of textbooks and other instructional materials for kindergarten to university students. Combining revenues from HBJ's school department with those of Coronado Publishers and the Psychological Corp., the company is among the country's largest educational publisher.

HBJ Publications, which includes 121 titles for business, industry and the professions, also publishes newsletters in connection with many of these publications and coordinates trade and consumer shows. Newsletter revenues are merged into those for magazines in this report.

Most business magazines and directories under the HBJ umbrella are controlled circulation publications. Distributed free to professionals, manufacturers and product dealers, the periodicals are supported by advertising.

During the year, the publications division acquired Pocket Survival Guide and "Showpower" from Media Group Ltd., a Los Angeles-based communications company. Pocket Survival Guide is distributed before and during major industry shows and professional conventions, providing data on show events. More than 45 such guides are published annually.

"Showpower" is a series of tv commercials produced and designed to air concurrently in cities where major shows are held. Patrick M. O'Rourke, former president of HBJ's Beckley-Cardy Co., the world's largest school supplies dealer, was named president of the two new HBJ acquisitions.

HBJ in late May, 1986, bought Oklahoma/Texas Farmer-Stockman magazines from Oklahoma Publishing Co., Oklahoma City. Terms were not disclosed. At about the same time it sold its financially struggling Legal Times, a weekly tabloid newspaper, to Am-Law Newspapers Corp. for an estimated $3 million.

The company also announced a series of promotions within its publications division. Named group vps were Bill Dolan, Jim Donnelly and Bob Early. Mr. Dolan is publisher of the beverage industry publications, while Mr. Donnelly is publisher of the energy publications, and Mr. Early is publisher of the lawncare publications.

Pete Sullivan and Larry Cohen were named group publishers. Mr. Sullivan's publication responsibilities include the manufacturing and plastics titles, where Mr. Cohen oversees the newest operation, Group Travel Publications and Services. Other promotions include Bob Hillique to the new position of publishing director of the candy magazines, Tom Hutchinson to publisher of Home & Auto magazine and Bob Elliott to publisher of Dairy Field.

Apart from the publications division, HBJ invested in two startup ventures in 1985. Learned & Tested, the Education Co., was started in Austin, Tex., along with HBJ Learning Boards. Each fashions materials to meet local specifications for students with special learning needs as well as for 4-year-olds, the latter representing a new market for the company.

Through a stock swap valued at $23.8 million, HBJ acquired Cypress Gardens in Florida and immediately made plans to stop the attendance slide at the amusement park, situated close to HBJ's Sea World in Orlando. In the same package, the company bought Circus World, but closed it down to convert it to "Boardwalk and Baseball," a baseball park with thrill rides.

The company added to its insurance properties by acquiring two units of Home Insurance Co. for $130 million. The subsidiaries are Federal Home Life Insurance Co. and PHF Life Insurance Co., both of Battle Creek, Mich. These have been added to HBJ's underwriting company, Harvest Life Insurance Co., which sells insurance through two New York agencies and accident and health and life policies to rural dwellers in the Midwest.

Harte-Hanks Communications, which returned to private status in a leveraged buyout in 1984, experienced revenue growth of 10% in 1985 as it continued its aggressive expansion by trading or buying a slew of dailies and nondailies, starting a Sunday supplement for its Texas papers and entering the magazine field.

Harte-Hanks was the nation's 24th largest media company in 1985.

San Antonio, Tex.-based Harte-Hanks derives all its revenues from media operations: Newspapers, magazines, tv, broadcasting, cable and direct marketing.

"We want to be a growth company and build around five core businesses —newspapers, television, direct marketing, shoppers and cable," says Robert G. Marbut, Harte-Hanks president-ceo. He says Harte-Hanks has a growth strategy plan for each of the core segments, "and some of the steps [taken in 1985], such as the newspaper acquisitions, are part of it. Collectively we hope this will give us better than average opportunity for growth."

Harte-Hanks in 1985 took measures to fulfill its growth strategies by acquiring a satellite master antenna tv operation in Miami Beach, the San Antonio Monthly magazine, a number of dailies and nondailies in Boston, Atlanta and Dallas, and by starting Texas Weekly, a Sunday supplement that is now the largest print media buy in Texas.

This activity mirrored an aggressiveness exhibited in 1984 when the company added cable tv systems with 100,000 subscribers in 10 states, expanded weekly advertising shoppers by more than 800,000 circulation in selected markets, launched KENS II tv channel over the San Antonio cable system and established a nationwide sales force for Harte-Hanks Direct Marketing.

The newspaper publishing business continues to be its lead media sector. The company owns and operates 23 daily newspapers and more than 100 nondaily publications, including community newspapers, city magazines, military base publications and targeted publications.

The company's largest newspaper is the Corpus Christi (Tex.) Caller-Times with 85,500 combined daily circulation for the March 31, 1986, ABC six-month reporting period, up 2.8% from the previous year.

In March, 1986, Harte-Hanks announced it would add 19 newspapers, including four dailies, in a series of trades and acquisitions. Included in the acquisitions are the evening Dedham Daily Transcipt (12,188 circulation as of March 31, 1986, down from 12,581 for the year-earlier period) and the evening Waltham News-Tribune (13,168, down from 13,375) in Massachusetts, and in the Dallas area—the Lewisville Daily Leader, a Tuesday through Friday and Sunday paper with daily ABC circulation of 4,138 on June 30, 1985, and the Plano Daily Star-Courier, a Monday through Friday and Sunday paper with 17,296 audited circulation as of Dec. 31, 1984, the latest available figures.

"We're pleased with these moves because they allow us to be in areas with faster growth potential than we have experienced in markets we are leaving. For our kind of business, the Dallas and Boston areas are two of the most attractive markets in the United States," Mr. Marbut says.

Harte-Hanks also acquired Century Newspapers of Winchester, Mass., publisher of six weekly newspapers in the Boston suburbs, effective June 1, 1986.

The Century transaction includes the National News Service of New York, which publishes the weekly Commercial & Financial Chronicle and monthly Bank & Quotation Record.

Harte-Hanks entered the magazine business through its purchase in February, 1985, of the San Antonio Monthly, bought from San Antonio Publishing Co. The city magazine has a circulation of 20,000.

In September, 1985, Harte-Hanks introduced Texas Weekly, a Sunday magazine concentrating on Texas news and features. It replaced Gannett Co.'s USA Weekend in some of the 13 Harte-Hanks-owned Texas newspapers and was a new feature in others. Texas Weekly has a current circulation of 573,291 and is carried in 27 newspapers.

Texas Weekly has provided a network into the marketing of 984,000 households in smaller towns and cities, the equivalent of Texas' largest city.

All direct marketing divisions were combined into one nationwide group in 1985. Shopper operations, previously under Harte-Hanks Direct Marketing, became a separate group. The move was designed to give additional senior management focus to shoppers and to structure direct marketing efforts, Mr. Marbut says.

On the corporate level, some corporate office functions were moved into the operating units, such as direct marketing and newspapers, to reduce corporate staff, and a national sales force was created in the direct marketing operations, moves designed to "get the structure more efficient, more supportive of our strategy and closer to the customer," Mr. Marbut says.

Harte-Hanks, the largest shopper publisher in the U.S., owns and operates shoppers that are zoned into 413 editions, reaching 4.8 million households.

The largest Harte-Hanks shopper is in Southern California, with a circulation of 2,379,000 as of April 30, 1986. Harte-Hanks is one of the top five largest third-class mailers, according to Mr. Marbut.

Harte-Hanks' broadcast business consists of four vhf stations in San Antonio; Greensboro, N.C.; Jacksonville, Fla., and Springfield, Mo. The company continues to pursue opportunities in cable. Harte-Hanks increased its number of cable subscribers in 1985 to 144,269, up 3%.

Newspapers, vhf tv and cable are just a part of the Harte-Hanks communications empire. The company owns a trade publication for the radio industry; 25 direct mail systems, which can offer advertisers direct mail programs reaching 96% of U.S. households; five alternate delivery systems reaching more than a million households via hand delivery; six marketing services companies, and a nationwide trucking service specializing in delivery of advertising materials.

While H&C Communications faces a soft revenue picture for its two Houston broadcast properties, the privately held company's four other network affiliate tv stations helped boost total net revenues 38.8% in 1985 over the previous year. H&C Communications was the nation's 95th largest media company in 1985.

The Houston-based company places net revenues in 1985 at $101.9 million compared with a revised figure of $73.4 million in 1984. The 1984 figure of $132 million, appearing in the 100 media companies issue last year, was a gross revenue figure including projected revenues from two Cowles stations that weren't acquired until January, 1985. Net revenues exclude commissions, which are factored into gross revenues.

The company expects to see net revenues reach $120 million for 1986, according to Jim Crowther, H&C president. Gains in 1985 were attributed largely to the acquisition of the two Cowles tv properties. Broadcast has been the media area in which H&C has redeployed its assets after the sale of the Houston Post in 1983.

The company, owned by the Hobby family of Houston and the Catto family of McLean, Va., includes five network affiliate tv stations, one radio station and a monthly magazine. Application for purchase of a sixth station, KSAT-TV, San Antonio, is pending FCC approval.

In January, 1985, the company acquired WESH-TV, the Daytona Beach/Orlando NBC affiliate, and KCCI-TV, the Des Moines, Ia., CBS affiliate, from Cowles Communications of Orlando, Fla., for a combined $182.5 million. Since the acquisition, the other two Orlando network affiliates each have sold for more than $185 million.

Performance at WESH-TV has exceeded expectations. The station is doing "very, very well in a very attractive market," Mr. Crowther says.

The Daytona Beach/Orlando market has jumped to 28th place among Areas of Dominant Influence from 80th the year before, according to Arbitron.

"We are experiencing the best ratings ever at WESH-TV with a No. 1 sign-on to sign-off position in both ratings books," says Harold Crump, president of H&C's Broadcast Group. "We are planning to build a new facility there in the immediate future."

Other properties also fared well last year. Mr. Crump notes that KCCI-TV, the other property acquired from Cowles, and KVOA-TV, the Tucson NBC affiliate, last year were both "pleasant surprises."

KCCI-TV holds a strong No. 1 position in the Des Moines market, according to Mr. Crump, who adds that the station's revenues for 1985 were ahead 9% over 1984 and projects greater growth in 1986.

In contrast to Des Moines, the Tucson market has "powerhoused," Mr. Crump says. "KVOA-TV did extremely well in the ratings and the local news is dominant." A new local news program was added at 4:30 p.m., enhancing an already strong local news operation.

H&C's Nashville, Tenn., property, CBS affiliate WTVF-TV, has had a tough time because of a soft local economy, but the station is in a close is expected to pick up with the advent of GM's Saturn plant and American Airlines' planned Nashville hub. "We're looking forward to a booming economy by the fourth quarter," he says.

With broadcast revenues generally flat in Houston, KPRC-TV, the NBC affiliate, has had soft sales, though the station maintains its No. 2 position behind KTRK-TV, the ABC affiliate. "Houston's problems are a result of a combination of the oil and real estate slump," Mr. Crowther says.

If Houston's tv revenues are suffering, then the radio story is even worse, suggests Mr. Crump, adding that the am station, KPRC, is no exception. "Radio is having a really tough time here now," he says. "We've seen shrinkage in our audience and we intend to reverse the trend with some format changes." The radio station has retained its news-talk format but in early May instituted a 4 p.m.-to-7 p.m. sports talk show to increase numbers. New personalities were added also. "We'll take a hard look at the numbers six months from now, but we are pinning our hopes on sports talk," Mr. Crump says.

Washington Journalism Review, H&C's only print property, boosted last year's average circulation to 27,813, up 12.2% for the monthly magazine aimed at communicators, corporate executives and government leaders. The circulation figures include paid subscriptions, newsstand sales and nonpaid subscriptions. The publication had net revenues of $900,000 in 1985, according to Jessica Catto, publisher and H&C vp.

WJR entered a joint venture in 1984 with Crain Communications Inc., parent of Advertising Age, to handle advertising, circulation and provide some editorial support. Terms called for a two-year limited partnership.

Crain decided not to exercise its option to buy stock in WJR and effective April 1, 1986, is no longer involved with the magazine, says Ms. Catto. The parting was friendly and further publishing ventures with Crain were not precluded, she adds.

H&C has plans before the FCC to acquire San Antonio's ABC affiliate, KSAT-TV, for $153 million, from Outlet Co., a subsidiary of the Rockefeller Group. Approval is expected later this summer.

Acquisition of KSAT-TV would mean H&C covers all three networks. The company had owned an ABC affiliate, WTOK-TV, Meridian, Miss., but sold the station to Southeastmedia in late 1984 for $13.1 million. The move was made in compliance with the then FCC rule limiting vhf tv ownership to five stations. The rule since has been amended to permit ownership of 12.

"We decided it was timely to move away from print," Mr. Crowther says, referring to the company's $130 million sale of the Houston Post to Toronto Sun Co. in 1983. "We are likely to remain broadcasters who operate affiliates but will look at whatever possible transactions are presented to us."

Hearst Corp. experienced a generally soft year in its broadcasting, magazine and newspaper properties as national advertising spending, following industrywide trends, turned flat to down, retail advertising showed no growth and classified advertising registered only modest gains.

New York-based Hearst, the 11th largest media company, was hit hardest in the broadcasting segment by the softness in national advertising, especially in year-to-year comparisons —four of Hearst's tv stations (now five) are ABC affiliates that benefited greatly from coverage of the 1984 Winter and Summer Olympics.

The broadcasting segment was buoyed by the acquisition of WCVB-TV, the ABC affiliate in Boston, the nation's sixth largest tv market. Hearst bought the station from Metromedia Inc., Secaucus, N.J., for $450 million. The actual acquisition occurred in 1986 and brought to six the number of tv stations owned by Hearst and made the company the second largest operator of network-affiliated tv stations.

The magazine segment in 1985 kept even with 1984's pace, thanks largely to the continued growth of Country Living, up 5.6% in ad pages and 33.2% in ad revenue to $21.2 million, and continued improvement at Redbook, with ad revenues of $57.2 million, up 7.7% despite a 0.9% decline in ad pages, according to Publishers Information Bureau.

Good Housekeeping, celebrating its 100th anniversary, produced two record-setting issues of 454 and 376 pages in May and December. Its ad page count grew 1% as revenues increased 6.8% to $142.4 million, according to PIB. Cosmopolitan, which set records with a special issue marking the 20th anniversary of Helen Gurley Brown's editorial stewardship, had a 5.9% increase in ad revenues to $100.8 million on a 2.2% decline in ad pages.

Connoisseur, after less than four years of publishing in the U.S., posted ad page gains of 20.6%, ad revenue growth of 57.9% to $7.3 million, and circulation gains of nearly 15%. Sports Afield recorded its sixth consecutive year of more than 1,000 ad pages with 1,034, down 1.8%, and ad revenues of $13.9 million, up 8.5%. Motor Boating & Sailing posted a 3% improvement in ad pages.

On the down side, Harper's Bazaar suffered a 4.4% decline in ad pages and flat ad revenues of $31.1 million despite circulation gains; House Beautiful, which changed its page size to conform to several other Hearst magazines early in 1986, lost 14.6% in ad pages, which brought a 7.2% decline in ad revenue to $24.2 million.

Colonial Homes lost 10.2% in ad pages, although it gained 1.2% in ad revenues to $6.4 million; Town & Country, despite a record setting issue in November, lost 7.1% in ad pages and 1.3% in ad revenues to $26.7 million. Ad pages dropped 24.9% and revenues 16.2% to $4.2 million at Science Digest, which reached a circulation high. Science magazines in general have suffered from a lack of ad support in 1985. Popular Mechanics increased its share of market in the men's magazines arena and just about held its own in ad pages with an 0.3% growth that brought a 5.4% increase in ad revenues to $28.7 million.

In a major corporate promotion, Gilbert C. Maurer, president of Hearst Magazines, was elected an exec vp of the corporation, reporting as the "No. 1 deputy in all corporate matters" to Frank A. Bennack, Hearst Corp. president and ceo.

In the company's cable division, both its system operation and satellite network programing services grew in numbers served. Hearst made one acquisition in cable in 1985 with the purchase by Hearst Cablevision of California of the 3,650-subscriber Saratoga, Cal., cable system. The Arts & Entertainment Network, in which Hearst is a joint venture partner with ABC and RCA, increased its household penetration by 33% to more than 16 million. Lifetime, Hearst's joint national, continued to attempt to stake out a position as "the women's network" serving some 27 million homes.

The Hearst newspaper division, buoyed by the acquisition of the Beaumont Enterprise in Texas, increased its contribution to the bottom line despite the softness in the advertising marketplace. The Enterprise had daily morning circulation of 68,659, according to six-month ABC averages ended March 31, 1986, down 2.3% from the corresponding period a year earlier. Sunday totals were 77,982, down 1.9%.

In May, 1986, the company folded the Baltimore News American after circulation had fallen to less than 100,000, advertising had slowed to a trickle and Hearst, after six months of searching for a buyer, decided the paper was not marketable. Its competitor, the Baltimore Sun, was sold to Times Mirror Co. the day after the newspaper closed.

The Los Angeles Herald-Examiner posted its second consecutive half of circulation increases, which, though minor, reverse a long-term slide. Morning circulation of the paper was up 3.3% to 245,291 for the six-month period ended March 31, 1986, according to ABC. The company in 1986 continued to focus on the competitive Los Angeles situation, where the Hearst paper lags far behind Times Mirror's Los Angeles Times both in circulation and in advertising share of market.

In San Francisco, where Hearst is guaranteed a profit by a joint operating agreement with the Chronicle Publishing Co., the evening daily Examiner and the Sunday Examiner & Chronicle benefited from the arrival of the colorful and driven William Randolph Hearst III, grandson of the paper's founder. An award-winning advertising campaign coupled with the addition of nationally known columnists such as Hunter Thompson and Warren Hinckel garnered significant national media exposure for the Hearst paper.

In early 1986, Hearst hired Lee J. Guittar, a veteran newspaper publisher with competitive market experience who had been president of Gannett Co.'s USA Today, as an exec vp with responsibility for the western region.

The Albany, N.Y., Knickerbocker-News and Times-Union in 1985 again were among the most significant bottom line contributors in the Hearst empire.

In 1986, Hearst celebrates its centennial anniversary.

Des Moines-based Heritage Communications, which began as a small cable operator in 1971 and has expanded into broadcast and communications products through acquisition, is poised for continued growth following its purchase in mid-June, 1986, of 43.5% of Rollins Communications, Atlanta.

Rollins owns cable systems, tv stations and an outdoor advertising company. Heritage reported it would buy 6.35 million shares, paying $41 a share for 2.2 million shares, and then pay the remaining shareholders, representing 4.15 million shares, in Heritage notes equivalent to $41 a share with an average life of six years. It would ultimately cost about $600 million to acquire all of Rollins's 14.6 million shares. Both companies have said the 43.5% buy-in is a prelude to a full merger.

Heritage currently operates 140 cable tv systems in more than 300 communities in 18 states that serve about 720,000 basic cable subscribers. Rollins has 206,000 cable subscribers in 43 cities.

Publicly held Heritage, whose media revenues represented 60.9% of total corporate revenues, was the nation's 99th largest media company. Heritage extends its acquisition strategy to broadcast media other than cable and to companies outside the Midwest because of the weak Midwest economy. However, like most cable companies, it continues to seek properties in areas adjacent to its existing ones.

Last year Heritage, in a limited partnership agreement, acquired a cable tv system in Dallas from Warner Amex Cable Communications for $110 million. It later sunk an additional $35 million in that company, which has 90,000 subscribers.

In late December, 1985, Heritage acquired 51% of Gill Industries, a cable operator in San Jose, Cal., paying $43 million for the system, which Gill will continue to manage.

Other 1985 acquisitions include a cable system in Germantown, Tenn., for $8.1 million; 20% of Diversified Communications, Portland, Me., for $11.5 million, a share increased to 30% in March, 1986. Heritage also acquired eight smaller cable systems in regions where it already owned businesses.

In addition to the cable system acquisitions made last year, Heritage bought two NBC affiliates in South Dakota in August. It paid $15.6 million for the stations that serve Rapid City and Mitchell and Sioux Falls. Diversified Communications in Portland also owns broadcast properties.

In the past few years, Heritage entered the specialty advertising and educational products business, a category in which it now operates eight companies. These companies' products include calendars, specialty advertising products, meeting room equipment and trade show exhibits.

To offset competition for cable viewership from videocassette recorder viewing, Heritage is exploring "addressable technology," which will allow the company to expand its pay per view broadcasting services. The company considers pay per view to be a major revenue opportunity.

A troubled Houston economy in 1985 translated into declines in both weekday and Sunday circulation and a slump in linage at the Houston Chronicle, the city's largest daily newspaper, owned by Houston Chronicle Publishing Co.

Media revenues for the publishing company, owned by Houston Endowment Inc., are estimated to have dropped about 5% to $206.2 million, making Houston Chronicle Publishing Co. the 58th largest media company in 1985.

Sagging circulation was a major contributing factor to the decline. The Chronicle's Monday through Friday circulation dropped to 425,434, according to six-month ABC reports ended March 31, 1986, or 1.8% below audited reports for the same period in 1985. Saturday circulation for the same period showed a 3.4% increase to 425,560. Sunday figures fell 1.6% to 528,153.

Despite the decreases, the Chronicle remains the strong market leader over the Houston Post. The Post's daily circulation (Monday through Saturday) for the same reporting period rose 2% to 316,209. Sunday circulation was up 1.9% to 373,573.

Ad linage is down at both newspapers, according to Media Records. The Chronicle showed a 6% drop in total ad linage in 1985 over 1984—a situation offset somewhat by a 7% ad rate increase effective Jan. 1, 1985. The Chronicle raised the ad rate an additional 12% Jan. 1, 1986. ABC audited statements show the Chronicle circulation reaching 57.4% of the daily and 58.5% of the Sunday market universe receiving the two competitors.

According to Bob Thomas, the Chronicle's marketing director, reasons for circulation declines center on the economy and departure of white-collar workers from Houston who are typically Chronicle readers.

Effects of a down economy have been felt most in real estate and employment advertising. Nevertheless, the Chronicle ranks second nationally in classified full-run linage, according to Media Records.

The Chronicle in 1985 had 2,260,712 ins. in classifieds, down 19.5% from 1984. General advertising was 8% ahead of the year before with 536,738 ins. Retail advertising showed a 5% increase in 1985 with 2,929,376 ins.

Mr. Thomas noted the paper continues to be positioned as "Houston's leading information source." The paper typically had relied on image advertising but in 1986 has turned toward a value-added approach to build circulation.

In a 1986 spring direct response premium campaign, the paper picked up 12,000 new 16-week-plus subscribers in the first six weeks, Mr. Thomas says. The paper used two-minute and one-minute tv spots, via ad agency Rives Smith Baldwin Carlberg/Y&R, to promote the campaign.

"Response to the premium campaign ran 30% ahead of what we had projected," Mr. Thomas says. "We had always done image advertising because business in Houston was booming. That's stopped now and you have to market your product differently. Now people have to make a choice and you have to ask people to buy your product."

In October, 1985, the Chronicle acquired Promotional Printing Corp. from Alejandro Junco. The company produces high-grade advertising newspaper inserts and direct mail advertising using the heatset offset process.

"Promotional Printing adds an extra dimension and has opened up avenues of total marketing for the company," Mr. Thomas says. "The printing company extends our press capacity by offering an odd-size insert or a different paper. We can put the whole package together to save the client money."

Howard Publications, Oceanside, Cal., which maintained a steady pace in a program of upgrading facilities during 1985, particularly in its Southern California cable market, showed estimated media revenue growth of 7% for the year.

The privately held Howard, ranked the 63rd largest media company in 1985, includes 19 daily newspapers, the CBS-TV affiliate in Buffalo, N.Y., and cable tv systems operating in California and Wyoming. Its recent entry into the oil and gas industry through Howard Energy Co. thus far is the company's only attempt to diversify its holdings. Not yet an income producer, the energy group's initial activities have been focused on exploration and drilling operations in the midwestern and southern U.S.

Most Howard media properties posted modest gains during 1985, a year that founder-owner Robert Howard describes as one of "little change and continued consolidation and improvement of existing facilities."

Much of this consolidation and upgrading took place in Southern California cable tv. This was a necessary followup to the company's rapid expansion in the area since acquiring some half-dozen franchises in 1983. San Gabriel and Pasadena now have new systems and transmission equipment, while some of the older systems were refurbished and brought up to industry standards.

Howard's Los Angeles-based cable operation is Falcon Communications, a company 80% owned by Howard and Donrey Media Group, Fort Smith, Ark. The company's California franchises in the Los Angeles metropolitan area are Pasadena, Montebello, Monterey Park, Temple City, San Gabriel, West Covina, Norco, Walnut, Riverside and some areas of Los Angeles, including unincorporated Altadena. The Howard-Donrey partnership also owns Overthrust Cable TV in Evanston, Wyo., but has no interest in Falcon Cablevision or Falcon Cable Systems Co., separate entities under other ownership operating in northern California.

As the Howard-Donrey operations in the urban markets of Southern California began winding down into the latter stages of consolidation, they began a new period of intensified marketing and promotion of customer service. On-air and direct mail promotions helped expand Falcon Communications' basic cable subscriber numbers to 120,000, up 9.1% from 1984. Ad revenues from the cable operations remained at modest levels, but the past year saw some slight growth in advertising in the Los Angeles market.

The company operates newspapers with circulations in the medium-size range. Leading these Howard properties is the evening daily Hammond (Ind.) Times, whose circulation was 66,327, according to six-month ABC averages ended March 31, 1986, or a decline of 3.1% compared with the corresponding year-earlier period. Its Sunday paper circulation, according to ABC, was 74,634 for the same period, down 2.3%.

Other major newspapers in the Howard chain also experienced small circulation losses during the same reporting period, including the morning Sioux City (Ia.) Journal with 52,487 daily, down 4.7%, and 46,813 Sunday, down 3.4%, and the evening Waterloo (Ia.) Courier with 48,675 daily, down 4.5%, and 52,135 Sunday, down 6.4%. The morning Star-Tribune in Casper, Wyo., had 36,845 daily, up 2.5%, and 39,811 Sunday, up 4.4%.

Once again the company's major circulation gainer was the Oceanside (Cal.) Blade-Tribune, with an evening circulation of 35,609, up 15.5%, and 36,776 Sunday, up 14.3%. Outlook is for steady population growth in the San Diego County market and continued growth for the Blade-Tribune.

Much of the circulation increase at Oceanside, Mr. Howard says, can be attributed to the introduction last fall of an edition tailored to the affluent Carlsbad community. The edition devotes four to eight daily news pages to Carlsbad, satisfying residents' needs for local news coverage. The only other source of news is the twice-weekly Carlsbad Journal, published by North Coast Publishers.

Howard's only property in the broadcast area to date is WIVB-TV, Buffalo, which has posted steadily growing revenues since its purchase by the company in 1977.

After years as a runnerup in the Buffalo market, 1985 saw the station move to the No. 1 position, a jump made possible in part by the continuing improved performance and ratings of the news department.

Founded in early 1985, the company's only nonmedia operation is Howard Energy Co., Traverse City, Mich., currently involved in exploration and development of gas and oil resources.

Privately held Hubbard Broadcasting, a newcomer to the Advertising Age leading 100 media companies on the basis of its strong revenue contributions from traditional broadcast units, is opening revolutionary fields of broadcasting by satellite.

The St. Paul, Minn.-based company, whose revenues are up an estimated 8% from 1984, ranking it the 79th largest media company, is expanding a satellite news-gathering cooperative from 36 to 100 station members by July, 1987. It expects to grab more stations for its USTV program syndication as the number of stations with Ku-band downlink receivers grows from 382 to 700 by July, 1987, and is developing a DBS (direct broadcasting by satellite) system that would bypass stations in reaching homes with receiving dishes.

With the payout from satellite technology, which includes the manufacture by Hubbard of specially equipped vehicles for station members or subscribers, expected later than sooner, Hubbard's brash, yet tight-lipped chairman, president and ceo, Stanley Hubbard, predicts a 10% revenue increase in 1986, which he says is a "year of focus" for family-owned Hubbard.

Hubbard's last property unrelated to broadcasting—Farvue Outdoor Advertising—was sold in April, 1986, to Naegele Outdoor Advertising Co. of the Twin Cities. Hubbard's sole 1985 acquisition was KOBR in Roswell, N.M., from KCBD Associates. The $3 million purchase became official in November, and Mr. Hubbard says KOBR (formerly KSWS-TV) will complement Hubbard's other New Mexico tv stations in Albuquerque and Farmington.

The company's other tv markets include St. Paul, and St. Petersburg, Fla. Its radio markets include an am station in Cypress Gardens, Fla., and am-fm combinations in St. Paul and Albuquerque.

Hubbard's flagship media property is KSTP-TV, an ABC affiliate and No. 2 station in the Twin Cities, the nation's 16th-largest market. Other Twin Cities Hubbard properties include KSTP-FM (ranked No. 2 during winter Arbitron ratings) and its companion am station, KSTP, which ranked 10th.

Hubbard's ambitious venture into satellite broadcasting is paced by a near-nationwide cooperative of news-gathering stations called Conus Communications. Hubbard owns or leases transponders on two orbiting Ku-band satellites, which 36 stations nationwide use to share news stories and equipment. Mr. Hubbard says he has signed stations from all three networks in addition to several independents. Currently, the stations reach more than 34% of the nation's tv households.

Mr. Hubbard estimated that a year from now 100 tv stations will be affiliated with Conus, a so-called sng (satellite news-gathering) venture. Although the broadcast industry initially scoffed at Mr. Hubbard's sng plan, all three major networks are introducing their own sng programs. An example of regional use of Conus has been a number of Florida member stations that have linked up to the satellite to exchange programs on a regional basis.

Undaunted by odds Conus faces from future competition from network SNGs and other programing, Hubbard Broadcasting has started USTV, a Denver-based program syndication unit. There are 382 stations with installed Ku-band downlinks that can receive USTV feature programs. That potential market is expanding to 700 by July, according to Mr. Hubbard. All stations are potential Conus Communications and USTV customers.

Ad agency Colle & McVoy Advertising, Bloomington, Minn., has created business-to-business advertising and collateral for Conus since its inception in late 1984. C&M also has been named agency of record for USTV. The first program developed by USTV is a talk show called "USA Live," and Mr. Hubbard says several more programs will be introduced soon. Despite the scope of Conus and USTV, their startups have added only 30 employes to the Hubbard work force.

Hubbard's greatest plan, and by far the most expensive with a $1 billion price tag, is direct broadcast satellites to homes with receiving dishes. Mr. Hubbard says several investment bankers have expressed interest in making financial arrangements for the $300 million Mr. Hubbard estimates it will take to launch DBS. Sticking to the private financial policy of privately held Hubbard, Hubbard would not estimate possible revenues gleaned from his plans for satellite broadcasting.

Ingersoll Publications continued its rapid expansion in the newspaper field, picking up two dailies in New Haven, Conn., its largest newspapers to date, two midsized dailies in Ohio and Pennsylvania, and 16 weekly newspapers from two newspaper groups covering New Jersey.

The newspaper company, whose search for a flagship newspaper has been an elusive one, may now be satisfied with its acquisition in late May, 1986, of the New Haven evening Register with a circulation of 90,393, its companion morning Journal-Courier (circulation 37,733) and the Sunday Register with 140,776 circulation. Figures are ABC averages for the six-month period ended March 31, 1986.

Ranked the 50th largest media company in revenues, the Lakeville, Conn.-based company should reach revenues of more than $300 million by the end of 1986 based on performance of its current newspaper properties and future acquisitions, according to Ralph Ingersoll II, president. That would give the company revenue growth of 27% compared with 13.5% in 1985 over the previous year.

All of privately owned Ingersoll's media revenues in 1985 came from its 117 daily and weekly newspapers throughout the Northeast, Midwest and California, which "may make us the last national media operation that does only newspapers," according to Mr. Ingersoll, who says he has no interest in broadcast or cable. There are plenty of growth opportunities left in the newspaper industry because it's a "very large theater" where no single player owns more than 5% to 6% of the national market, he says.

This April the company bought two groups of New Jersey weeklies—the Wayne-based Today Newspapers Inc., a chain of 12 weeklies, and the Fairlawn-East Paterson Shopper Inc., a group of four weeklies. In January, it purchased two papers, the Daily Local News in West Chester, Pa., and Tribune Chronicle in Warren, O. The West Chester paper had 38,896 circulation, according to the six-month ABC reporting period ended March 31, 1986, up from 38,481 from the corresponding period a year earlier. The Warren paper had circulation of 41,946, up from 41,003 in the year-earlier period.

Mr. Ingersoll's scouring of the market for a major property—evidenced by the company's participation in the bidding for the Los Angeles Daily News, the St. Louis Globe-Democrat and the Des Moines Register & Tribune Co., all unsuccessful—apparently finally has paid off.

The purchase of the New Haven papers from the family of Lionel S. Jackson Sr., chairman of the newspapers, cost Ingersoll $170 million, just short of the $176 million Jack Kent Cooke put down to beat out Ingersoll in bidding for the Los Angeles Daily News. Ingersoll expects continued growth at the papers because of New Haven's ongoing transformation from heavy industry to biomedicine and high-tech research.

Mr. Ingersoll expects to concentrate on either buying dominant regional dailies or assembling groups of community newspapers that complement the regional dailies. "We're trying to stay out of that middle position of submetro dailies," he says, which is a reversal of previous strategies. "Now that we've been on both sides of the table—submetro dailies and community newspapers—we've come to appreciate the virtues of community newspapers as a business."

The company was one of the first to recognize the potential in building large chains of low-cost operation community newspapers. In 1984 Ingersoll bought the Suburban Newspapers of Greater St. Louis, a powerful string of free weeklies ringing the metropolitan area. Since then it has added six more properties there—two paid dailies, two paid twice-weeklies, two free weeklies—to bring its current roster to 41 papers in the St. Louis area.

In northern New Jersey, the company is assembling a chain of free weeklies loosely modeled after the St. Louis group. Mr. Ingersoll says he sees plenty of room in the northern New Jersey market for the community weeklies as well as the dominant regional dailies such as Macromedia's Bergen Record and Advance Publication's Newark Star-Ledger.

He says both kinds of publications can prosper in the same area because homeowners and advertisers need both. "If I lived in Bergen County, I would subscribe to the Bergen Record and I'd also be pleased to get the weekly paper free," he says.

"In the Ridgewood News, for example, we cover different news events than the Bergen Record," he says. "We have a finer focus. And we're able to attract retail and real estate advertisers who can't afford to run in the Record."

But community newspaper groups must be large enough to take advantage of certain economies of scale. The papers generally share marketing, production and distribution functions while keeping separate editorial identities. In that way they can maintain their position as low-cost operators relative to the regional dailies. Ingersoll's 91 weeklies and 26 dailies, for example, share 39 plants.

The northern New Jersey chain, somewhat smaller than the St. Louis chain, forms an arc that spans an affluent section of New York's suburbs. To be completed by the end of 1986, the group is expected to generate about $30 million in revenues next year.

In St. Louis, the company's 41 newspapers generate more than $70 million annually, but the group has required sizable investment since Ingersoll bought it two years ago. Ingersoll has increased press capacity and added a data processing system to handle retail advertising sales. The company also plans to install a second data processing system for classified advertising and a third to tie the company's 30 news-editorial offices together into a sort of local wire service. The papers had one press between them when Ingersoll entered the market. Now Ingersoll has four and uses a fifth. There were four composing facilities among the papers; now there are nine.

On the editorial side, the number of stories has increased, news reporting has stepped up and more training and technology has been brought to the newsroom.

Many local observers believe Mr. Ingersoll is preparing to turn his St. Louis suburban weeklies into twice-weeklies by adding weekend editions, but he refused to discuss such plans. However, he says he's keeping a close watch on the daily-newspaper situation in St. Louis. "I'm not ruling out the possibility that we might enter that market."

International Data Group in the past 18 months has produced three new U.S. publications—Amiga World, Network World and Publish—started a dozen new computer publications overseas and announced a new tabloid for users of Digital Equipment Corp. computers.

Framingham, Mass.-based IDG, the 61st largest media company, also plans more publications after the new DEC paper's debut. The new DEC publication is squareiy in the IDG tradition of specialized papers and magazines, those that treat the nuts and bolts, the lore, the techniques, and hopes for just one brand or one maker of computers.

CW Communications Inc., Framingham, the publishing division of privately held IDG, will publish the new paper, an every-other-weekly tabloid. According to CWCI, there has been a great demand for a DEC specialized organ.

Also specialized is another new IDG publication, Amiga World, aimed at users of Commodore Business Machines' new personal computer, the Amiga. This every-other-monthly magazine, launched in August, 1985, is published by a division of CW Communications, CW Communications Peterborough, based in Peterborough, N.H. Circulation is 60,000.

A third new launch, Network World, issued first in March, 1986, is a news and feature weekly designed to serve communications users in the medium to large-scale range. It replaces the former On Communications monthly, which covered voice and data communications. Publisher is CW Communications, and controlled circulation is now 60,610.

A July, 1986, introduction is scheduled for Publish. PC World Communications, the CW Communications division in San Francisco, will publish Publish, a publication explaining how to combine text and graphics. Publish will be entirely written, edited and produced on personal computer-based systems.

Meanwhile, beyond the Atlantic and Pacific horizons, CW Communications has been assessing needs and hearing from the computer-minded in other countries. The result is a dozen new publications, introduced during 1985 and 1986.

While data processing market activity has urged startups of new publications, the general level of the economy apparently has held down circulation growth of existing computer publications.

Total circulation at mid-1986 is 1,308,183 for the 10 major CW Communications publications: Computerworld, Micro Marketworld, Network World, Infoworld, PC World, MacWorld, 80 Micro, inCider, Run and Amiga World.

Computerworld, the biggest of the CW publications, has held steady, at 124,347 in mid-1986 compared with 125,000 in mid-1984. Computerworld, the newsweekly of computers, in 1985 carried more than twice the advertising pages of its closest rival, Datamation—5,340 pages versus 2,511. Companion Computerworld publications are Computerworld Focus, publishing 10 "tabazine"-format issues a year on special topics for Compuierworld's readership, and the Computerworld National Computer Conference Daily, circulating 20,000 issues at that annual meeting.

Micro Marketworld, an every-other-weekly for computer equipment dealers, has been holding steady at 45,109. Infoworld, a weekly reporting on developments in microcomputing community, is off less than 3%, to 153,778. Infoworld is published by another CW Communications division, Popular Computing Inc., Menlo Park, Cal. PC World, the IBM PC magazine, has gained about 5%, rising to 290,548. MacWorld, started in February, 1984, by PC World Communications, is the specialized monthly magazine for the world of Apple MacIntosh computer users. Circulation continues at about 169,000.

80 Micro, incorporating the magazine Hot CoCo, is a CWCI Peterborough, N.H., monthly for users of the Tandy Model 1000 and Model 4 and the Color Computer. Circulation is up about 2% to 84,000. The Peterborough division monthly magazine for Apple II users, inCider is steady at about 84,000. Run, also issued from Peterborough, is a monthly about home use of Commodore computer equipment, and its circulation has slumped more than 11% to 198,000 from 1984. It has 70,000 controlled circulation.

Peterborough, under the fertile entrepreneurship of Wayne Green, has produced numerous leading computer publications since Mr. Green created the first popular computer book, Byte, in 1976. In 1983, Wayne Green Enterprises became a division of International Data Group. In addition to its media enterprises, IDG also has a Conference Management Group that conducts professional meetings, and a Computerworld Video-Broadcast activity for producing special-purpose tv materials.

In two major personnel changes, the company promoted W. Walter Boyd to president-chief operating officer of International Data Group from president of CW Communications Inc. The company also promoted Lee Vidmer to president-chief operating officer of CWCI from exec vp.

International Thomson Holdings, the U.S. outpost of Lord Thomson of Fleet's international business and publishing empire, quadrupled its spending on acquisitions in 1985 over the previous year, expanding its media in the areas of automated information systems, computer databases and highly specialized publications.

Thomson, the 23rd largest U.S. media company, spent $143 million compared with $45.1 million in 1984, but it gained only 2% in media revenues to $560 million. (£1=$1.30).

The company bought Gale Research Co., Detroit, the publisher of the Encyclopedia of Associations and other library references; AutEx Systems, Wellesley, Mass. (purchased from Xerox), producer of electronic information systems for a variety of fields, including banks, investment firms, industry, collectors and government; UTLAS, Toronto, a source of automated systems for bibliographic and information systems servicing libraries, and Practical Accountant and Computers in Accounting, both leading journals published by the Institute for Continuing Professional Development, New York.

So far in 1986, Thomson has purchased another source of accounting journals, Practitioners Publishing, Fort Worth, Tex., and in May, Thomson made a tender offer to buy Cordura Corp., Los Angeles, for $203 million.

Cordura produces specialty publications for business and industry and database publications, both manual and electronic, for applications such as estimating auto body repairs for insurance companies. Cordura also offers services such as employe benefits management. The company has five subsidiaries in San Diego that supply database publications and computer services. R.E. Harrington Inc., a subsidiary in Westerville, O., provides business consulting services. In 1985 Cordura Corp. had net income of $9.3 million on sales of $53.4 million.

International Thomson Holdings, the main U.S. subsidiary of International Thomson Organisation Ltd., operates in three business areas: publishing and information, which grows out of Thomson's origins as a newspaper publisher; travel booking, and oil and gas exploration and development.

Contribution to profits by the publishing and information segment has grown steadily from 5.7% in 1981 to 32.4% in 1985. The travel segment percentage has fluctuated, averaging about 17.5%, during these five years, while oil and gas has slipped from 71.4% to 50.3% in 1985.

The parent reports that in 1986 the North American publishing and information operations will become its biggest profit center.

The large outlay for acquisitions in 1985 is about equal to the year's earnings, $144.3 million. Total sales of parent International Thomson Organisation for 1985 came to $2.3 billion, up 2% from the previous year. Total sales for the holding company's over-all publishing and information segments —both North America and the U.K.— were $927 million, 8% more than 1984.

Total U.S. sales rose 13% in 1985, to $650 million. The publishing information total for North America was about $600 million, with an estimated $560 million from the U.S., which is the basis of Thomson's ranking in this issue. There were some 1985 slowdowns in sales for the professional newspapers and textbooks.

The company has been divesting properties that don't fit its editorial focus. Recently sold are its printing interests, its consumer book publishing operations in both North America and the U.K., and a number of magazines —including the Illustrated London News.

Thomson organizes its publishing activities into five main groups:

- Professional publishing, including publications for lawyers, engineers, accountants, bankers, brokers, data processing managers and real estate managers.
- Education/reference books, including texts, reference and professional works.
- Library services, consisting of Gale's directories and services plus other reference books and microfiche.
- InFinet (International Financial Network), a new group for Thomson, which will exploit the capacities of the newly acquired AutEx Systems in supplying electronic information services to finance customers.
- Business magazines, perhaps the most broadly known part of International Thomson because of its familiar titles among its five magazine divisions, Medical, Industrial, Electronics, Communications and Transportation. Some of the best known are Medical Economics, RN, Audio Times and Ward's Auto World.

Thomson publication launches for 1985 include Medical Lab Products, from Medical Economic Co., Oradell, N.J., and several healthcare newsletters from American Health Consultants, Atlanta: "Medical Ethics Advisor," "AIDS Alert," "Diagnostic Testing Alert," "Sport and Medicine" and the "Office Lab Letter."

Joining other electronics and communications magazines out of CES Publishing Corp., New York, is Electronic Merchandising. And Ward's Communications Inc., Detroit, is reported to be planning two new titles in 1986, but would not discuss them.

Performance of Thomson's best-known magazines in 1985 reflected the current unsettled U.S. economy, including the specialty professional and business areas Thomson serves.

Circulation of Medical Economics, a nonclinical, practice-management fortnightly, was up just 2%, to 173,863 in 1985. Of the 1985 total, 154,677 is controlled circulation, 19,305 is paid. Ad space for its companion publication, Medical Economics for Surgeons, is sold in combination with Medical Economics. The sister publication circulation was up 5% in for 1985, to 44,262, all controlled.

Principal competition for Medical Economics comes from the Journal of the AMA and American Medical News, both published by the American Medical Assn. in Chicago. JAMA circulation for 1985 is up more than 3% to 332,866. American Medical News is up 6%, to 332,693.

In a 1984 statistical compilation made by Folio Publishing Corp. of the 19 largest U.S. medical publications, Medical Economics ranked seventh in circulation, second in total ad pages, first in ad revenue and second in total revenue, $20.8 million and $21.5 million, respectively.

RN also faces tough competition in a field with falling circulation, caused by changing hospital economics and a flux in the roles of nurses. RN circulation was down 16% in 1985, to about 280,000. The largest of the nursing journals, Nursing 86 (the title carries the current calendar year), published by Springhouse Corp., Springhouse, Pa., dropped 10% to about 465,000.

Publishers in the nursing field are looking for benefits from increased advertising for nurses as a mid-1980s nurse shortage develops.

Ward's Auto World contends for readers and ad dollars in a field with several publications of relatively equal circulation, but varying focus. Auto World's specialty is giving in-depth coverage and interpretation to the workings of the auto industry. Its circulation, all paid, was 70,561, down slightly from 1984.

While International Thomson Organisation is a public company, 73.5% of its common shares are owned by the family of Lord Thomson of Fleet, who founded the company as a small Ontario newspaper business in the 1930s (see the Thomson Newspapers entry for other information). Private and institutional investors hold the other 26.5% of the stock, which is listed on the London and Toronto exchanges.

To conduct its business interests, the Thomson family operates, from Toronto, the Woodbridge Co. Ltd. This private holding company controls by itself, or through affiliates, both Thomson Newspapers (owns 61%) and International Thomson Organisation (owns 73.5%). International Thomson Organisation's main U.S. subsidiary is International Thomson Holdings Inc., New York.

The Thomson Holdings subsidiary, in turn, operates its media businesses through an affiliate, International Thomson Business Press Inc., Radnor, Pa.; two subsidiaries, Medical Economics Co., Oradell, N.J., and International Thomson Communications, Denver, Colo., and 18 subsidiaries, at the most recent count, across the U.S.

Journal Co., Milwaukee, bowed out of cable tv in 1985, purchased a combination am/fm radio station in Wausau, Wis., and expanded its number of shoppers to 14 by adding three in North Carolina and Florida.

The largely newspaper operation, the 53rd largest media company whose media revenues represent 64% of total company revenues, draws most of its media from the Milwaukee Journal and Sentinel. Most of its nonmedia revenues come from Perry Printing Corp., a commercial printing operation.

In February, 1985, the Journal Co. sold Teltron Cable TV, serving some 26,000 subscribers in the central Wisconsin cities of Wausau, Stevens Point and Wisconsin Rapids, to Jones Intercable, Englewood, Colo. The company then turned to its Add Inc. shopper division and bought shoppers in Asheville, N.C., and Gainesville, Fla., and started one in Hendersonville, N.C., bringing the total to 14. Nine Add Inc. shoppers are located in central Wisconsin and two are in Montana. Total circulation for the 14 shoppers is 374,000; the nine in Wisconsin have a circulation of 174,000. The Journal Co. plans to continue to start or acquire more shoppers.

In October, 1985, the Journal Co.'s NBC-TV affiliate in Milwaukee purchased WSAU and WIFC (fm) Wausau, Wis. These were stations the company owned and sold in the 1950s. Other broadcast operations include tv stations in Las Vegas, Milwaukee and Lansing, Mich. The latter, the independent WSYM-TV, was acquired in January, 1985.

According to February Arbitron ratings data, KTNV-TV, Las Vegas, an ABC affiliate, is in the No. 3 position in the market with a 7 rating and 20 share of the market. In Milwaukee, the Journal Co.'s NBC affiliate, WTMJ-TV, holds the No. 1 position with an 8 rating and 26 share.

The daily newspapers, the morning Sentinel and the evening and Sunday Journal, make up the company's Newspapers Inc. division. The Sentinel's circulation, according to March 31, 1986, ABC figures, was 188,359, up 1.8% from the same time a year earlier. The evening and Sunday Journal circulations have slipped, however. For the same period, the evening Journal was 294,502, down 2.4%. Sunday circulation also was down 2.4% to 514,549.

To boost Journal advertising and circulation, two new special sections were added in March and April, 1986, as part of an over-all strategy to have a special section in the paper each day. "Xtra," which comes out on Tuesday, is a tabloid-size insert aimed at young adults ages 26 to 40. The company hopes to appeal to the 337,000 Milwaukee area residents who make up that age group. The company estimates the group makes up 40% of the Milwaukee work force.

The Journal Co. has sampled the paper in downtown business areas, college campuses and shopping malls and it distributed 170,000 copies of the pilot issue of "Xtra" to nonsubscribers.

"Neighbors," published on Thursdays, is targeted to an older working audience of homeowners with families.

In addition to the shoppers under the Add Inc. banner, the company owns five weekly newspapers in the Trumbull, Conn., area. Hometown Publications Inc. papers have a combined circulation of 35,800.

MJE Corp., Niles, Ill., operates two audiovisual companies that make educational films and videocassettes.

Midwestern Relay Co., Milwaukee, provides satellite interconnection and relay services in the Midwest.

Perry Printing Corp., Waterloo, Wis., specializes in large-run printing operations, including catalogs and Time Inc. publications. It contributed $111.5 million in net revenues in 1985, or 33% of the company total. Its operating earnings were $16.4 million, or 25% of the total.

Knapp Communications, bucking a downward trend for advertising in the magazine industry, posted record sales for all publications, although its folding of Geo brought an over-all decline in media revenues for 1985.

Knapp, based in Los Angeles, basically draws its media revenues from three monthly U.S. magazines—Architectural Digest, Bon Appetit and Home. A new quarterly, Best Selling Home Plans, was introduced in 1985.

The 100th largest media company receives nonmedia contributions from Wilshire Marketing Corp., which creates and markets merchandise designed for readers of the company's magazines, and Knapp Press, a book publishing division that draws upon the magazines for subject matter.

Architectural Digest, the venerable 67-year-old former trade magazine purchased by Cleon T. (Bud) Knapp in 1964 and then transformed into a slick consumer monthly, had another year of record revenues. This elder statesman of the Knapp organization posted total net revenues of $43 million for 1985, an increase of 7.5% over a year earlier.

The publication had a decline of 1.8% in ad pages but ad revenue growth of 3.3% to $28.7 million gross. The magazine closed the year with an ABC-audited circulation of 600,758, including 95,659 in single-copy newsstand sales, about the same level as 1984.

Thomas P. Losee Jr., vp-publisher of Architectural Digest, calls 1985 "a significant" record year, achieved despite the relatively soft past 18 months for magazine advertising and "in the face of our toughest competition ever." A new companion magazine, to be called Architectural Digest Travels, is slated to appear this fall, poly-shrink-wrapped as a single unit with the October issue of Architectural Digest. Devoted exclusively to travel, with the same upscale production and editorial features of Architectural Digest, the first issue will have 64 pages and be distributed to subscribers and newsstands at no extra cost. A second issue is planned for spring, 1987.

The proposed travel magazine already has garnered substantial advertiser interest, Mr. Losee says, and will be offered with the same rate base and advertising rates as those of Architectural Digest. One-time b&w page rate is $18,090.

Revenues produced by Bon Appetit also set new records, hitting a net $35 million in 1985, up 14% from the previous year. Advertising sales contributed $26.3 million gross, up 9.3% according to PIB, with circulation adding another $16 million net, based on the yearend ABC-audited figure of 1,300,834.

Based on the success of Bon Appetit's role as culinary consultant to "New York's Master Chefs," a tv series that aired on PBS in 1984-85 and involved a cookbook produced by Knapp Press, the magazine's editors are working to prepare additional tv programing.

Home magazine (formerly Hudson Home Magazine) has produced continuous gains in circulation and advertising revenues since acquired by Knapp in 1981 when its circulation stood at 380,000. By the end of 1985 that figure had risen to more than 700,000 and to an all-time high of 800,000 in March, 1986.

The latest circulation jump, according to publisher George Fields, came at the same time Home gave its basic subscription rate a substantial 25% boost, from $12 up to $15 per year. "This augurs well for the future health of the magazine, despite an increasingly competitive and crowded field of vertical shelter magazines," Mr. Fields says.

Home produced total net revenues of more than $16 million in 1985, and although it lost a few percentage points in total pages sold, total ad sales of more than $7 million gross represented a 31% increase in ad revenues over 1984. Commenting on the magazine's fewer pages, Mr. Fields says, "the vertical shelter category has had no significant growth during the 1981-85 period, a time in which the number of competing magazines has grown to over 20. They're all wonderful magazines, so what you have is more and better magazines competing for what is basically a finite market."

Part of the editorial package in each issue of Home is the "Home Plans" section, containing sketches and floor designs. Working blue prints for these houses, created by architects and builders throughout the country, are sold to potential homebuilders through the mail. Now, however, these plans, with some 150 additional home designs, are published every quarter under the title Best Selling Home Plans, a new title in the Knapp magazine stable.

In the past year, with the moving of Home's editorial offices from New York to Los Angeles, all of Knapp's editorial and production were brought together at a single West Coast location. The move produced obvious cost reductions and operational efficiencies. The ad departments of the three publications continue to be based in New York.

Executive appointments during 1985 found two new members on the Knapp board of directors: Paige Rense, senior vp, corporate editor-in-chief and editor of Architectural Digest, and Karl H. Loring, corporate tax consultant and assistant treasurer. Another new director added in early 1986 was John O'Toole, recently retired chairman of Foote, Cone & Belding Communications.

Geo, purchased from German publisher Gruner & Jahr in 1979, was discontinued with the February, 1985, issue after going through several transformations. Its circulation had grown to 250,000 at the time of the closure.

Knight-Ridder Newspapers turned in a lackluster 1985 performance, including a drop in earnings on a slight increase in revenues that was affected largely by a 46-day strike at its Philadelphia newspapers. The company, this nation's 10th largest media company, also bought three tv stations from Gannett Co. and shut down Viewtron.

The Miami-based company then in April, 1986, took a stab at turning years of losses around at another newspaper property, the Detroit Free Press, by entering into a joint operating agreement with the rival Detroit News, which fell into Gannett ownership in 1985.

A company spokesman calls KRN's relationship with Gannett a "brotherly" one, and it is perhaps this that helped along the Detroit agreement, which still must receive federal government approval.

All operations but the newsrooms will be merged, abating a war that's been one of the hottest in American journalism and ending a fight for survival for both papers.

In the past five years, operating losses at the Free Press before corporate overhead exceeded $35 million. The News, as part of privately owned Evening News Assn., lost nearly $20 million.

KRN also moved to shut down some unprofitable enterprises. It closed the afternoon Charlotte (N.C.) News and merged the morning and evening papers in St. Paul, Minn.

Over-all, KRN net income dropped 5.8% in 1985 to $132.7 million, a decline largely related to the Philadelphia labor problems which forced closure of the paper from Sept. 7 to Oct. 23, 1985—longest in the paper's history and estimated to have cost KRN $50 million.

Total revenues were $1.73 billion, up 3.9% from 1984. The only nonmedia activity at KRN is HPBooks, a paperback publisher, TelAir, a car phone service, and commercial job printing and common carrier fleet operations in the Carolinas.

The company reports operating revenue from newspaper advertising and circulation at $1.53 billion, up only about 3% over 1984. Broadcast revenue of $65.2 million was up 4% from 1984, and business information services, including Commodity News Services, a supplier of news and pricing data to the futures market, grew by 19.6%, to $80.1 million. The company has a cable joint venture and carries returns from that unit only on an equity basis.

Knight-Ridder's media, 97.1% of total revenues, ranks it the 10th largest media company.

Despite its poor showing on the newspaper side—KRN says total newspaper ad revenues would have climbed to 5.6% if the Philadelphia papers had not had troubles, but only climbed 2.9%—KRN was able to return slightly more to shareholders in 1985 than in the previous year. Earnings, which climbed from $2.15 to $2.19 per share, were boosted by KRN's purchase of 14.5% of its own stock from founder John S. Knight's estate.

KRN boasts 10 consecutive years of earnings per share growth.

KRN in March, 1986, closed its Viewtron operation in South Florida that had been afflicted with heavy start-up costs and poor customer acceptance since its inception in October, 1983.

Viewtron is a consumer videotex service that ties personal computer owners with financial information, home banking, catalog shopping and travel information.

Customers balked at the numerous payouts that required the purchase of a special terminal at first and $35 to $50 monthly fees for subscription and phone hookup.

Viewtron's subscriber base grew to only 3,100 by last summer when it went national from its South Florida base offering software packages to consumers.

The base grew to 20,000, still not enough apparently to justify the expense. KRN invested $50 million to $60 million in Viewtron. Other media companies have had even less success with videotex experiments.

Times Mirror closed its Gateway videotex service in March, 1986, and Centel shut its service down in June, 1985. Both suffered losses.

Among its newspapers, over-all Sunday circulation was off 1.1% to 48,000, and average daily circulation dropped 2%, due to the closing of the Charlotte News and the merging of the a.m. and p.m. in St. Paul to form the Pioneer Press & Dispatch, an all-day paper whose weekday circulation dropped 5.6% to 186,927.

The San Jose Mercury-News provided the largest dollar profit growth of any Knight-Ridder unit. KRN also added eight new Neighbors sections and a new Business Monday section to its papers.

Knight-Ridder owns 27 dailies and five nondailies, four of them located in California.

In broadcast, KRN added three tv stations to its stable this year, bringing the total to eight in as many states. KRN spent $160 million to acquire two NBC affiliates (KTVY in Oklahoma City and WALA-TV in Mobile, Ala.) and one CBS affiliate, (KOLD-TV in Tucson, Ariz.).

It sold its interest in Long Beach Cablevision Co., a joint venture with Times Mirror Co., and claims to penetrate 56% of the New York and New Jersey market where TKR Cable Co. operates.

TKR is a joint venture with Tele-Communications Inc., Denver.

In January, 1986, KRN's Wichita (Kan.) Eagle-Beacon launched Laboratory/Wichita, offering national advertisers signing a contract for a minimum of six full-page ads a rate that nets the same after agency commission as the local retail rate.

KRN believes it will sell enough national advertising to make up for the 33% to 34% rate differential. KRN says the experiment is being received very well.

There were also a number of major personnel changes.

Dan Gold, president and chief operating officer of Comcast Cable Communications, came aboard as president and ceo of Knight-Ridder Broadcasting. Tony Ridder, publisher of the San Jose Mercury-News, became the first president of the new newspaper division.

Bill Ott, senior vp-operations, moved to the position of publisher of the San Jose paper.

KRN's Journal of Commerce, a 22,000-circulation transportation and trade newspaper and part of its business information services, acquired Transax Data Corp., a filer, monitor and publisher of ocean shipping tariffs. The Journal also launched a West Coast edition, betting that the area would continue to grow in trade and commercial activity.

KRN says its Vu/Text, used by the Washington Post and the Boston Globe, is now the largest newspaper database in the world.

But newspapers remain Knight-Ridder's chief business, with circulation and advertising revenue amounting to 88% of KRN's total operating revenue. The Philadelphia Inquirer and Daily News contribute 19% of operating revenues to the company. The Miami Herald follows with 16%.

Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., a New York-based private investment banking firm which owns media through its leveraged buyouts of Wometco Enterprises and Storer Communications, whittled down its media interests in late May, 1986, by selling seven tv stations to Lorimar-Telepictures Corp.

The sale for $1.85 billion in effect liquidates the tv side of Storer, which along with Storer's cable unit, was purchased by KKR for $2.5 billion in November, 1985.

Lorimar-Telepictures, Culver City, Cal., announced it would created a new company to house its growing tv side. The company, formed in February, 1986, in a merger between Lorimar Inc. and Telepictures Corp., already owned five tv stations in smaller markets. That 12-member tv unit is sure to rank among the leading 100 media companies next year.

KKR, ranked the 19th largest media company on the basis of its media properties in 1985, draws its media revenues from its two media buyouts, both of which have substantial tv and cable divisions.

Storer, bought mid-year by KKR, had yearend revenues of $592.4 million, up 10.4%. Operating income was $97 million, up 54%. Storer reported a net loss of $23 million in 1985 and $16.7 million in 1984. A full year of Storer is included in KKR totals even though its buyout was not concluded until November.

Lorimar-Telepictures acquired six of the seven-unit Storer broadcast segment, a segment which in 1985 had total revenues of $202.6 million. Tv properties sold were: KCST-TV, the San Diego NBC affiliate; and CBS affiliates, WAGA-TV, Atlanta, WJBK-TV, Detroit, WJKW-TV, Cleveland, and WITI-TV, Milwaukee; and independent, WSBK-TV, Boston. These units went for $1.45 billion.

Not sold was WTVG, Toledo. The FCC in 1985 granted KKR an 18-month waiver to weigh the possible sale of stations, WTVG, WJBK-TV in Detroit and WJKW-TV in Cleveland, whose signals overlap. There is nothing now pressing KKR to sell off the Toledo unit.

The seventh station came from the Wometco tv side-WTVJ-TV, Miami-for which Lorimar-Telepictures paid $405 million. This CBS affiliate is the dominant property in Wometco's broadcast unit, and was put up for sale in April, 1986, to comply with FCC regulations prohibiting ownership of a tv and cable operation in the same market. Kohlberg Kravis Robert's acquisition of Miami-based Storer gave the company it cable operations in the Miami area.

Wometco's other tv properties include WWHT, Newark, WSNL-TV, Smithtown, N.Y., and WLOS, Asheville, N.C., Greenville and Spartanburg, S.C. This four-unit division had revenues of an estimated $75 million in 1985, down from $100 million the prior year when a partial year of KTLA in Los Angeles was included. KTLA was sold in mid-1984 to Tribune Co. Industry sources expect KKR to dump WWHT in Newark, a small uhf station said to be unprofitable, according to media sources.

On the cable side, Storer is the major player with cable revenues of $389.8 million in 1985. Wometco had total cable revenues of an estimated $101 million.

Storer's subscriber base expanded 6.6% to nearly 1.6 million from 1.5 million in 1984. That includes 1.3 million subscribers which Storer describes as "premium subscribers" who get additional specialized programing beyond the company's typical offerings.

As of Dec. 31, 1985, Storer held franchises providing cable services to approximately 450 communities in 17 states. The sale of two systems—Minnesota for $23 million and Arizona for $23.5 million—are expected to occur the end of this month. Wometco's cable subscriber base rose 1.1% to 308,427.

Storer Cable operates systems in South Florida (142,600), West Florida (155,900), Georgia (60,500), Alabama (70,900), South Carolina (56,800), Kentucky (205,600), Capital area (106,200), New Jersey (177,300), Connecticut (101,200), Dallas/Fort Worth (70,300), Houston (92,400), Arkansas (64,200), Arizona (25,400), Northern California (49,400), Southern Cal. (96,200), Oregon (33,700) and Minnesota (24,500).

Storer continued this year with its plan to "cluster" its cable systems for marketing and operating efficiency. That plan began last year when Storer swapped cable systems with Times Mirror Cable. Storer traded its Phoenix, Paradise Valley, Mesa, Ariz., and Laguna, Cal. systems for Times Mirror's Louisville, North Little Rock/Jacksonville, Ark., and Point Pleasant Beach, N.J., systems. Those systems all are adjacent to existing Storer operations.

Storer also sold several stand-alone systems, including the Arizona and Minnesota sales and its Washington Country, Ore., system.

The company continued its emphasis on remarketing and retention programs in its service areas through four or five national marketing programs per year, a spokesman says. Those include direct mail, telemarketing and door-to-door sales programs aimed at increasing the system's penetration.

Storer also has been developing an in-house advertising sales program. Many of its stations have been selling ad space for four or five years, but Storer wants to make the practice more widespread among its systems, making ad sales play "a larger role in our revenue stream," the spokesman says.

KKR is among the leaders in leveraged buyouts, shepherding the $6 billion acquisition of Beatrice Cos. earlier this year. In 1985, KKR handled a total of $6 billion worth of leveraged buyouts, including the $2 billion acquisition of Storer Cable, Miami.

KKR got Wometco Enterprises in Miami in a $1 billion buyout in March, 1984. A leveraged buyout is when a group of investors buy a company from its stockholders by combining bank loans with high yield, high risk "junk" securities. The group usually includes an investment firm, like KKR. The high debt of a boughtout company usually is retired through cash from continuing operations or by selling off assets.

Growth at Landmark Communications in 1985 showed steady improvement in publishing and a sizable increase in broadcasting and video enterprises, where revenue contributions from The Weather Channel helped push up revenues in that division by 27.3%.

The Norfolk, Va.-based company, ranked the 44th largest media company, remains largely a newspaper company in which 82.8% of total revenues are generated by print media. Newspaper revenues, which grew 13% for the year—strong for newspaper groups in 1985—nonetheless could not match revenue growth from the broadcast side.

After losing money each year since it was founded in 1981, the Atlanta-based, 24-hour cable TWC came close to breaking even in 1985. "It was real close," says Douglas S. Holladay Jr., TWC vp-administration. "And as we look at 1986, it is going to be a good year." Cable systems under contract rose to 1,962 from 1,486 in 1984, with the channel carried in almost 20 million homes at yearend 1985, compared with 16 million the year before.

Aside from subscriber growth, the revenues stream at TWC felt the impact of subscriber fees Landmark has begun charging cable operators, ranging from 3 cents a month per customer for larger markets to 5 cents in smaller markets. Those fees generated TWC an estimated $9 million in 1985. The channel also recorded additional ad revenue.

Mainstay of Landmark's broadcasting and video operations are KNTV, an ABC affiliate in San Jose, Cal.; KLAS, a CBS tv affiliate in Las Vegas; two radio stations in Norfolk, Va. Norfolk radio stations WTAR and WLTY (fm) reported record revenues and profits in 1985 and ranked No. 1 in their market for combo stations. Landmark is seeking to extend its broadcast holdings by bidding with others for WHAS-TV, the Louisville station being sold by the Bingham family to dissolve the Courier-Journal & Louisville Times Co. At least three others are bidding on the station, estimated to cost from $65 million to $90 million.

Bedrock of Landmark's operations, however, remains publishing, particularly the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot and Ledger-Star, the Roanoke Times & World News and the Greensboro (N.C.) News & Record, each of which operated as separate divisions. The three dailies, with combined daily circulation of 463,000 and Sunday of 479,000, while showing only small circulation gains, marked consistent advertising revenue increases in 1985. Together, the three publications represented 82% of Landmark's publishing revenues in 1985, a 1% drop from 1984.

At the Virginian-Pilot and Ledger-Star, where record profits were recorded in 1985, the newspapers were redesigned to modernize typefaces and format, and carrier delivery was implemented for EXTRA, the papers' total market coverage publication, in response to postal moves to eliminate second-class mailing privileges. EXTRA now covers virtually all of Norfolk and is moving into Virginia Beach.

At the Greensboro News & Record, circulation increased every month, continuing a trend that began in August, 1983. But the newspaper discontinued in February its afternoon edition in the face of falling circulation. The News & Record began publishing the Ledger, a weekly tmc tabloid with a circulation of 389,000 distributed free to every household in the Piedmont Triad market.

And the News & Record purchased Triad Printing Co. in Winston-Salem, N.C., which publishes Trading Post, a classified tabloid, and Wheels & Deals, an auto trader quarterfold book. Triad also has a commercial printing business.

The Roanoke Times-World News published its first full edition on offset presses in August, and process color began. Operating income before depreciation established a new high.

Landmark Community Newspapers Inc. is comprised of four community daily newspapers and 23 nondailies, with total paid circulation of 186,000 in California, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, New Mexico, North Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia. One of the division's daily newspapers, the Mount Vernon (Ind.) Democrat, was converted from daily to twice weekly in May, and the News-Enterprise, Elizabethtown, Ky., launched a Sunday edition in September, as did the Daily Californian, El Cajon, Cal., in August, although it dropped its Monday edition.

LCNI also publishes 26 shoppers with total distribution of 330,000, adding shopper publications in 1985 in Tupelo, Miss.; Crystal River, Fla., and Tuscaloosa, Ala. The division purchased Antiques & Collectibles, serving Southern California, and began publishing Apartments of Greater Baltimore. LCNI also publishes Florida Nursing News, Senior World and Homes of York-Adams County, Westminster, Md.

LCNI's Special Publications branch publishes Port Folio, Spectator Magazine of the Triad, Style Inc., and Gambit, free-distribution newsprint magazines covering leisure-time activities in, respectively, Virginia Beach, Greensboro, Richmond and New Orleans. Gambit began publication in 1985 with a circulation of 35,000. These magazines are carried under the totals for newspapers in this report.

Change is just ahead for TWC as the channel attempts to implement the results of national viewership surveys conducted last fall to identify areas of potential programing improvement. Officials haven't announced results of the study, but Mr. Holladay says one likely result will be the introduction in 1986 of state-of-the-art graphics to enhance the look of the on-air product.

"We absolutely feel very comfortable with our progress at TWC," Mr. Holladay says. "We are progressing along, meeting the goals and objectives of our business plan."

Many of Lee Enterprises' newspaper and broadcast properties may be located in America's long-suffering heartland, but that has not kept the Davenport, Ia.-based company from its steady growth performance. Only once since 1969, when Lee went public, has there been an earnings decline.

While most newspaper companies had an increase in earnings of less than 10% in 1985, Lee, the nation's 62nd largest media company, recorded a 13% improvement for a new record. It also used some of its cash in 1985 to buy into a tv station, extend its ownership of a newspaper and repurchase substantial quantities of Lee common stock.

In March, the company acquired 42% of New Mexico Broadcasting Co., owner of CBS affiliate KGGM-TV in Albuquerque, N.M. John S. Stemlar, vp-finance and treasurer, says Lee "likes to buy minority interests in properties we feel have long-term potential. We have no particular timetable for increasing our stake."

Underscoring that point, Lee purchased in May the remaining minority interest in Bismarck Tribune Co. in Bismarck, N.D. During the third quarter, it also distributed 1.5 million shares to stockholders of New America Fund Inc., a closed-end investment company. New America has owned an interest in Lee Enterprises since 1974. This partial liquidation to more than 4,000 shareholders doubled the number of Lee shareholders during the year.

Exclusive of the Bismarck Tribune, revenues for Lee's newspaper operations increased 7% in 1985. Newspaper advertising revenues edged forward by 3%, while circulation revenues jumped 12%, a direct result of increasing rates rather than circulation. Of the 18 dailies in the Lee chain, 14 suffered circulation declines in both the weekday and Sunday paper. Only the Bismarck, Lincoln, Neb., and Madison, Wis., papers had daily and Sunday gains. The lead paper, the Wisconsin State Journal in Madison, registered 77,559 for the morning paper, a slight improvement over a year earlier, and a 3.2% gain to 144,847 for the Sunday, according to ABC averages for the period ended March 31, 1986.

The over-all gain in circulation revenue helped offset a soft national advertising demand and the continuing shift of local display advertising to inserts. The preprints, locally and nationally, generate less revenue and are costlier to distribute.

Lee devoted the decade of the '70s to upgrading plant and equipment and increasing productivity in its newspaper operations. In this decade, the emphasis is on increasing revenues. In light of the current state of the economy, president Lloyd G. Schermer sees increased community involvement in Lee's markets as one of the keys to increased sales.

At the Quad-City Times in Davenport, for example, publisher John Gardner has taken a very active role in the Future Davenport Group, which is helping to prepare the community's response to potential business prospects as it shifts from heavy dependency on the farm-equipment economy.

For the second successive year, one of Lee's newspaper properties, the Southern Illinoisan in Carbondale, converted from afternoon to morning publication. Because of the large number of afternoon dailies in the primary market area, the newspaper's executives believed a morning edition could better meet the needs of advertisers and readers.

In addition to its 18 newspapers, Lee has one more print medium, Western Business. A monthly magazine started three years ago by the Billings Gazette, it serves as a business publication in Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota and South Dakota.

Publisher Wayne Schiele says the magazine has a strong readership among its 22,000 subscribers. About one-third of the circulation is paid. The magazine is beginning to turn the corner toward profitability, and Mr. Schiele says plans are under way to convert many of the nonpaid subscribers to paid. "We are hopeful of maintaining a paid circulation of 12,000 to 14,000," he says.

Broadcast revenues for 1985, compared with 1984, showed a 7% increase. Operating profit was up 28%. Improved results were most in evidence at Lee's CBS-TV affiliate in Honolulu, KGMB. In November, the company exercised its option to purchase two satellite stations on the islands of Maui and Hawaii. These two stations rebroadcast programs received from KGMB.

A popular Honolulu game show, "$9,000 Jackpot Bingo," broadcast over KGMB, has been syndicated and is being carried on three other stations in the country, including Lee's KOIN-TV in Portland, Ore. The syndicated version is titled "Bingo USA," and viewers can play by using special bingo cards available in the markets where the program is aired.

Lee's tv property in Huntington-Charleston, W.Va., WSAZ-TV, ended 35 years of network interconnection by microwave and coaxial cable when the station installed two new satellite dishes and began receiving the NBC-TV network by way of Ku-band satellite transmission.

NAPP Systems, Lee's joint venture with Nippon Paint Co. of Osaka, Japan, continues among the leading manufacturers of photopolymer letterpress plates in the world. The Lee subsidiary maintains a 50% share in a competitive market.

A pilot manufacturing facility and research and development center are planned for this segment of Lee's operation. The manufacturing facility will be used to produce NAPPflex, the world's first premanufactured, water-processible flexographic printing plate for newspapers.

NAPP Systems plates are marketed worldwide, and with the gradual conversion from letterpress to offset, the company is beginning to examine the feasibility of manufacturing plates for offset presses as well.

Another Lee subsidiary, Call-It Co., has been involved for three years in developing an interactive audiotext system, enabling telephone users to gather information. Continuing research to expand the capabilities of computer software used in the verbal transmission of information is expected to enable Call-It Co. to add to Lee's future earnings.

LIN Broadcasting, the nation's 70th largest media company, has taken time out from buying media properties, devoting itself to building its cellular phone business. The New York-based company, however, continued to report record revenues and earnings in 198[illegible].

Media revenues for the year increased only 14% compared with a 40% growth between 1983 and 1984 when it acquired two Indiana tv stations from A.H. Belo Corp. in February, 1984.

The company continues to look for broadcast properties "if they make sense by adding to shareholder value and to the value of the company," says Michael Plouf, vp-corporate development and treasurer.

LIN entered into an agreement to sell its only nonmedia business, a New York radio paging service, to NYNEX for an undisclosed amount. The company sold the service because it believed the business "was not significant enough to constitute a separate part of our operations," Mr. Plouf says.

Nonwireline cellular telephone communications, a new business for LIN, got a boost in early 1986 when LIN increased its interest in its Dallas and Houston cellular operations; in Dallas to 64% from 60%, and to 50% from 21% in Houston. LIN also owns 45% of a system in New York, a 35% interest in Los Angeles and 51% in Philadelphia.

Settlements over licensing of the cellular companies have been reached in LIN's favor in three of the five markets; two suits from competitors still are pending.

The company has high hopes for the future of its cellular investments, but expects that marketing and development costs may have a negative impact on earnings over the next few years.

During the past year LIN consolidated its two hotel city guides, GuestInformant and Leisureguides, into a single operation under the GuestInformant banner. It is expanding the information guide service within its existing markets and has added one new market, Hawaii.

Revenues from radio operations were relatively flat last year, pulled down largely by weak ratings of KILT (am, fm) in Houston. LIN reported its tv division had a 16% increase in revenues.

Maclean Hunter Ltd., with major media investments in the U.S. encompassing the Houston Post, cable and business periodicals, recorded a 6.3% increase in U.S. media to an estimated $257.5 million in 1985, which ranked the Toronto-based company the 45th largest media company measured by its U.S. holdings.

Worldwide, total revenues increased 7.8% to $696.2 million in 1985, with newspapers, periodicals and printing contributing 63% of the total. U.S. revenues are estimated at $306 million, up 5.2% from 1984, and are all media except for $48.5 million attributed to Transkit business forms.

U.S. dollar figures for this profile were converted from Canadian currency at the rate of C$1=U.S.$0.716. The same rate was applied to 1984 figures for year-to-year comparison. The Canadian dollar fell 8% against the dollar in 1985.

Of the worldwide total, 33% of revenues were derived from Maclean Hunter newspapers; 30% periodicals and printing; 17% cable tv; 11.4% business forms; 5.2% broadcasting, and the remainder from communications services (including radio paging and trade shows).

Maclean Hunter publishes 167 periodicals: 125 in Canada (out of Toronto, Montreal, Calgary and Vancouver); 24 in the U.S. (New York, Chicago, Clearwater, Fla., and Stamford, Conn.), and 18 out of London. The company also owns advertising rate and data publications in West Germany, Austria, France, Italy and Switzerland.

Operating income from periodicals in 1985 rose 9% from 1984, far off the 50% growth from 1983. Revenues increased 10.9% over 1984, compared with that year's growth of 17% over 1983.

Ad pages for the company dipped throughout the first half before rebounding at yearend. Ad pages for Canadian publications rose 6.7% in 1985 vs. 17% in 1984. Foreign publications gained 2.9% in ad pages vs. 4.2% in 1984.

First-quarter results at the company's top Canadian magazines in 1986 have been encouraging for overall growth in the periodicals division. Maclean's, the weekly news magazine, posted ad revenue of $8.4 million, up 40% from the first quarter in 1985. L'Actualite, a French language monthly, had a 66% increase to $1.7 million. Both were record revenue levels.

The company's three U.S.-based publishing operations are Maclean Hunter Media in Stamford, Conn., and Clearwater, Fla.; Maclean Hunter Publishing Co. in Chicago, and HP Publishing, New York.

Maclean Hunter Media, publisher of Progressive Grocer and related electronic information services, entered the video magazine business with the acquisition of Retail Insight. Two videotape guides for the supermarket and convenience store markets were part of that acquisition, and a third was introduced in December for the restaurant market. The company also added National Mall Monitor, an every-other-monthly Florida-based magazine for the shopping center industry. The magazine incorporates a conference and newsletter, and has potential to generate revenue in data services and video.

Results at Hospital Practice, a U.S. medical journal acquired in 1983, fell significantly behind plan. An increase in publishing frequency did not get the response expected from advertisers.

National Market Reports Inc., MH Publishing's price-guide operation, had another good year.

Electronic Red Book, an electronic automobile valuation database, showed potential in the first year, and Truck Lease Guide was launched in electronic form. Advertising in the Canadian Red Book continues to grow, and its U.S. counterpart also has begun selling advertising.

Declining oil prices created an overall slump in the Texas economy and were responsible for an off-year at the Houston Post despite 1.9% circulation increases in both the daily (316,209) and Sunday (373,573) editions, according to six-month ABC averages ended March 31, 1986.

Donald Hunt, Houston Post publisher and exec vp, Toronto Sun Publishing Corp., says revenues at the newspaper dropped 7% despite an advertising rate increase of 5%.

"Houston was overbuilt, the real estate market is dead. With the number of people being laid off, the stores are reluctant to make big decisions. Even grocery stores say their revenues are down," he says. Despite these cutbacks, Mr. Hunt says the quality of the paper has been upgraded. "We've been on a reduction program since we've bought the paper, but we've increased the editorial staff."

The Post is part of the Toronto Sun Publishing Corp., of which 51% is owned by Maclean Hunter. Other major newspapers in the group include the Toronto Sun, Edmonton Sun and Calgary Sun.

Maclean Hunter's success with pay tv has been considerably better in the U.S. than it has in Canada, mainly because pay tv suppliers in the States scramble their signals, making those signals unavailable to dish owners. Cable tv revenues in the U.S. (66% of the total cable operation) were $76.6 million, up 22% from 1984 despite the sale of two Michigan systems last September.

Major divestitures in 1985 included Pontiac Cablevision in Michigan and the closing of a business forms facility in Los Angeles (formerly part of Transkrit Corp.).

Media revenues grew 10.6% at Macromedia Inc. in 1985 over the previous year, stimulated largely by substantial advertising and circulation gains at the group's lead media property, the Bergen County Record, and the acquisition of a midsized newspaper that extends the company's dominance over its northern New Jersey home base.

Hackensack-based Macromedia, the 85th largest media company, comprises Bergen Record Corp. (the Record) and Gateway Communications' tv stations, and in late 1985, added the News Tribune of Woodbridge, N.J.

Macromedia, a holding company privately owned by Malcolm A. Borg and his family trusts, is dominated by its newspaper operations, which produced revenues of $97.6 million in 1985, up nearly 12.6% from 1984. Tv generated $22.4 million, up only 0.5%.

Macromedia reinforced its position in the northern New Jersey newspaper arena with the December, 1985, acquisition from Middlesex Publishing Co. of the News Tribune, which serves the Perth Amboy-Woodbridge area. Purchase price was not disclosed. Middlesex Publishing is owned by the John Burk family. The weekday afternoon had a circulation of 51,635, according to six-month ABC averages ended March 31, 1986. This compares with 54,041 a year earlier.

"We view this purchase as an opportunity for corporate growth in a market which shares many of the demographic characteristics of Bergen County. Middlesex's current growth rate makes the News Tribune an attractive addition," says Mr. Borg, chairman of the board of Macromedia Inc. The Middlesex-Somerset-Hunterdon region in north-central New Jersey ranked fifth in national median household gross income in 1984. The Bergen-Passaic area ranked 12th among U.S. government-designated metropolitan statistical areas.

Macromedia will mesh operations of the News Tribune with those of the Record, the largest evening circulation newspaper in the state with primary readership in Bergen, Passaic and Morris counties. Selected editorial material from the Record already has found its way into the pages of the News Tribune. Combo advertising rates are planned between the two publications.

During 1985, the Record's over-all advertising increased 14.7%. It carried 9.5% more advertising inches and 7.5% more insert advertising. The newspaper has shown especially strong growth in its four-color advertising. In 1985, the paper carried 348,000 ins. of color advertising. For the second straight year, the Record ranked first among the nation's newspapers for Sunday color advertising, as measured by Media Records, which also ranked the Record first among evening and Sunday newspapers for color advertising, after placing fourth in 1984.

The Record's advertising growth, in part, results from an aggressive sales pitch to advertisers that keys on the prime demographics of its readership. Its market accounts for 21% of all retail sales in New Jersey.

In 1985, the newspaper entered its third year of a modernization campaign, adding an additional $10 million to upgrade its headquarters and printing and newspaper handling facilities.

Operation Plus, a companywide circulation drive, was initiated in 1985 to increase over-all Record readership. Emphasis was placed on continuing the newspaper's move into adjacent Passaic and Morris counties. According to Frank J. Savino, vp-marketing for the Record, Operation Plus resulted in an increase of nearly 18,000 new subscriptions.

For the year, daily circulation averaged 161,969, according to ABC six-month averages ended March 31, 1986, an increase of 3.2% over the corresponding period in 1985. Sunday circulation averaged 227,205, up slightly from 225,520.

To augment its increased circulation in Passaic and Morris counties, the Record has added editorial, circulation and advertising staff to its satellite Passaic/Morris office in Wayne, N.J. The editorial staff of the newspaper received 10 first-place awards and 27 total awards from the New Jersey Press Assn. in 1985.

Gateway Communications, Cherry Hill, N.J., the broadcast arm of Macromedia, stood still during 1985. It operates one uhf and three vhf tv stations.

Gateway owns and operates an ABC affiliate station in Charleston/Huntington, W.Va., the nation's 44th largest media market (or ADI as established by Arbitron). It owns and operates CBS affiliate stations in Binghamton, N.Y., the 133rd largest market; Johnstown/Altoona, Pa., the 49th market, and Lancaster/Lebanon, Pa., the 46th market. Channel 15 in Lebanon/Lancaster is the company's lone uhf holding.

A Macromedia spokeswoman declined to reveal any acquisition plans in either publishing or broadcasting.

McCall's magazine, the lead property of McCall Publishing Co., cut its rate base from 6.2 million to 5 million and reduced its advertising rates by 13.6% in 1985 to keep pace in the highly competitive women's service magazine field.

The move was an attempt to make McCall's more attractive to advertisers by offering lower prices and a more targeted audience in hopes of building back the 3% decline in ad pages in 1985.

McCall, owned by the Pritzker (Hyatt Hotels) family of Chicago, was the 73rd largest media company, with estimated net revenues of $152.9 million in media in 1985, an 18.8% increase over restated revenues of $128.7 million in 1984. That result was based largely on a 6% growth in ad dollars because of higher rates in 1985 and a strong performance from Working Mother, including a 10.5% increase in ad dollars and a 10% increase in circulation.

Robert Krefting, exec vp at McCall Publishing, defends the rate base changes initiated by McCall's Oct. 25, 1985: "Lowering the rate base allows us to maximize circulation profits while concentrating on our market segment. It allows us to deliver a large, efficient audience while at the same time lowers costs for the advertiser. McCall's, by focusing on a smaller, more productive group, can also make more money in the long run," he says.

Lowering of the ad rate allows the magazine to be more competitive in an attractive, but mature women's service sector. McCall's registered the largest drop in advertising rates of the seven major women's service magazines, but its 3% decline in ad pages to 1,193 was not the only drop in ad pages among the service books. Redbook's ad pages were off 0.9%; Woman's Day's, 6.9%; Better Homes & Gardens, 9.1%. Good Housekeeping, which led the women's service pack with 2,032 ad pages, registered only a 1% gain in ad pages.

McCall's 3% decline (37 pages) in ad pages, was almost exclusively a result of the loss of the R.J. Reynolds' business. In all, McCall's tobacco business was down 50 pages, according to Mr. Krefting. Much of the decline was offset by a 10% growth in food categories and 40% improvement in mail order, and a 12% growth in toiletries and cosmetics.

Although McCall's has made some progress in attracting automotive advertisers, the company believes it ought to make further inroads. An automotive study is under way to help McCall's prove its point to auto makers.

In an effort to make McCall's an efficient and attractive media buy to advertisers, the magazine has instituted various merchandising programs, including a spring beauty promotion that combines McCall's, Working Mother and the company's annual beauty guide into a combined buy.

During the past year, single-copy sales declined by 13.6%, to 664,467, according to ABC totals for the June 30, 1985, reporting period. Better Homes & Gardens and Redbook were the only women's service publications to gain in single-copy sales, by 12.1%, and 20.1%, respectively, for that period.

The editorial product at McCall's magazine has undergone changes in format and focus to enhance its readability and to attract advertising. During the past year, the magazine introduced self-contained articles, which have been in use at Working Mother, but is unusual to the women's service magazine field. Rather than beginning an article with a four-color spread, followed by a 40-page jump to the black-and-white carry-over, McCall's articles are presented as self-contained, page-by-page units. This gives McCall's more flexibility in positioning and makeup, and also eliminates the clutter of back-of-the-book carryovers. Advertisers have more opportunities to face off editorial they're most interested in because the new format creates extra adjacencies.

Editorial subject matter at McCall's now includes more emphasis on childcare, and health and fitness, in addition to its traditional offerings. A. Elizabeth Sloan, former director of the Good Housekeeping Institute, was named the new editor in November, 1985, replacing Robert Stein, who continues as a consultant to the magazine.

McCall's continued its image-changing advertising campaign, "McCall's—more than the expected," in which six famous faces grace print and outdoor ads as McCalls's "typical" readers. Joining Tina Turner, Carly Simon, Cher and Diane Von Furstenburg this past year were Bette Midler, portrayed as "One of the old-fashioned girls who reads McCall's," and Yoko Ono, "One of the dull conformists who reads McCall's." Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver in New York handles. A new wrinkle in the campaign is the placing of ads on phone booths in Manhattan and Chicago.

McCall's, owned by a private, free-standing publisher often is rumored to be a buyout target. "We're not short on offers," Mr. Krefting says, "but the magazine is NOT for sale." McCall's has been under the Pritzker family's control since it was bought for $8 million in 1973 from Norton Simon Inc., now part of Beatrice Cos.

McCall's, which celebrates its 110th anniversary this year, started a new publication Jan. 1, 1986, called Baby!. The new venture by the editorial and marketing staff of Working Mother is scheduled to be distributed to 3.3 million new mothers per year, reaching an average of 9,000 new mothers a day. The distribution vehicle is the First Moments Inc. new parents sampling kit, which is delivered to new mothers in the hospital the day after giving birth. Advertisers buy one year's worth of births, reaching 9 out of 10 new mothers, via three printings a year. Thanks to the interest of advertisers including Procter & Gamble, Gerber Foods, Mattel, Johnson & Johnson and Eastman Kodak, Baby! was in the black with its first issue.

Its parent publication, Working Mother, increased circulation to 556,000, according to the ABC audit covering the second half of 1985. This represented a 10% circulation increase. Working Mother was launched in October, 1978, and has been a monthly since 1981. The magazine's distribution exceeded its rate base of 550,000 on every issue last year, Mr. Krefting says. During the past year, advertising revenues grew by 20.8%, while ad pages grew to 882, up 1.2%, according to Publishers Information Bureau.

Working Mother addresses a growing market—19.5 million working mothers and 46% of all new mothers because that is the percentage who return to work before the child turns a year old. Its circulation is 98% subscription, and the median age of its readers is 35.5 years, according to a Beta Research Corp. study.

Working Mother's regular features include "The Healthy Child," "Take Care of Yourself" and "Relax While it Cooks." Three new regular features, "Video Review," "Microwave Magic," and "Traveler's Advisory," were added this past year.

In July, 1985, McCall, Times Mirror Magazines and Meredith Corp. each sold their one-third interests in Select Magazines, a national magazine distributor, to John O'Reilly of Regional Financial Enterprises, a New Canaan, Conn.-based ventures capital company. The three remain clients of Select.

Robert Krefting is a newcomer to McCall. The former president and ceo of City Home Publishing became exec vp in December, succeeding Andrew Dempsey, who became the new president of Times Mirror Magazines. Richard Selby, McCall creative director, was named promotion director, succeeding Marie Conklin, who left the company to become promotion director for Sunday Magazine Network, New York. Ned Marini is McCall's new chief financial officer. He replaced Bruce Milove in February, 1985.

McClatchy Newspapers, a media company consisting of seven dailies, three weeklies, four radio properties and four cable systems, is leaving the cable business and investing more heavily in the newspaper field in 1986.

The Sacramento, Cal.-based company, which was the 41st largest media company with an estimated 7.8% increase in media revenues in 1985, is buying the Tacoma (Wash.) News-Tribune from Tribune Publishing Co.

The Tacoma paper has a circulation of 107,678 evenings and 119,150 Sunday, according to six-month ABC figures ended March 31, 1986.

Newspapers already represent about 85% of family-owned McClatchy Newspapers, a percentage set to increase with the company's decision to sell four cable systems with 86,000 subscribers to Continental Cablevision Inc., Boston. The systems take in Reno, Nev., and Fresno, Marysville/Yuba City and Visalia, Cal. CCI is the seventh largest cable operator in the U.S. in subscribers. No sale price was disclosed. The cable sale will help pay for the Tacoma newspaper purchase, which reportedly will cost $205 million.

McClatchy's rationale for entering cable was that "there might be a synergism with newspapers and that cable, in fact, might even threaten newspapers' advertising base," Erwin Potts, exec. vp says. "Certainly, that has not happened and we don't think it's going to happen to any significant degree. Cable is a good sound business, but we found that as a newspaper company, we were not as good at running a cable system as we were a newspaper. So we decided to stick to our knitting."

In 1985, the hotly competitive circulation battle between the Anchorage Daily News (in which McClatchy acquired an 80% interest in 1979) and the Anchorage Times continued to show gains for the Daily News. From a daily circulation of 12,000 in 1979, the News circulation had risen to 53,169 daily and 64,545 Sunday, according to ABC reports of March 31, 1986. Those same reports place the Times at 40,029 daily and 50,070 Sunday. The Daily News for that period was up slightly from the same period in 1985 and the Times was down slightly.

The Daily News advertising-to-editorial ratio now is almost up to 60%. The various departments of the Daily News were to move into a new $28 million building in June.

McClatchy is best known for its ownership of the Sacramento Bee, Fresno Bee and Modesto Bee, all dailies that have shown small gains during the past year. Circulation figures for the period ending March 31, 1986, were 235,991 daily and 273,912 Sunday for Sacramento; 139,213 daily and 166,943 Sunday for Fresno, and 74,260 daily and 80,980 Sunday for Modesto. While the Fresno and Modesto papers don't face head-on competition, the Sacramento paper faces a challenge from the Sacramento Union, although it dominates the morning Union (94,097 circulation) and Sunday paper (92,860).

McClatchy dailies in other markets were also on the move. Operations of the Gilroy Dispatch, a five-day-a-week paper that serves the southern end of Silicon Valley, were consolidated to serve also as a central production facility for other company newspapers: the weekly Morgan Hill Times and the Hollister Freeland. Mr. Potts reports the circulation decline of the Tri-City Herald in Richland, Wash., appears to have bottomed out and the daily is beginning to show some small gains.

Key personnel changes saw Robert Byerly, formerly general manager of the Sacramento Bee, take over as director of operations of all three Bee newspapers. He was succeeded as general manager at Sacramento by Frank Whittaker, who held a similar post with the Toronto Star. John Ward, formerly an executive with Knight-Ridder Newspapers in Fort Wayne, Ind., became the new general manager of the Modesto Bee.

Arbitron ratings for the Sacramento market show McClatchy's news/talk am station KFBK No. 1 in its field, going from a 5.7 to a 6.7 rating in the fall book. In this period the company's country music station, KAER (fm), saw some slippage, going from a 4.4 to a 3.3 rating, reflecting increased competition from a new country music station.

In Fresno, both McClatchy radio stations were up in Arbitron's fall numbers, KMJ news/talk jumping from 8.5 to a 9.6, while country music station KNAX (fm) moved from 4.3 to a 4.6 rating.

While its cable operations soon will be only a memory at McClatchy, the company's electronic communication division continues to chalk up mostly gains for its radio operations and some wins and losses with its videotex ventures. On the plus side is LegiTech, a computerized service for tracking state legislation and political contributions, which is sold for a fee to magazines, newspapers, government agencies and lobbyists in California, New York and Washington.

El Dorado Teleguide, a public access electronic information service begun in 1984, has 100 terminals in use throughout Sacramento, Lake Tahoe and Reno. The units are placed in hotels, shopping areas, convention centers and casinos and offer an advertiser-supported service that contains 3,200 pages of information on restaurants, hotels, local events, areas of interest and advertising. The software is licensed to El Dorado Teleguide by Infomart of Canada.

But the past year also saw the dissolution of McClatchy's partnership with Times Mirror Co. and the Bakersfield Californian in Grass Roots California, another videotex project. The system offered weather, commodity and farm management information to the agricultural community, but McClatchy opted to pull out because "we felt we were in enough videotex projects with Teleguide and LegiTech," Mr. Potts says.

The company also put an end to its consideration of a joint venture in cellular radio with Cellular Communications, New York, and FMI, Miami. "We still have some holdings in cellular in the Oxnard-Ventura franchise," Mr. Potts says, "and we don't know where we're going with those at the moment."

McGraw-Hill and its leading magazine, Business Week, had a less than stellar year as poor market conditions cut deeply into many of the business sectors addressed by McGraw-Hill.

New York-based McGraw-Hill, the 16th largest media company, had over-all net income growth of only 2.2% on operating revenue growth of 6.4%. Media revenues grew from 68.7% in 1984 to 69.1% of total revenues, and generated operating profit of $228.6 million, up 1.6% from 1984.

Business Week, despite its troubles, still led all U.S. newsweekly and business magazines in advertising pages for 1985 and ranked No. 1 in ad revenues among business magazines and sixth among all U.S. magazines. Ad revenue of $169.1 million was down 8.5% on a 15.2% drop in ad pages to 4,214. Business Week had gains in both ad pages and revenue in 1984.

McGraw-Hill Book Co., representing $460.2 million in revenues and $67.5 million in operating income, is considered the only nonmedia contribution to McGraw-Hill's total revenues in this special media report.

In 1985, McGraw-Hill completed the corporatewide reorganization begun the year before by creating 21 market focus groups. Rather than center on individual products, the company is positioned to take a multimedia approach in each of its activities.

Information Systems Co., the largest sector in the media group consisting largely of F.W. Dodge and Sweet's divisions—including construction magazines—had revenues of $352.6 million in 1985, up 2.9%, and operating profit of $89.3 million, up 3.1%; the Publications Co., with some 60 magazines, newsletters and newswires, had revenues of $313 million, down 0.7%, and operating profit of $47.8 million, down 17.5%.

The Financial & Business Information Group, created in 1985 in the reorganization and consisting of Standard & Poors Corp. and Financial & Economic Information Co., had revenues of $282.1 million, up 25.9%, and operating profit of $63.8 million, up 27.6%. The Broadcasting Co., made up of four tv stations in major markets, had revenues of $83.3 million, up 1.6%, and operating profit of $27.5 million, down 9% from the prior year.

The company recorded an active year of startups and acquisitions, particularly its Information Systems Co. sector. It started the Byte Information Exchange (BIX), which permits personal computer users to exchange information on-line via their computers, and launched, on a test basis, "Engineering News Record On-Line" electronic marketing service.

The company started a new cable-to-computer news and data service, X*PRESS Information Services, as a general partnership by subsidiaries of McGraw-Hill, Tele-Communications Inc. and Telecrafter Corp. XIS feeds news, information and data from more than 24 information sources around the world directly into subscribers' personal computers.

McGraw-Hill entered into another joint venture with Citibank to provide an integrated global electronic trading, information and financial services marketplace for a range of commodities. Global Electronic Markets Co. is a general partnership.

McGraw-Hill acquired certain assets of Data Decisions from Ziff-Davis Publishing Co. Data Decisions publishes newsletters and loose-leaf reports on computers and communications systems.

The company acquired Numerax, a provider of transportation information and tariff data.

McGraw-Hill's Publishing Co. sector launched Commercial Space, a new magazine covering business opportunities in outer space. Aviation Week & Space Technology produced McGraw-Hill's first video magazine on the Paris air show.

Australian Computing, a new magazine for business professionals, was started by McGraw-Hill Australia. And the company started Building Economics, a monthly aimed at the post-construction market.

There was a large handful of acquisitions as well. The company acquired Money Market Directories Inc., publishers of directories and electronic services to the financial industry. From Bill Communications, it acquired Industrial Chemical News, and from International Thomson, COADE, a provider of microcomputer software for process engineers.

Six properties were bought from R.P.W. Publishing Corp., a publisher of newsletters and other information products for the legal profession.

Several newsletters were begun in 1985: "Cogeneration Report," "Inside F.E.R.C.'s Gas Market Report," "Waste-to-Energy Report," "Electronic Chemicals News," "33 Metal Producing Patents Watch" and "McGraw-Hill's Biotechnology Patentwatch."

There was one new newswire: Platt's Olefinscan.

One publication was withdrawn from the depressed computer publication sector—Popular Computing—a general interest sister publication to Byte.

Heavy price discounting in the newsprint industry, costs of restructuring its broadcast services division and huge capital outlays for a cable system forced a drop of 18% in earnings at Media General, the first decrease since 1976.

The Richmond, Va.-based company, ranked 36th among U.S. media companies, recorded an increase of 12.1% in over-all media revenues, paced by its newspaper group's 4.9% growth to $253.2 million, although profits declined 8.8% in the division. Media General's newspaper group publishes dailies in Richmond, Va.; Tampa, Fla., and Winston-Salem, N.C., and 35 weeklies in Southern California.

Media General's tv group, with stations in Tampa; Jacksonville, Fla., and Charleston, S.C., showed a 19.1% increase in revenues to $41.7 million, and its cable operation, with systems in Fairfax and Fredericksburg, Va., had $24.5 million in revenues, up from $7.5 million in 1984.

Revenues from magazines and electronic database services were $11.2 million, down slightly from $11.6 million in 1984.

Over-all, revenues from Media General's broadcasting division (cable, tv and ad repping) increased 31.7% in 1985 to $128.7 million, but despite increases in tv and cable revenues, the division ended the year with an operating loss because of the heavy cable expenses and continued losses at Media General Broadcast Services.

For the purposes of this analysis, ADVERTISING AGE's media figures do not include ad placement revenues from Media General Broadcasting Services. Its revenues, estimated at $62.4 million in 1985, are up 12% from 1984.

Media General's daily newspapers showed only a 2% revenue increase during 1985, after spectacular 43% and 28% increases in the two preceding years. In Richmond, the chain's leading Times-Dispatch and News-Leader added three color presses to help advertising opportunities in a business community strengthened by continuing construction of the $375 million James Center complex, part of a downtown revitalization. The combined daily circulation of the papers dropped 1% to 251,065, although the Sunday Times-Dispatch grew 2.2% to 240,182, according to six-month ABC averages ended March 31, 1986.

The Tampa Tribune announced a $40 million investment through 1988 to purchase new presses to support an anticipated 65% increase in circulation over the next 15 years. The city's population is expected to increase to 2 million by 1990 and 2.4 million by the year 2000. The Tribune's daily circulation rose 1.3% to 228,708, and the Sunday climbed 3.3% to 307,525.

Media General closed the evening Winston-Salem Sentinel in early 1985, faced with declining circulation, at a loss of some $900,000. It reallocated its publishing resources to the morning Journal, which now has a daily circulation of 91,536, according to six-month ABC reports ended March 31, 1986. Winston-Salem's economy has been relatively stable, the company says.

Media General West was created in 1985 to centralize management of Highlander Publications and Golden West Publishing, two groups of weekly newspapers in Los Angeles and Orange counties in California. Both reported circulation gains in 1985, but the Highlander group reported a loss of revenues because of slower economic growth in the area and greater competition.

And Garden State Newspapers, in which Media General has a 40% interest, bought two New Jersey newspapers—the Paterson News and Union City Dispatch—from Allbritton Communications for an estimated $50 million to $60 million. Golden State Newspapers bought other newspapers during 1985 in California, Texas, Ohio, Michigan and Washington.

Media General's Sunbelt tv stations will be improving their reach as their local markets grow. The Tampa market currently is 17th, Jacksonville, 62nd, and Charleston, 108th, according to Arbitron areas of dominant influence.

New 2,000-ft. tv transmission towers, to be built in Tampa and Charleston, are expected to strengthen market coverage and revenue potential in those cities' stations.

Media General's Fairfax cable system, which began operation in 1983, will rank as one of the nation's top 10 stand-alone systems when completed next year. The system now serves 100,000 subscribers with 1,900 miles of aerial and underground cable. When completed, more than 3,000 miles of cable will serve some 140,000 customers, generating revenues of more than $55 million a year.

The Fairfax system has 80 active channels, and revenues average $27 per subscriber monthly, second among cable systems in that category.

Nevertheless, with an estimated capital expenditure of $55 million in 1985, the system has yet to break even. "We'll have a positive cash flow in 1987," Media General vp David L. Jordan says. "We're not talking about profitability until 1988."

Media General Broadcast Services continued to rebuild in 1985, recovering slowly from business irregularities and criminal and civil charges against its founder, William B. Tanner, from whom Media General bought the then William T. Tanner Co. in late 1982. Tanner has been convicted of income tax fraud, and civil action against him still is pending as is a $75 million Media General civil suit against an accounting firm for its audit report on the Tanner Co. made before the acquisition.

Media General Broadcast Services obtains broadcast time and print space for advertisers at discount rates, both with cash and barter.

Other media operations at Media General include Media General Financial Services, which provides financial data to trade and business publications, and Cliggott Publishing, which publishes five monthly medical journals, including the Journal of Critical Illness, which debuted in 1986. Technical Information Distribution Service produces three publications for the electronics industry, and Media General Business Communications publishes Virginia Business, a monthly magazine begun in March, 1986.

Among Media General's nonmedia properties are Beacon Press, a commercial printing concern, and a newsprint operation, which accounts for some 13% of all U.S. newsprint output.

In an October, 1985, management restructuring, J. Stewart Bryan III and James A. Linen IV were elected vps. Mr. Bryan, also vice-chairman, has primary responsibility for daily newspaper and tv operations, with Mr. Linen in charge of newsprint broadcast, magazine and community newspaper operations.

Media revenues drawn from a spate of newspaper acquisitions have propelled 3-year-old Media News Group onto ADVERTISING AGE's 100 top media companies chart. The latest acquisition, just concluded in May, folded nine new newspaper properties into the Woodbury, N.J.-based company.

Media News Group, which owns 21 small and medium-size dailies, also traded two newspapers and sold another. The company ranks as the 74th largest media company in 1985 with revenues of $150 million, according to the company, which expects the latest acquisitions and increased revenues from existing properties to drive up revenues to $175 million by yearend.

The May 2 purchase included seven from Harte-Hanks Communications of San Antonio, Tex., and two New Jersey newspapers from the Allbritton family.

Newspapers purchased were: Paterson, N.J., News; Dispatch of Union City, N.J.; Hamilton (O.) Journal-News; Yakima (Wash.) Herald Republic; Big Spring (Tex.) Herald; Del Rio (Tex.) News Herald; Huntsville (Tex.) Item; Marshall (Tex.) News Messenger, and Ypsilanti (Mich.) Press.

The acquisitions carry an aggregate daily circulation of 186,425, according to six-month ABC averages for the period ended March 31, 1986. That is down about 3% from the corresponding reporting period a year earlier.

As part of the deal, the company traded two New England dailies to Harte-Hanks Communications, the Daily Transcript of Dedham, Mass., and the News-Tribune of Waltham, Mass. Both are evening papers and part of New England Newspapers Inc. Circulations for both are edging slightly downward in the midst of a lively circulation war between the market's two big combatants—the Boston Globe and the Herald American.

At the same time of the other actions, Media News Group sold the Lake County Telegraph of Painesville, O., to the Horvitz family, owners of the Lorain Journal, Lorain, O.

Media News Group is 40% owned by Media General of Richmond, Va. Media General also owns Garden State Newsprint, which sells recycled newsprint to publications, including those owned by Media News Group.

Circulation of Media News Group's newspapers in 1985 (including the acquisitions) dropped about 1% to a 929,710 aggregate, according to composites taken from six-month ABC averages ended March 31, 1986. The group's largest daily is the North Jersey Herald-News, Passaic, which had evening circulation of 58,055, down 1.2%, and Sunday circulation of 53,894, down 1.3% for the same reporting period. One of the faster growing papers is the Daily Review, Hayward, Cal., with evening circulation of 48,280, up 4.5%, and Sunday circulation of 48,138, up 1.9%.

Media News Group had its beginning in 1983 when William Dean Singleton and Richard Scudder jointly purchased the Gloucester County Times in Woodbury, N.J. The Scudder family formerly owned the Newark Evening News, which competed with Advance's Newark Star Ledger. The evening paper was sold to Media General in 1969, only to fold several years later.

Mr. Scudder is the co-inventor of the newsprint recycling process and the founder of Garden State Newsprint. Mr. Singleton says that in "buying these newspapers, I'm planning for my grandchildren and great-grandchildren." Although the group has purchased many relatively small-circulation dailies, it is not his intent to build circulation, then turn around and sell the publications at a profit, Mr. Singleton says.

The group does spend money as needed to improve the newspapers after purchasing them, he says.

"There's no formula. Every newspaper is different. If the news product is bad, we improve the news. If the previous owner hasn't spent enough on promotion, we spend more. Where the equipment is old-fashioned, we automate."

The group also uses a cluster approach wherever possible by buying newspapers in the same geographic area and combining printing facilities, Mr. Singleton says. The group has done this with its New Jersey newspapers, closing print facilities in Paterson and consolidating production facilities for four newspapers in two plants.

"We came up on the news side," Mr. Singleton says. "We believe in the importance of news. To keep buying newpapers, we have to make money, so we are profit oriented, but not at the expense of news."

What does Mr. Singleton look for in a potential newspaper acquisition? "We look for those that are for sale," he says.

Buoyed by revenue growth from its acquisition this fiscal year of Ladies' Home Journal, Meredith Corp. in the nine months of its current fiscal year ended March 31, 1986, earned net income of $37.5 million, up 12% from the year-earlier period, while posting total revenues of $391.3 million, a 10.4% gain. But softness in Meredith's main business—magazine publishing—is expected to hamper profit growth in the near future at the company. General weakness in the industry begun in the spring of 1985 has accelerated.

Des Moines, Ia.-based Meredith was the 32nd largest media company based on media revenues of $356.2 million for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1985, up 8.9% from fiscal 1984. Media represent 75% of total revenues at Meredith, which also is involved in real estate, insurance, video and book publishing.

Fiscal 1985, however, brought an 8% increase in magazine ad revenues, to $129.5 million, which represented 27.3% of total corporate revenues. Magazine circulation revenues grew 9%, to nearly $98 million, accounting for 20.6% of the corporate total.

Community newspapers in California generated unchanged revenues of $9 million, while two majority-owned cable operators in Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana and Texas posted $5 million in revenues, up 25%.

Broadcasting revenues, which grew 10% to $114.7 million, come from the company's eight tv stations. Meredith last year sold the Georgia Radio News Service and its two remaining radio properties in Atlanta, shifting its emphasis to the relatively stable tv medium. The $20 million sale was made to a unit of Cincinnati-based Jacor Communications.

But publishing remains the bulwark of Meredith's business, evidenced by the Ladies' Home Journal purchase, which makes Meredith the second company to own two of the "Seven Sisters" category of women's service magazines. Hearst Corp., New York, owns Redbook and Good Housekeeping.

Competition in the category, however, has intensified in recent years, leading Meredith's flagship Better Homes & Gardens to join the practice of discounting "off the card." The company expects to increase both titles' ad revenues through joint marketing of the two women's titles, although it likely will retain separate sales forces. LHJ, like the earlier acquired Sail, is operated as an autonomous, wholly owned subsidiary of Meredith.

Meredith also agreed to acquire Health from Family Media for an additional $4 million, but it backed out of the acquisition because company officials said Family Media could not guarantee copyright protection on the magazine's title.

BH&G in calendar 1985 sold 1,363 ad pages, a 9.1% decline, for revenues of $123 million—down 2.3%—making it by far the single largest contributo to Meredith totals, according to Publishers Information Bureau.

Ladies' Home Journal, while still owned by Family Media, sold 1,36 pages, a 7.9% increase, for revenues o $77 million, up 15.8%, according t PIB. BH&G is the largest circulatio women's service magazine, with yearend 1985 average paid total of million; LHJ had an average paid cir culation of 5.2 million.

Other titles, including Successfu Farming and Farm Computer News were battered by the agricultura slump. Metropolitan Home posted 12.3% ad page loss, to 774, in 1985, bu had unchanged ad revenues of $13. million. WOOD and Country Hom saw steady growth, with the latte boasting of record issues in early 1986.

Meredith's magazine growth strat egy normally consists of a one-sho magazine tryout through the Bette Homes & Gardens Special Interes Publications. Nineteen such titles with a combined estimated rate base o 15 million, are published quarterly twice-annually or annually as news stand-only products. Successful title then are converted into regular sub scription magazines; Country Home i the most recent example.

Better Homes & Gardens' Grandpar ents is the next Special Interest Publi cation test, slated for January debut a an annual with a rate base of 300,000 The company believes it has found an other publishing niche and hopes t address grandparenting concerns, onl one segment of editorial material cov ered by magazines such as Modern Maturity.

In May, 1986, Meredith execs con firmed they've given the go-ahead t quarterly or twice-annual publicatio of Midwest Living, a regional variatio on BH&G. Midwest Living, also teste in a subscription mailing under th Heartland logo, is modeled after Sun set and Time Inc.'s Southern Living both successful titles dependent on strong regional identity among read ers. Despite favorable response fro the subscription test, some publishin execs privately expressed concern tha midwesterners are a less cohesiv group and therefore a less accessibl audience.

Regional efforts are not new t Meredith, however. It participates i City Home Publishing, a 50%-owne joint venture that publishes Dalla Home & Garden and Houston Home & Garden. Company execs have said ex pansion to other markets depends o results of the Texas efforts. Interna tionally, a Meredith subsidiary own 50% of an Australian BH&G.

Among significant personne changes this year, Jack Rehm move to the new post of exec vp-corporat relations from president, publishin group. Mr. Rehm now has authorit for all magazine and book publishin operations, including LHJ. Jame Autry moved to the new post of presi dent, magazine group, from senior vp general manager, publishing group Fred Stines moved to the new post o president, book group, from senior vp publishing group. Messrs. Autry an Stines report to Mr. Rehm. Also Christopher Lehman joined Meredit in the new post of vp-operations, mov ing from president-chief operating offi cer, Venture Magazine Inc.

Diversification, expansion into outdoor and innovation at Morris Communications Corp. pushed up media revenues 30% over 1984 levels, ranking MCC the 40th largest U.S. media company in 1985.

Headquartered in golfers' mecca, Augusta, Ga., Morris was a family-owned newspaper business that diversified into commercial printing, computer services and, most recently, outdoor advertising.

What started as a newspaper chain in medium-size Georgia cities is now a communications complex with a growing presence in the Southeast, Midwest, Texas, California and Alaska. Heading MCC are chairman-ceo, William Morris III, and president, Paul Simon.

Morris Communications' biggest development in 1985 was its acquisition of Naegele Outdoor Advertising Cos., Minneapolis. Naegele Outdoor's annual revenues were an estimated $104.7 million in 1985, half of which were folded into Morris returns because of the July purchase date. Naegele covers about 400 cities in 20 states with more than 30,000 poster panels. It ranks behind Patrick Media Group (Foster & Kleiser), Gannett Outdoor, 3M National Advertising and Winston Network in total out-of-home revenues.

MCC's acquisition of Naegele is similar to moves taken by other newspaper chains, such as Donrey Media Group and Park Communications, which also have direct or related interests in outdoor.

For its basic newspaper business, 1985 performance was about on par with the previous year. A Morris spokesman says the company is confident about its continuing performance because population is growing in our markets. They're all strong." Comparing combined average circulation of the 14 Morris dailies for the year, the 1985 daily total was off less than 1%, easing to 546,526 from 549,399 in 1984. The Sunday combined average for 1985 also was down less than 1%, to 560,030 in 1985 from 564,623 in 1984.

In Morris' biggest newspaper market, Jacksonville, Fla., six-month ABC averages for the period ended March 31, 1986, show combined circulation of the seven-day morning Florida Times-Union and evening Jacksonville Journal of 204,798, slightly up over the corresponding period in 1985. Sunday's Times-Union 1985 average five-day morning Chronicle and five-day evening Herald rose to 81,341 from 79,414. Average 1985 circulation for the Sunday Chronicle-Herald inched up a fraction, to 85,781 from 85,221.

Morris' third market, Savannah, Ga., has two dailies, the morning News and evening Press, with 1985 total averages of 76,677, down from 77,099. The Sunday News-Press circulated an average 74,213 compared with 73,532 in the year-earlier period.

Two other papers in the Jacksonville area that Morris acquired from transport giant CSX Corp. in its 1982 deal for the Times-Union and Journal are its second smallest daily, the St. Augustine Record, and its largest weekly, the Putnam County Courier-Journal. The smallest daily in the MCC chain is the Juneau Empire, the only daily in Alaska's capital. Its circulation average for 1985 fell about 2%, to 7,685.

In Texas the Morris papers also had a relatively flat year. Combined average daily circulation in Amarillo, with the morning Daily News and evening Globe-Times, was off 2.6% to 72,282. The Sunday News-Globe dropped slightly to 77,721.

The combined loss of 1.4% to 72,047 was recorded at the Lubbock (Tex.) Avalanche Journal and the Evening Journal. The Sunday Avalanche Journal circulation fell 5.1% to 77,538.

As in the Jacksonville area, with its St. Augustine Record and Putnam County Courier-Journal, Morris registers several smaller papers in the Athens, Ga., area. These include the twice-weekly Elberton Star-Beacon; the weekly News Leader in Royston, Ga., and the weekly Hartwell (Ga.) Sun. In the Hilton Head, S.C., resort area, Morris publishes another weekly, the Hilton Head News, circulating about 7,100.

The single special-interest Morris publication is Quarter Horse News, a fortnightly tabloid out of Fort Worth, Tex., for those who raise, ride and deal in that breed. Chairman/ceo William S. Morris III is a horsebreeder and owner. "Advertiser interest in the tabloid is good," a Morris spokesman says. Circulation has topped 8,000.

Capitalizing on its graphic arts know-how and on the advertising opportunities of its newspaper chain, MCC turns out large volumes of advertising supplements and inserts at three regional plants. St. Johns Publishing Co. is based at the St. Augustine (Fla.) Record plant, while Hartwell Publications, Hartwell, Ga., and Southwestern Publications, Amarillo, Tex., operate in conjunction with the Morris papers in those communities. Reproduction is color and black-and-white offset lithography on newsprint, both sheet-fed and web, for local customers and also national, such as K mart Corp. and Sears, Roebuck & Co. Also, the plants produce other advertising materials plus telephone books and textbooks.

Another Morris communications system is its Compudat, which makes use of its companywide computer linkage to supply electronic data processing services to commercial, agricultural and government customers in the Southeast, Texas and Alaska.

In the same vein as its combinations of daily and weekly newspapers in the same areas and its close-coupled commercial printing operations, Morris' acquisition of Naegele Outdoor could be seen as a further step toward maximizing revenue from some of its present marketing areas plus expanding into many new areas, but some observers may differ in this interpretation. "This was strictly a media purchase," says Gordon Asch, co-owner of Asch Advertising, a Manhattan outdoor specialist agency. "They may have some common clients [but] I expect that they will operate it entirely separately from their newspapers, like Gannett. It can be seen as an investment in media."

Naegele's major competitor is 3M National Advertising Co., Bedford Park, Ill., a unit of Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing, St. Paul. The 3M unit had concluded a buyout agreement with Naegele in October, 1984, for acquisition Jan. 1, 1985. But a Dec. 28, 1984, U.S. Justice Department opinion saying the acquisition potentially would violate provisions of the Clayton Act, which regulates business activities that would result in reduced competition, forced 3M to call off signing a definitive agreement.

Naegele was purchased July 18, 1985, by Morris in a transaction arranged by Chase Manhattan Capital Markets Corp. through a consortium of 10 U.S. and European banks. The purchase price was not disclosed, but was estimated to be about $400 million, industry sources say. Gannett USA, Arlington, Va., also made a bid for Naegele.

Richard F. Condon continues as Naegele's president, remaining in Minneapolis, the company's longtime home base. The headquarters was moved to Augusta and the name changed to Naegele Outdoor Advertising Co. Inc. Mr. Condon, 65, says his retirement plans are uncertain. He has been either exec vp or president for 25 years. Richard Marlowe, formerly assistant to Mr. Condon, has been named the new president.

Naegele continued to grow in 1986 with the acquisition in April, 1986, of St. Paul-based Hubbard Broadcasting's Farvue Outdoor Advertising. City markets for Naegele are primarily in the Southeast: Asheville, Fayetteville, Gastonia, Jacksonville, Kingston, Raleigh-Durham, Greensboro-Winston-Salem-High Point, Wilmington, all in North Carolina, Greenville and Spartanburg, S.C., Columbus, Ga., Jacksonville, Fla., Louisville and Owensboro, Ky., Memphis, New Orleans, Des Moines, Evansville and Indianapolis, Ind., Minneapolis, Youngstown, O., and Palm Springs, Cal.

In other new developments at Morris:

- Plant expansion is under way. At Juneau, Alaska, a new Empire newspaper plant should be completed by the end of 1986. For the Athens, Ga. News and Banner-Herald, Morris announced plans in April, 1986, for a new state-of-the-art plant that should take three years to complete.
- Morris has developed a multifunctional editing and composition program compatible with the IBM PC.
- In a continuing drive for editorial quality, the company has developed its writing coach program for sending skilled editorial specialists to all its papers where they act as visiting consultants. MCC also provides scholarships to the University of Georgia's Grady School of Journalism and Mass Communication.

The bottom line at Multimedia Inc. was adversely affected as the Greenville, S.C.-based company assumed heavy debt to stave off repeated attempts by outsiders to take over in 1985. As a result, earnings declined 36% as revenues increased 10.5%.

Multimedia, ranked 33rd among media companies, recapitalized amid the pressures to merge by borrowing $625 million and issuing $480 million in debentures.

The recapitalization, completed Oct. 1, in corporate language "preserved integrity of the company, benefited our shareholder's cash position, and created a significant opportunity for long-term capital appreciation." In layman's terms, it was a tool to hold the raiders at bay.

Multimedia, whose business is all media, publishes 14 daily and 29 nondaily newspapers, operates five tv and eight radio stations; runs 100 cable tv franchises, and produces and syndicates tv productions, including "Donahue" and "The Sally Jessy Raphael Show."

The takeover attempts began in 1984 with a stock offer by management and four families who founded

Multimedia in 1968. Subsequently, the company turned down a $1 billion offer from Wesray Capital Corp., Morristown, N.J., an investment headed by former Treasury Secretary William E. Simon; a $1.05 billion offer from Lorimar Productions, Culver City, Cal., and several offers by Jack Kent Cooke, owner of the Washington Redskins, who had purchased 9.7% of Multimedia stock and sought a controlling interest.

Last July, Mr. Cooke agreed to Multimedia's offer to purchase his stock for a handsome profit, in return for which he dropped his bid to acquire the company and agreed not to pursue several lawsuits in both federal and state courts over Multimedia's tactics in fighting the takeover attempt.

The deal cleared the way for the recapitalization, approved by more than 85% of the outstanding shares at a stockholders' meeting Sept. 20, 1985. Under the recapitalization, stockholders received cash, a share of the debenture and a partial share of the stock of the recapitalized company. Through this procedure, Multimedia drew in 16.7 million old shares and issued 11 million new ones. While the old Multimedia stock sold as high as $64.12 a share, the recapitalized stock initially sold at 19% and had risen to 35% by the end of April.

The recapitalization plan also contained several "shark repellent" and "poison pill" provisions to make any future takeover attempt of Multimedia far more difficult.

But the cost of recapitalization was an increase in the company's long-term debt from some $80 million to more than $1 billion. In the short term, that means a corporate projection that Multimedia will lose $19.2 million this year and $3.3 million in 1987.

But in the long run, says Robert E. Hamby Jr., vp-finance, The company will profit. Investment analysts and institutional investors, he says, look more at a corporation's cash flow than at its debt, making Multimedia an attractive investment property. Multimedia projects net cash flow to increase from $117.4 million in 1985 to $363.8 million in 1995, when the bank debt will be retired. Corporate sales are projected to increase from $336.3 million in 1985 to $984.1 million in 1995.

Recapitalization aside, 1985 was a good year for all four operating divisions of Multimedia. Newspapers, broadcasting, cablevision and entertainment reported record revenues.

With revenues of $109.1 million, the newspaper division improved profits despite a soft industrywide advertising picture through most of the year. Company officials say advertising increased in the last quarter of the year, however, and that the trend should carry over through 1986.

A new Multimedia daily was established in 1985 when the Baxter Bulletin, Mountain Home, Ark., moved from a three-day-a-week publication to six days. The Ozarks resort area in which the paper is located is one of the fastest growing in Arkansas, doubling its population in the 1970s.

The Staunton News-Leader, Staunton, Va., added a Sunday paper. It also changed its afternoon format to morning publication, as did Multimedia's Albany (Ga.) Observer.

An end-1986 completion is planned for a $10 million press and suburban distribution facility at the Asheville (N.C.) Citizen-Times, and ACCUCAST, a total market coverage program, was initiated at Multimedia's publications in Asheville and Greenville and Spartansburg, S.C.

Big things are forecast by Multimedia for its dozen-odd publications near Nashville with the announcement by General Motors that it will build its new $5 billion Saturn auto assembly plant nearby, stimulating the local economy.

Multimedia's broadcasting division showed a 12% increase in revenues during 1986, to $107 million. Four of its seven tv stations—KSDK in St. Louis, WLWT in Cincinnati, WSTV in Nashville, Tenn., and WMAZ-TV in Macon, Ga.—are network affiliated and led ratings in their viewing areas. The fifth, WZTV in Nashville, is the company's only independent tv station.

During 1985, Multimedia sold four radio stations—KAAY and KLPQ-FM, Little Rock, Ark., and WAKY and WVEZ-FM, Louisville, Ky.—for $7 million, eliminating properties that had been performing poorly. The remaining eight—in Asheville, Macon, Milwaukee and Shreveport—had high ratings in 1985 and, says James T. Lynagh, president of Multimedia Broadcasting Co., "will continue to be trim, muscular and productive."

Multimedia's cablevision division operates 100 cable systems in Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois and North Carolina, increasing subscribers 12,000 during 1985 to 375,000, making Multimedia the country's 30th largest cable operator. Revenue increased 12% to $74 million in 1985, during which Multimedia completed construction of its last pending cable franchise—the Villa Park, Ill., system. Both the Greenville and Rocky Mount, N.C., systems were converted to addressability (through which a cable office can change a customer's service from the office, without dispatching a truck and driver) in 1985.

Multimedia's syndication activities provided $46.2 million in revenues in 1985. The year saw the move of the popular and highly rated "Donahue" show—now in its 19th year—from Chicago to New York's Rockefeller Plaza. Multimedia Entertainment also completed its first year in a new home base at Rockefeller Plaza.

The daily "Sally Jessy Raphael" program grew from 20 markets in 1984 to 70 by the end of the year; "Donahue" to 217 markets. Multimedia Entertainment also produces "Young People's Specials," "America Comes Alive," and "The Now Music City USA," as well as other special tv programing. In 1985, the division began Multimedia Productions, audio and video production companies that produce commercials and trade films.

A new syndicated game show—the working title is "TV Game Show"—is distributed with a pilot in 1985, but reportedly to an unenthusiastic reception, and no decision has been made as to further production. Multimedia Entertainment president Mike Weinblatt says the division is planning a late-night comedy show during 1986, as well as several prime-time situation comedies. In major corporate moves in 1985, the board of directors elected Mr. Hamby as vp-finance; Elizabeth S. Mills as vp-corporate communications, and Thomas L. Magaha as controller.

Mutual Radio's Jim Bohannon no longer uses the National Enquirer as fodder for his weekly "Sleaze Report," a compilation of hard-to-believe stories culled from papers usually found at supermarket checkout counters. The paper's new-found respectability has brought it more readers than a year ago and a slew of advertising from some of the giants in the consumer product field.

The Lantana, Fla.-based National Enquirer, the 71st largest media company in the U.S., reports revenues of $159 million, solely derived from the National Enquirer and the 6-year-old Weekly World News. The revenues are up about 8.2% from $147 million in 1984.

According to ABC, the Enquirer's six-month circulation average for the period ended Dec. 31, 1985, was 4,552,047, up 3.2%. Weekly World News, a digest of global news, features and brights, boasted a circulation gain of 13% to 1,047,629. Its price is up 5 cents, to 55 cents, while the Enquirer is 65 cents.

Publisher James Martise reports that revenues were up in 1985 despite a small decline in advertising sales.

Mr. Martise reports a drop of four pages in advertising in 1985, largely attributable to a 30-page fall in tobacco ads. But he says the number of advertisers of such package goods as food, household products, toiletries and medical products is up some 28% over the year before.

Mr. Martise says advertisers have seen the editorial content of the papers, and now they have what he calls a "comfort factor."

This factor has brought in such companies as Kraft, Procter & Gamble, Campbell Soup Co. and Coty toiletries. Mr. Martise says there is "editorial compatibility" between the features food stories in every issue.

The papers also serve a readership Mr. Martise thinks is served by no other publications, including the women's service magazines. He says those magazines cater to a college-educated, professional woman, whereas the Enquirer and Weekly World News are geared more to a high-school graduate with clerical or secretarial skills. Mr. Martise calls this a market of "unduplicated women."

To sell itself in a market increasingly full of news and entertainment publications, the Enquirer has cut back on celebrity stories, devoting only 30% to 35% of its space to them. The rest is service and human interest oriented.

The Enquirer has no plans to change this mix. The company is continuing to rely on trade publication ads and promotional mailings to attact more national advertising. It has cut back slightly on media spending to lure more readers.

The Enquirer and Weekly World News spent about 9% less in 1985 than the previous year on tv spots, according to Leading National Advertisers, a service that monitors seven media. The $11.6 million Enquirer budget for tv in 1985 contrasts with a $16 million outlay the year earlier. On the other hand, Weekly World News ad spending jumped from less than $100,000 to $2.3 million last year.

To enhance its respectability, the Enquirer has forged links with such medical organizations as the Arthritis Foundation, the American Heart Assn. and the American Cancer Society. "We work with them hand in hand," Mr. Martise says, noting the groups check Enquirer stories for accuracy.

The paper is not above blowing its own horn when it scores a scoop. On page two of one issue this spring, the headline read "You Read It Here First . . . " and the story trumpeted that a new study had found what the Enquirer told its readers four years ago: Olive oil can reduce the risk of heart disease. The Enquirer piece noted the Associated Press finally picked up the story—four years after the Enquirer ran it.

The Enquirer says many of its readers are self-medicated, getting their health tips from such pieces as the olive oil story and a spate of ads for everything from denture plaque remover to grapefruit pills to lose weight.

The Enquirer also works with the Rochester, N.Y.-based Council of Adoptive Parents, featuring articles on hard-to-place children. According to Mr. Martise, these stories have led to the adoption of 163 children. They are either handicapped or from underprivileged backgrounds.

Nationally known ministers such as Robert Sculler and Billy Graham also continue to write regularly for the Enquirer.

Mr. Martise thinks the Enquirer and Weekly World News are well-positioned to keep their major advertisers and continue to build circulation. "The market of the Enquirer," he says, "is very much the market of Middle America."

with its expensive, 2-year-old startup, National Geographic Traveler, nearly emerging in the black. The society saw earnings from media operations grow to $3.8 million, after a $2 million loss in 1984.

Improvements were abundant in all areas for the nation's 51st largest media company. National Geographic saw circulation and ad revenues rise. The monthly magazine had 1985 ad revenues of $35.4 million, up 18% from 1984. It raised prices for color pages by 6.4% and at the same time dropped the rate base to 8.2 million from 8.4 million. Ad pages grew to 301, an increase of 12 pages, in 1985.

The National Geographic Traveler continues to have its problems. Although ad revenue in 1985 rose 33% to $3.6 million, ad pages and circulation dropped. Society officials say the Traveler nearly made it into the black, but couldn't predict whether the magazine would break even in 1986.

This year the Geographic shows no sign of vitality, with a flat first half and few prospects of improvement for the rest of 1986.

"I don't know where the year's going," says George Moffat, the society's ad vp. "We'll be lucky if we end up even with last year."

The Geographic, however, is seeing upward movement in its circulation and increased its rate base this year to 8.25 million. It expects international circulation to grow to 10.8 million by the end of 1986, from 10.5 million in 1985.

Circulation is strong because annual membership dues have remained at $15 since 1983, says Cletis Pride, vp-promotional and education services. Those stable prices give the Geographic an 86% renewal rate. Dues may be raised next year, however, Mr. Pride says.

The Geographic has had few changes in its advertising operation this year. Mr. Moffat may launch an affluent edition in 1987, which would allow advertisers to reach the magazine's higher income readers. The affluent edition would be a departure for the Geographic, which has offered only regional buys for the past several years.

In 1982, Mr. Moffat introduced the "Big G" edition to attract advertisers that only want to reach readers in top markets. Last year Mr. Moffat trimmed Big G's reach to 25 markets, down from 35, to keep the rate base at a manageable 4.25 million.

Big G, Mr. Moffat says, "is holding its own," but last year was down in pages slightly. Big G allows advertisers to buy space at slightly more than half the cost of a regular Geographic page. A one-time 4-color page ad insertion costs $117,715 in the Geographic.

A new regional buy this year is the U.K., with a circulation of 185,000. The edition hasn't caught on yet, Mr. Moffat says, and may be killed if it doesn't show signs of life by year's end.

The international sales force was reorganized last year. Michele Boutin was named international sales director, a new position, from European sales director. The society expanded its sales offices to London, Duesseldorf, Madrid, Sydney and Hong Kong.

Geographic's advertising will continue to be mostly separate from editorial matter. Over the past four years, Mr. Moffat has eased some copy, such as columns and letters to the editor, into the advertising section. No further mixing is likely, he says.

While the Geographic doesn't plan to repeat its highly popular but costly hologram cover this year, it will include a special scent-strip test in an issue this fall to accompany an article on smells.

The society this year spent $700,000 to promote the Geographic with a trade campaign. For the first time, the magazine also bought six weeks of radio time in Detroit to appeal to car advertisers. the Geographic's largest category. McCaffery & Ratner, New York, handles in 1984.

Mr. Moffat says Traveler will carry about 40 ad pages in each issue this year. Traveler's circulation has dropped 9% to 915,000. The society intends to continue selling Traveler only to existing Geographic readers, says Mr. Pride.

The society also publishes "National Geographic Research," a scholarly quarterly launched in January, 1985. The $40-a-year publication has a circulation of 5,000 and does not carry advertising.

"National Geographic World," geared to children between the ages of 8 and 13, continues with a circulation of 1.5 million. It also accepts no advertising.

The National Geographic society has become more aggressive in developing programing for cable and public tv. This year it launched a series of two-hour weekly specials for superstation WTBS, Atlanta. It also continues the "National Geographic Explorer" series, appearing on public tv stations four times a year. In the planning stage is a children's series, likely to be ready in late 1987.

In April the society began distributing videocassettes of its "Explorer" and other specials to retail outlets. The cassettes sell for $29.95.

One of the most active acquisition years ever for News America Publishing, New York, the 21st largest media company, was not reflected in the financial results of its most current fiscal year, ended June 30, 1985.

The subsidiary of News Group Ltd., Sydney, Australia, a company 46% owned by chairman-ceo Rupert Murdoch and his family, during calender 1985, bought half of Twentieth Century-Fox in March for $250 million, then bought the other half from Denver oilman Marvin Davis in September for $325 million.

With Mr. Davis, Mr. Murdoch agreed to buy six of Metromedia Inc.'s seven tv stations for $1.55 billion in cash and the assumption of debt. The stations became the hub of a new network.

Metromedia sold the seventh station, WCVB-TV, Boston, to Hearst Corp. for $450 million.

But Mr. Davis, alarmed over the debt to be assumed in the deal, pulled out, and Mr. Murdoch went it alone. An Australian citizen by birth, he became a naturalized American citizen in a matter of months in order to comply with FCC rules barring more than 25% foreign ownership of broadcast outlets.

In May, just after the Metromedia deal was announced, Mr. Murdoch sold for $55 million the Village Voice, an alternative weekly newspaper in New York. The buyer was Leonard Stern, head of Hartz Mountain, the pet products company.

In between all the acquisitions, News America launched Elle, an English-language version of the French women's fashion and life-style weekly published jointly with Edi Sept Inc. It revamped the national Star to make it more attractive to advertisers and created a flap in the Vatican by announcing plans to begin syndication of a newspaper column called "Selected Observations of Pope John Paul II," a column culled from the writings of the vicar of the Roman Catholic Church. The flap resulted over erroneous news reports that the column would be penned by the Pope himself.

And, finally, Mr. Murdoch succeeded in obtaining a two-year waiver of the FCC requirements that he sell the New York Post and Chicago Sun-Times to comply with its prohibition on cross-ownership of media properties in a single market.

News America launched Fox network in May, 1986, with original programing slated to begin in March, 1987, with the feeding of multihour movie blocks to affiliated stations on weekends. Key to Fox network are the former Metromedia stations now falling under the Fox Broadcasting Co. banner: WNYW-TV (formerly WNEW-TV) in New York, KTTV in Los Angeles, WFLD-TV in Chicago, WTTG in Washington, KDAF-TV in Dallas-Fort Worth (formerly KRLD-TV) and KRIV-TV in Houston. They generated about $350 million in revenues in 1985 while under Metromedia ownership.

The stations have the capacity to cover 21% of all American households when combined with the production abilities and film library of Twentieth Century-Fox.

A month after its launch, the network picked up 18 affiliates from seven group owners and San Diego's XETV.

Group owners and the cities representing their participating independents include Meredith (Orlando, Pittsburgh and Las Vegas); Malrite Communications (West Palm Beach, Jacksonville, Cincinnati, Rochester, N.Y.); Outlet Communications (Atlanta and Indianapolis); Scripps-Howard Broadcasting (Kansas City); Cox Communications (San Francisco, St. Louis and Detroit); Taft Broadcasting (Miami and Philadelphia), and Hubbard Broadcasting (Tampa). In Phoenix, either the independent station owned by Scripps Howard or Malrite will be signed on.

Among News America's U.S. newspaper holdings, the New York Post continues to lose about $10 million a year, analysts believe.

The Post, expected to be put up for sale to comply with the FCC cross-ownership rules, is not likely to fetch a high price if it can be sold at all. ABC reports six-month daily circulation averages ended March 31, 1986, of 751,798, a drop of nearly 150,000 from the report of the similar period in 1985.

Circulation of the Chicago Sun-Times remained relatively stable at 631,808, down 1.2%, and Sunday, 663,616, down 4%. The Boston Herald gained circulation in 1985 but lost roughly 10,000 to 358,725 as of the March 31, 1986, ABC report. Nevertheless, the newspaper's publisher says the newspaper is about to break even. The San Antonio Express-News circulation remained relatively stable at 168,098 daily, up 1%.

In the Murdoch Magazines group, the 14 business publications acquired from Ziff-Davis in January, 1985, for $350 million are believed to be progressing satisfactorily. Elle is raising its rate base and is being considered a strong success. New York ended calendar 1985 with a 5.5% increase in ad pages to 3,151 and a healthy increase in ad revenues of 12.3% to $34.1 million.

The Star's profits were dampened by the redesign and the raising of the cover price from 50 cents to 69 cents. New Woman ended the year with a 20.4% increase in ad pages to 679 and a 44% increase in advertising revenues to $10 million.

The New York Times Co. turned in a record year for both revenues and net income in 1985 as it spent nearly $400 million in acquiring five newspapers and two tv stations. Wholly a media company, the Times Co. was the nation's 12th largest media company.

Times Co. has been pursuing smaller newspapers for acquisition throughout the U.S. and in 1985 bought the Spartanburg Herald-Journal, in South Carolina, the Tuscaloosa News and the Gadsden Times, both in Alabama, and in California, the Santa Barbara News-Press and the Santa Rosa Press Democrat, and WQAD-TV, Moline, Ill., and WNEP-TV, Wilkes-Barre/Scranton, Pa. Both tv stations are ABC affiliates.

The company's newspaper division took in $1.1 billion in revenue in 1985, a 16% gain over 1984, and operating profit of $197 million, up 18%. The division is comprised of 25 daily and eight weekly and twice-weekly papers.

It was a record year at the company's flagship, the New York Times, which experienced increased daily and Sunday circulation as well as advertising volume. Daily circulation increased 2.1% to 1,035,426 between March 31, 1985, and the same period in 1986, and Sunday circulation increased slightly to 1,625,649, according to ABC FAS-FAX report of newspaper circulation. Ad linage increased 3.1% to 111.4 million lines in 1985.

York Times is being printed in eight sites and has attained a daily circulation of 145,000 and a Sunday circulation of 235,000.

The New York Times Magazine, carried in the Sunday paper, became the country's leading magazine advertising vehicle in ad pages in 1985, passing Business Week by 130 pages to take the top spot with 4,360 pages. The total was down 7.5%, generating $109.6 million, down 1.3%.

Other moves at the Times included the expansion of the regional second-news section on Sundays, the addition of computer and real estate columns in the paper's business sections and the creation of a new so-called "Part 2" of the Sunday magazine called "The Business World" that in 1986 replaced a sports-themed Part 2 section, originally intended for twice-annual publication.

The newspaper acquisitions increased the total daily circulation of the Times Co. regional newspapers group to 749,000, up 51.6%, by yearend 1985. Sunday circulation rose similarly, to 721,000, up 64.6%.

The company's magazine group suffered from softness in national advertising and an industrywide falloff in single copy and some subscription sales, with the group posting a 2.5% decline in advertising pages from 1984 levels and a 3.1% circulation decline. The group's revenues nonetheless rose 3% to $216.5 million. Operating profit was up 22% to $17.6 million.

Among the titles, Family Circle carried 1,853 ad pages in 1985, a gain of 50 over 1984. Circulation fell from 6,964,000 in 1984 to 6,681,000 in 1985. Golf Digest carried 1,066 ad pages in 1985, a loss of 14 pages from 1984 levels. Circulation rose slightly, to 1,228,400 in 1985 vs. 1,225,400 in 1984. Tennis carried 959 ad pages in 1985, compared with 1,036 in 1984. Circulation in 1985 was 507,300, up 7,300 from 1984 levels. Cruising World carried 1,620 ad pages in 1985, a loss of 102 from 1984's 1,722 pages, while 1985 circulation in 1985 was up 1,000 to 116,000.

In the company's broadcasting/cable tv segment, revenues increased 14% to $68.6 million in 1985 while operating profit soared 27% to nearly $11 million. The tv stations were able to increase revenue in a year when all national advertising on tv was off by continuing to increase emphasis on local news coverage and on local retail advertising sales.

The company's cable operations, spread over 56 communities in five counties in southern New Jersey, increased basic subscriptions 7% to 130,000 in 1985. It extended the two-way, pay-per-view capability of its systems to 26,000 subscribers during the year.

Oklahoma Publishing Co. continued its diversification within the broadening media field by joining Dow Jones & Co. in purchasing a share in a computerized price quotation service. The company also sold a newspaper in Colorado Springs, Colo., that had been troubled for some time and sold its only magazine.

The Oklahoma City-based media giant known in the diminutive as Opubco, was the 26th largest media company based on 1985 revenues derived from newspapers, broadcasting and cable, the latter being The Nashville Network, acquired by Opubco in 1983. The company also has interest in theme parks, entertainment program production, a professional baseball team, and oil and gas.

Fiercely private Opubco closely guards its financial information. It was included in a 1985 listing of Oklahoma City companies of $100 million or more in sales. In 1986, Forbes listed Edward L. Gaylord, Opubco president, among America's richest executives, with Mr. Gaylord's broadcasting and publishing fortune valued at $600 million.

During 1985, Opubco purchased a 20% interest in Telerate Inc., a New York-based supplier of computerized price quotations and other information on government securities, foreign exchange, mortgage market securities and other financial instruments to more than 27,000 video terminals. At the same time, Dow Jones, publisher of the Wall Street Journal, acquired 32% of Telerate. The shares were purchased from Exco International plc, an English company, for $459.8 million, of which Opubco's share was $177.5 million.

According to Dean Witter Equity Research, New York, Telerate dominates the U.S. market for such services, competing with Reuters Holdings plc. Reuters, Dean Witter estimates, commands only a 20% share of the U.S. market, while dominating the international markets.

Opubco sold the Colorado Springs Sun to Freedom Newspapers, which publishes the Colorado Springs Gazette Telegraph. After the $30 million transaction in January, 1986, Freedom ceased publication of the Sun, a tabloid morning newspaper that had a weekday circulation of about 45,000 and 67,000 Sundays. The Gazette Telegraph carried a morning circulation of 69,481, according to six-month ABC averages ended March 31, 1986, up 13% from the corresponding period in 1985. Evening circulation was 37,967, down 5%. The Sunday paper, however, showed strong gains to 114,457, up 6.1%. Last edition of the Sun was Feb. 28.

DataTimes, the electronic database subsidiary of Opubco's Datatek Corp., grew to include full-text electronic libraries of the Arkansas Gazette, Associated Press Newswire, the Baton Rouge State Times and morning and Sunday Advocate, the Chicago Sun-Record (Oklahoma City), Minneapolis Star & Tribune, Oklahoman & Times, San Francisco Chronicle, Seattle Times, Southwest Newswire and the New Haven Register & Journal-Courier.

The service extended its reach into Australia when it added the Queensland Newspapers Pty Ltd. of Brisbane. DataTimes officials say they expect to add databases from the leading publishers in Perth, Melbourne and Sydney during the summer of 1986.

Opubco's flagship newspaper, the Oklahoman & Times and Sunday Oklahoman, continued to increase production at its new suburban plant where all daily copies of the newspaper are produced along with a major portion of the weekend issues. The $50 million plant, which went into production in January, 1985, includes 20 computer-operated Goss Metroliner offset presses. Printing plates for the presses are prepared electronically from scanned data that is transmitted via fiber optic cable from the newspaper's editorial and advertising offices eight miles away.

ABC figures for the six-months ended March 31, 1986, place daily circulation at 239,404, down 5% from the corresponding period in 1985, and Sunday circulation at 328,734, up 1%. Howard Nicks, vp-general manager of the newspaper, attributes the loss in the daily to a January, 1986, subscription price increase to $8.25 a month from $7.65 a month, but says he is encouraged by recent numbers that show many of the lost subscribers are returning.

Oklahoma City, Mr. Nicks adds, has been hit hard by the depressed oil and farming industries, which accounts for soft ad sales. Despite the softness, Oklahoman ad sales have been on the rise, Mr. Nicks says. The newspaper is by far the dominant participant in the city's media scene.

Opryland USA, Opubco's entertainment park in Nashville, christened the world's second largest paddlewheel showboat in July, 1985. The 300-ft., $12 million General Jackson has a capacity for 670 people for banquets and more than 1,000 for theater presentations. It is named for the first steamboat to operate on the Cumberland River.

Cable subscriptions to The Nashville Network rose to about 25 million from 22 million the year before. During the year, TNN began charging cable systems 10 cents per subscriber per month, which, with discounts, averages to about 7 to 8 cents per subscriber per month, TNN officials say. That is about $22.5 million gross annually. Opubco pays Group W Satellite Communications to distribute and market TNN. TNN came to Opubco with its purchase in September, 1983, of Opryland USA.

Bud Wendell, Opryland president, says that in April, 1986, TNN "beat all other advertiser-supported cable networks" with a 1.8 rating in prime-time average viewing. In early April, the network modified its weekend offering, consolidating all sports broadcasts into the Sunday schedule, and expanding Saturday's schedule to include all entertainment. Officials say the programing change stimulated a 25% to 30% increase in weekend viewing.

In October, the Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce sponsored a salute to Opubco president Edward L. Gaylord. President Reagan sent his regards by mail. Vice President George Bush taped a message in which he said, "Even if the Rangers are in the cellar, you're on top in our league." Mr. Bush, a Texan and sportsman, was referring to Mr. Gaylord's part-ownership of the Texas Rangers.

Gaylord Broadcasting's KTVT-TV, Dallas-Fort Worth, which broadcasts Texas Rangers games along with Southwest Conference football, basketball and bowl games, and live boxing, added the Dallas Mavericks to its sports broadcasting lineup.

Texas Rangers majority owner Bush said in October that he was not interested in the possible sale of his interest to Gaylord. Mr. Chiles denied that talks were under way, but Gaylord appeared ready to participate if the opportunity came along. The broadcasting company's minority ownership includes rights of first refusal on the sale of the majority interest.

In late May, 1986, Opubco sold its Farmer Stockman Publishing Co., Dallas, to Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. The company publishes Texas Farmer-Stockman and Oklahoma Farmer-Stockman with a combined circulation of 180,000. Terms were not disclosed.

Keeping track of the ownership of Outlet Communications is like witnessing a Ping-Pong match: It bounced from public to private two years ago and then was bought out by its management in February this year.

In all this, the media component at Outlet has grown to seven tv stations and four radio properties. However, that number soon will change with the sale of three of the tv stations to raise cash to reduce the cost of the buyout. A radio property previously was sold in December.

Outlet, ranked the 88th largest media company, grew 10% in revenues from 1984 to 1985, all from its tv and radio properties.

In February, 1986, Rockefeller Group Inc. signed a contract selling Outlet for more than $625 million in cash and notes to an investor group led by Outlet executives and Wesray Inc. Wesray is a Morristown, N.J., investment firm that specializes in leveraged buyouts. One of Wesray's principals is former Treasury Secretary William Simon.

The family-owned Rockefeller Group acquired Outlet two years ago for $332.1 million. The company subsequently was enlarged by the purchase of two tv stations, WATL-TV, Atlanta, from Sillerman-Morrow for $28 million, and WPDS-TV in Indianapolis, whose call letters were changed to WXIN, from Anapcomp Inc. for $22 million.

In December, 1985, the FCC approved the sale of Outlet's WQRS-FM, Detroit, to Tanger Broadcasting Properties Inc. of Boston for $5.1 million.

The Pritzker family of Chicago tried to acquire Outlet, but that transaction apparently fell through in January because of the Rockefeller family's concerns about tax implications of the stations: WCPX-TV of Orlando, Fla., to First Media Corp. of Potomac, Md., for $200 million; KSAT-TV of San Antonio, Tex., to H-C Communications of Houston for $153 million, and KOVR of Stockton-Sacramento, Cal., to Narragansett Capital Corp. of Providence, R.I., for $104 million.

None of the proposed sales has yet been approved by the FCC. "We're assuming they will all be approved at the same time as the buyback," says Fred Griffiths, vp-corporate affairs. An FCC ruling is expected in August.

A.C. Nielsen Co. supplied the following figures for the tv station's delivery of market share for total adults during the late news period in February, 1986: WCPX-TV, Orlando, 22% for the 11 p.m. news; KSAT-TV, San Antonio, 21% for the 10 p.m. news; KOVR of Stockton-Sacramento, Cal., 18% for the 11 p.m. news; WCMH of Columbus, O., 33% for the 11 p.m. news; WJAR of Providence, R.I., 34% for the 11 p.m. news. WXIN of Indianapolis and WATL of Atlanta, Ga., do not broadcast news.

The following ratings were supplied by Arbitron for the percentage of listeners in morning and evening drive periods for the radio stations owned by Outlet: WTOP, Washington, 7.6%, morning, and 3.7%, evening; WTKS (fm), Bethesda, Md., 1.3% morning, 1.5% evening; WIOQ (fm), Philadelphia, 3.9% morning, 3.8% evening; KIQQ (fm), Los Angeles, 2.2% morning, and 2.6% evening. None of these stations is considered a market leader.

Since October, 1983, when founder and president Roy H. Park took public what then was named Park Broadcasting Co., growth and change have been coming rapidly. The name is new, Park Communications Inc.; new radio stations and newspapers are on board; Park Outdoor Advertising is separating, and there is a new president.

The presence of new president-chief operating officer Richard W. Gilbert translates into growth at Park, because Mr. Gilbert will relieve Roy H. Park, the 75-year-old head of the company, from many administrative demands, allowing him more time to plan for acquisitions. Mr. Gilbert came from the Des Moines Register & Tribune Co. as president-chief operating officer in November, 1985.

Park, the 91st largest media company, has added at least one newspaper a year to the Park chain since 1977.

Park today is a broadcast and print company operating in 20 states. Its broadcast properties include seven tv stations, all network affiliates, and eight am and fm radio stations, most of them network affiliates. The newspaper properties consist of 29 dailies, 14 Sunday editions, 23 weeklies and twice-weeklies, and 31 shoppers.

Park's tv stations reach about 17.4

from the previous year. Circulation for the 29 dailies rose 11% to 273,900, and the 14 Sundays papers improved 8% to 146,108 during the same period.

As of Dec. 31, 1985, the 23 weekly and twice-weekly Park newspapers were circulating 98,523 copies, up 44%. On June 1, 1986, the largest of these, the Wayne Independent, Honesdale, Pa., circulating 10,300 copies, moved from a thrice-weekly to a daily schedule. Park also publishes 31 weekly shoppers, all controlled circulation, up 2% in circulation for 1985 to 418,433.

All Park Communications revenue comes from three media divisions. Gross revenue for those divisions in 1985 included newspapers, $57.8 million, up 11%; tv broadcasting, $42.83 million, up 8%, and radio broadcasting, $13.06 million, a drop of 14% that Park attributes to a decline in ratings for its Portland, Ore., outlets KWJJ (am, fm), its fourth largest radio market. Net revenues comprising Park's media totals for this report have been estimated from the gross revenues Park has made public.

Park, like other media organizations, did not find 1985 a year of vigorous activity. "This was a fair year," says Wright Thomas, senior vp-finance, treasurer and director. "We expect things to be better in '86." Park Communications has been working hard on acquisitions since last fall.

In January, 1986, the company added two former Capital Cities Communications' properties, WPAT, a 5,000-watt am station, and WPAT-FM, 50,000 watts, in Paterson, N.J. Both are beautiful-music stations and compete with 49 other stations in the metropolitan New York market. Park says the combined station is rated No. 1 during daytime hours for a big part of the weekend.

The year's newspaper additions, chronologically, were: Register Star, a daily, in Hudson, N.Y., 15,529 circulation, in September, 1985; Courier Rough Notes, Chatham, N.Y., weekly, 7,847, September, 1985; Grayson County News Gazette, twice-weekly, Leitchfield, Ky., 7,000, October, 1985; Sentinel-Echo, weekly, London, Ky., 11,000, October, 1985; Logan Leader, weekly, Russellville, Ky., 7,000 circulation, October, 1985; News-Democrat, weekly, Russellville, Ky., 7,250, October, 1985, and Mooresville Tribune, weekly, Mooresville, N.C., circulation 11,000, according to publisher (IMS Directory of Publications, formerly Ayers Directory, lists 7,400), November, 1985.

Since early 1985 to the present, other changes in media properties have included a move to daily frequency by the Wayne Independent, Honesdale, Pa., and the McDowell News, Marion, N.C.; expansion of the Citizen News Record, Aberdeen, N.C., to thrice-weekly from twice-weekly, and the addition of a Sunday edition for the Courier News, Blytheville, Ark.

The company completed construction in 1985 of its new state-of-the-art radio studio at WNAX, Yankton, S.D. And it topped out the new 1,049-ft. transmission antenna for KJJO (fm), Minneapolis, extending its signal by boosting its wattage from 50,000 to 100,000. Advertising Age estimates these broadcast and newspaper changes have added as much as $15 million in gross revenue to Park's annual sales.

The company now has 30 applications pending with the FCC to operate low-power tv stations "generally in the areas" of its present tv, radio and newspaper operations.

In March, 1986, to "fund past and future acquisitions of communications properties," Park issued $50 million in subordinated convertible debentures. Carrying an interest rate of 6¾%, they are convertible into Park Communications' common stock at the equivalent of $28.75 a share. Park stock, carried over the counter, is trading in the $28 range.

While Park Communications, established in 1962, went public in 1983, the company remains largely in the control of Roy H. Park, who had an earlier successful career as founder of the Hines-Park Food Co. (Duncan Hines) acquired by Procter & Gamble in 1956. Mr. Park owns 87.28% of Park Communications common stock, or 12.3 million shares.

In addition to elections of Mr. Gilbert as president-chief operating officer and James E. Conley, an officer of Meredith Corp. broadcast group, as director, other major personnel changes include Robert J. Rossi, vp-newspapers, in January, 1986. He joined Park's newspaper division in 1974.

Roy H. Park and wife Dorothy D. Park, in addition to their role in Park Communications, are sole owners of RHP Inc., a real estate holding company, advertising agency, orange grove owner, manager of a securities portfolio, and participant in an outdoor board business.

Now an RHP subsidiary but scheduled to separate from it in several years is Park Outdoor Advertising of New York Inc. (formerly Park Outdoor Advertising), a privately held company. Roy Park has a financial interest in the reconstituted company and chairs its board, but son Roy H. Park Jr. is president-ceo. Within five years the outdoor company is to detach from RHP.

Park Outdoor Advertising of New York operates in 22 New York counties, covering about one-third of the state, and 11 counties in northeastern Pennsylvania. Two of its major markets are Syracuse, N.Y., and Erie, Pa. Other New York cities covered are Utica-Rome, Binghamton, Elmira, Jamestown, Ithaca, Auburn, Ogdensburg and Messina. It is the No. 1 outdoor company in all of those markets except Syracuse and Erie. Recently it sold its Scranton, Pa., outdoor interests to Patrick Media, the new owners of Metromedia's former outdoor division, Foster & Kleiser.

Scranton, Pa.-based Patrick Media Group's $710 million agreement to purchase Foster & Kleiser, the nation's largest out-of-home media company, is like a minnow swallowing a whale, in the words of one competitor.

The definitive buyout agreement, reached March 19 with Metromedia Inc., Secaucus, N.J., Foster & Kleiser's parent, is subject to Patrick Media's ability to arrange financing, expected by mid-year. Paine Webber Capital Markets, New York, is handling negotiations with several bank groups.

"The deal is already signed and sealed. It's just subject to closing, and that's pro forma," a spokesman for Paine Webber says. There is widespread industry speculation that Patrick Media Group will sell some of Foster & Kleiser's assets to help pay for the acquisition, but there is no indication from Gerard P. Joyce, 34, principal with Patrick Media, that this may be part of his plans.

Los Angeles-based Foster & Kleiser, which announced its revenues were $212 million in 1985, up 6% from 1984, is the nation's largest outdoor company with 46,000 displays in 35 markets. Patrick Media Group had revenues of about $7 million in 1985, Mr. Joyce says. The company owns 1,500 displays in the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre area of northeastern Pennsylvania and in Hartford, Conn.

Patrick Media is ranked as the 52nd largest media company on the basis of its merged revenues with Foster & Kleiser. An equivalent figure for the combined companies in 1984 would be $704 million, or $198 million from F&K and $6 million from Patrick Media.

The second largest out-of-home media company is New York-based Gannett Outdoor, a division of Gannett USA, Arlington, Va., with $207 million in 1985 revenues, and about 40,000 displays in 15 markets nationwide.

Sources at Foster & Kleiser, who asked not to be identified, say independent ownership of the company would be a blessing in an out-of-home market that is rapidly becoming a hotbed of competition. Outdoor companies are jostling for new business in an industry racked in recent years by relative declines in cigaret and liquor advertising.

Tobacco advertising, the out-of-home media industry's mainstay since cigaret advertising was banned from tv in January, 1971, is a prime example. Tobacco ad revenues have fallen from representing 43%, or $301 million, of the 1980 revenues for the 30-sheet and painted bulletins, to a 1985 share of 31%, or $378 million. Likewise, alcoholic beverage advertising, out-of-home media's second leading category, fell from 19% of industry revenues in 1980 to 11% in 1985, all according to the Institute of Outdoor Advertising, New York.

The biggest gains in replacing these categories are expected in package goods, healthcare and retail advertising, Mr. Joyce says. "Any one of these categories could outweigh tobacco and liquor combined in the coming years," he says.

Package goods in particular should create a boost in out-of-home media spending with the June, 1985, merger of R.J. Reynolds Industries and Nabisco Brands, and the September, 1985, acquisition of General Foods by Philip Morris Inc. R.J. Reynolds and Philip Morris know the medium well. They have been the respective first and second largest spenders for out-of-home media for the past several years.

Patrick Media's buyout of Foster & Kleiser would remove some obstacles to its aggressive participation and growth in the out-of-home market, a Foster & Kleiser executive says. Foster & Kleiser has had to answer to Metromedia and later to a subsidiary since Metromedia acquired it in 1960. In 1982, Metromedia sold all of its outdoor structures to a new division, Outdoor Advertising Associates, Secaucus, while maintaining ownership of all equipment and plant facilities.

Following Patrick Media Group's acquisition, it will own all structures and capital now shared by the Metromedia/Outdoor Advertising Associates partnership. This would enable Foster & Kleiser to follow an independent, long-term marketing strategy, the executive says.

However, unlike Gannett Outdoor, which launched Outdoor Network USA in September, 1985, and is targeting national advertisers through its affiliation with 29 outdoor companies covering 85% of the U.S., Foster & Kleiser will focus its marketing on the local and regional level, Mr. Joyce says. "We are going to be very much a marketing-oriented company," he says. "We have some definite national plans, but the thrust will be local and regional sales."

Mr. Joyce is providing few details on whether Foster & Kleiser's corporate headquarters would be moved to Scranton from its Los Angeles base, and on the extent of reorganization in corporate management that would follow the acquisition. "Obviously there will be some restructuring, but there are a lot of good people there, a nucleus of very capable people who will provide the germ of a new entity," he says.

Mr. Joyce also says he is recruiting executives from companies outside the out-of-home industry to add a fresh perspective. For example, he recently hired Lawrence Cognetti from International Business Machines to assume the role of vp-marketing and sales. Other recent appointments include James Mellody, vp-public affairs; Ashoka Varma, vp-finance, and Walter Weber, vp-controller.

The acquisition of Foster & Kleiser is the fulfillment of a plan Mr. Joyce set in motion in 1982, when he first recognized the possibility that the unit would be sold. He later began positioning himself for the purchase by making contact with Metromedia executives, institutional investors and

Mr. Joyce started Patrick Media—named after his maternal grandfather—in 1970 as a freshman at University of Scranton. After taking options on property, he convinced his first customer, Boise-Cascade, to prepay portions of its advertising contract, using the money to build the signs himself. After Mr. Joyce graduated from college, R.J. Reynolds Industries, Winston-Salem, N.C., contracted with the company to build 50 signs in the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre area, doubling Patrick Media's size.

Patrick Media acquired five outdoor companies in the 1970s and early 1980s, selling two of them. In 1985, the company acquired Mr. Joyce's boyhood employer, Scranton-based Park Outdoor, and sold operations in Columbia/Jefferson City, Mo., to Price Communications, New York.

Despite the huge debt Patrick Media is undertaking, Mr. Joyce, the sole owner, has not lost his sense of humor or his confidence. "When we reached a definitive agreement, I went home and told my wife, 'Don't worry, we only owe as much as some small countries,' " he says. "Over-all, I'm very optimistic. There's a great future for the out-of-home medium."

Penthouse International veered slightly from the static men's entertainment magazine sector in 1985 to start three magazines and buy another, but it also titillated its Penthouse market with "The Material Girl" blockbuster issue exposing rock star Madonna.

Penthouse International, ranked the 78th largest media company, continues to feel the circulation losses at Penthouse, its lead property. Its June 30, 1985, ABC statement showed circulation at 3,038,840, down 5% from the year-earlier period. However, the average jumped to about 3,100,000 in December, a credit to the September issue with nude photos of the rock star Madonna. Over-all, ad pages were down 23.2%, while revenues were off 8% to $20.2 million.

David Myerson, ceo, continues to place much of the blame for the drop in circulation on "a concerted effort on the part of religious, fundamentalist zealots to deny people the right to read what they want to read."

Mr. Myerson contends that in such places as airports, where the magazine's full cover is displayed, Penthouse has sales equal to or greater than previous years. "When there's a blinder on the cover, or the magazine is kept under the counter, it has an adverse effect on sales," he says.

Penthouse will be found on fewer shelves this year. In April, Southland Corp., operator of 4,500 7-Eleven outlets, decided it no longer would sell Penthouse, Playboy or Forum, the latter also a Penthouse Publication. It was charged that Southland was pressured by religious groups and abetted by U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese's commission on pornography. Both Playboy Enterprises and Penthouse publisher Bob Guccione sued Mr. Meese and the Justice Department to block commission disclosures. Mr. Myerson says the magazine also was under pressure from some advertisers to "change the nature of the magazine." In response to that pressure the magazine has limited its ad pages to 30 in most issues; the January, September and December issues carry 50 pages.

A stimulant for 1985 was the September "The Material Girl" issue, depicting rock singer and actress Madonna in the nude from shots taken when she was a model. Photos of Madonna, ran in both Penthouse and Playboy. They helped sell 4.5 million copies of Penthouse. Both magazines hyped their Madonna issues and had them on newsstands weeks earlier than usual.

This April, Penthouse cut its rate base almost 12% to 3 million. Mr. Myerson says the magazine wants to concentrate on "priority" newsstand sales and notes there are no cut-rate subscriptions available for Penthouse.

Newlook's rate base was also cut this April, from 500,000 to 250,000. Newlook was introduced in May, 1985. Mr. Myerson describes its readers as a shade younger and more affluent than Penthouse's. He calls it the indicative of the "genre of male magazines of the future, with a shorter read and more importance on photography."

The company's science magazine, Omni, is breaking new ground. While ad pages were down 10.9% in 1985, revenues increased 1% to $16.2 million. This year the magazine is seeing some interest from such new categories as liquor advertising. Omni is having success with special medical issues, which are controlled circulation issues sold to one advertiser and distributed to its primary clients. There is also an Omni line of books and software.

In July, 1985, the company introduced a popular music tabloid magazine, Spin. Addressing itself to the 18-to-25-year-old market, Spin, according to Mr. Myerson, initially had some distribution problems for the "strange sized tabloid," but said those have been ironed out.

In April, 1986, Nuclear, Biological & Chemical Defense & Technology was launched. NB&CD&T is the company's first controlled publication; its market is military procurement officers. In May, Penthouse International made its first acquisition—an automotive magazine named Four Wheeler. Mr. Myerson says there may be more acquisitions in store.

In December, 1985, Penthouse published the first edition of a men's magazine in Chinese; the 50,000 copies printed sold out in Hong Kong in 24 hours.

Shooting is scheduled to start at the end of this year on "Moll Flanders." Penthouse's second movie. Negotiations are being held with two parties for the sale of the company's casinos in Atlantic City. And the company recently signed a joint venture with a manufacturer in the Far East for a Penthouse line of clothing, watches and other products.

Petersen Publishing Co. suffered an over-all decrease of 2.3% in ad pages for its magazines in 1985 and expects continued decline in 1986 because of fewer magazine titles. However, tight focusing among its specialty magazines is beginning to translate into greater ad revenue growth among select issues.

The privately held Los Angeles-based company, the 83rd largest media company, reports net revenue growth from media operations of 8.3% to $121.5 million in 1985 over restated 1984 revenues of $112.2 million. The 1984 figures are net revenue figures, restated from gross media revenues given in last year's report of $142.3 million.

Advertising revenues for the company, which publishes 12 special interest or buff magazines, increased by 9% to $86.5 million in 1985.

Petersen dropped two titles, Pickups & Minitrucks, discontinued in June, 1985, and Sea, sold to Duncan McIntosh Co. in December, 1985. This partially accounted for a 2.3% decrease in total ad pages to 9,976. Petersen projects its 1986 ad pages will continue to decline to about 9,600, largely because of fewer titles, and expects ad revenues from those titles to reach $97.1 million, up 12.3%.

Petersen is reporting record increases in ad pages for several of its magazines for the first six months of 1986, which it attributes to its strategy of creating and sticking to tight editorial focuses. The over-all company strategy is to select a specific market segment and target a magazine's content, essentially how-to material, toward the enthusiasts in that segment. Most Petersen publications offer buying and travel guides as a reader service, which supports the segmentation strategy.

For example, Skin Diver, which broke records for ad pages in May, 1986, with 104.5 pages, is concentrating on the growth area of skin diving, the "dive-travel" market. Skin Diver's June issue followed May's success with another record ad page count of 108.2. Ad revenues for the May issue were $818,660; the magazine's ad pages were up 22% for the first six months of 1986. Other magazines have shown six-month gains that range from 15% and 32%.

Circle Track boosted its ad pages by 15.7% to 372.2 pages, while Motorcyclist showed a 31.9% gain to 334.3 pages.

In addition to its market segmentation strategy, Petersen enters into special events associated with its magazines' markets. Petersen is present, for example, at the Indianapolis 500 and at many National Hot Rod Assn. races.

'Teen magazine originated the Great Model Search for which it now receives 25,000 to 30,000 entries a year. It recently launched "Dream Guy," which encourages its female readers to enter their favorite boy, and those selected are pictured on a regional basis in each issue. According to 'Teen publisher Robert MacLeod, "The key to reaching teen readers is to involve them in the magazine's editorial content."

The formula seems to work for 'Teen, which in the last year, aided by a redesign, has turned around a circulation decline. To separate 'Teen from other teen service magazines on the newsstand, the magazine shifted away from one dominant cover illustration to several smaller illustrations. Pages are crowded with more informational and instructional articles. Circulation is now averaging 20% more than a year ago, and its publisher expects to deliver circulation of about 1.4 million with its August issue.

Petersen has found success in spinning off new publications from existing ones, a strategy that goes back to the company's first magazine, Hot Rod, which was started in 1948. One of this year's stars is Dirt Rider, spawned by Motorcyclist to appeal to the off-market segment, has allowed the magazines to become the primary magazine ad buy for major cycle manufacturers. First-half 1986 ad pages are up 30% and 32%, respectively, for Dirt Rider and Motorcyclist.

In September, Petersen will launch an every-other-monthly magazine to ride the home fitness boom, titled Home Fitness & Equipment. It will contain advice columns, interviews with movers and shakers in the fitness business, buying guides and nutrition information.

Petersen's titles often grow out of one-shot special issues. A special, 100 Years of the Automobile, issue in November, 1985, did so well that it is coming back in a revised form as Motor Trend's Automotive Yearbook, an annual.

Last year, Petersen produced 39 special issues and will publish 43 in 1986.

Penton/Industrial Publishing Co., the media division of Pittway Corp., "started out at a gallop and ended in a trot" in 1985, notes a Pittway assessment, referring largely to the company's ad pages affected by a midyear slump in the computer industry, one of Penton's major growth clients in the past few years.

As a result, pretax income for publishing side of Cleveland-based Penton/IPC was $20.4 million, up only 2.5% on revenues of $160 million, up 6.6%. Saddlebrook Real Estate & Resort, a property contained in the publishing division, reported a pretax income of $581,000, down from $1.7 million in 1984, on revenues of $21.3 million, about even with 1984.

Ad revenues and circulation from the 27 magazines account for 70% of Penton/IPC's revenues, or $98.3 million in 1985, which is down from restated revenues of $101.4 million in 1984. This ranks parent Pittway as the 97th largest media company.

Part of the media revenues come from group buys through Penton Executive Network, a network of 13 Penton/IPC publications with primary circulation of 1.5 million that is sold as a group. Graphic services, marketing and educational services and the Saddlebrook Real Estate & Resort business make up the balance at Penton.

Media at Penton/IPC accounts for 17.9% of Pittway's total revenues.

Thirteen of 27 Penton titles achieved ad page gains in 1985. In all, Penton/IPC posted 33,437 total ad pages in 1985, up 2.7% from 1984.

Magazines that gained the most ad pages include Computer-Aided Engineering, up 195 pages; New Equipment Digest, up 149 pages; Air Transport World, up 118 pages; Power Transmission Design, up 111 pages; Government Product News, up 58 pages, and Occupational Hazard, up 56 pages. These gains accounted for 78% of total ad page growth.

scription fees for the Playboy Channel, a 31% increase from the previous year. Launched in November, 1982, the service had 753,000 subscribers at fiscal yearend, an unexpected 1.4% drop from its average for the year. Revenues of $3.3 million attributed to programing production and home-video product sales are included in the Playboy Channel media totals.

Playboy's video segment posted total revenues of $23.7 million, up 23.7% from fiscal 1984. The division earned $230,000 in 1985, compared with a $317,000 pretax loss a year earlier.

Calendar 1985 proved to be another weak year for Playboy, as average newsstand sales declined 4.9% by yearend and ad pages dropped 2.6%. Total magazine revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30 were $120.7 million, up 0.5%, after a 1.6% decline in 1984. That increase was mainly because of a 6.4% increase—of $2.3 million—in subscription revenues.

For the last six months of 1985, Playboy subscriptions were up an average of 0.9%, to 2,458,301. Single-copy sales in the same period were 1,693,023, off 4.9% from prior-year figures, with total circulation of 4,151,324 representing a 1.6% drop. The magazine has maintained its 4.1 million rate base, although at its peak in 1972 Playboy claimed a circulation of more than 7 million.

Ad revenues in fiscal 1985 increased 3.8%, to $47.9 million, because of a 6.9% average rate increase in the period. The increase came despite a slight decline in ad pages, a trend that accelerated into 1986. For the calendar year 1985, the magazine sold 911.7 pages, down 2.6%, but earned revenues of $57.7 million, a 5% increase. In the first six months of 1986, ad pages were down 11%, to 448.

Newsstand sales were potentially hurt further by Dallas-based Southland Corp.'s decision to remove Playboy and two other titles from its 4,500 company-owned 7-Eleven stores. Two smaller chains followed suit as a result of what Playboy calls pressure from U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese's commission on pornography. Playboy says 7-Eleven sales constituted less than 5% of its newsstand total and adds that readers would likely purchase copies at other outlets.

Both Playboy and Penthouse International, whose Penthouse and Forum magazines were also withdrawn from 7-Eleven stores, have sued Mr. Meese and the Justice Department to stop the pornography panel from circulating some of its findings.

Several changes in Playboy's advertising department signaled an increasing discomfort among executives with progress of the company's 31-year-old flagship. Advertising director Chuck Stentiford was replaced by Saul Stone, and the magazine dropped category managers for liquor and automotive marketing. Vp-promotions Joe Mangione left the company, with duties partially taken over by Walter Kuenstler in a newly created marketing director post. Editorial director Arthur Kretchmer added the title of associate publisher, succeeding Nat Lehrman, who retired.

Mr. Kretchmer immediately ended Playboy's advertorial and themed promotional inserts, saying they were ill-conceived attempts at short-term, ad-page gains. He also phased out the Playboy Guides, which had run sporadically as bound inserts in the magazine after being discontinued as standalone newsstand products.

The magazine now has concentrated its sales efforts on smaller advertisers unable to afford its $60,000 national page rate. Playboy's metropolitan editions have been expanded from three to 13 cities, and a high-demographic "preferred" edition circulated to 500,000 subscribers allows advertisers to skim the top 20% of the magazine's 2.4 million subscriber base.

Editorial refinements begun last fall include a brightened graphic approach, with more imaginative cover designs and updated department headings, and perfect binding of the magazine. At president Christie Hefner's urging, the magazine has steered away from its main focus on sex-related issues. It hired Ron Reagan Jr. as a correspondent and has devoted more editorial attention to politics, social causes and entertainment, all toward the goal of differentiating itself from more sexually explicit rivals.

Internationally, Playboy plans a global marketing effort among its 11 foreign editions, licensed to other publishers. Logistics still must be coordinated among the foreign and U.S. editions by vp-international Lee Hall before the plan is implemented.

New York-based Games, put on the block in late 1985, had a yearend 1985 circulation average of 666,067, up 0.9% from the average for second half of calendar 1984. A 6.6% decline in newsstand sales, to 89,882, was more than offset by a 2.2% gain in subscriptions, to 576,185. Games sold 244.1 ad pages in 1985, a 3.1% loss, for revenues of $3 million, up 4.8%. The company says the magazine reduced its fiscal 1984 loss by 50% last year through declines in printing and administrative costs.

For the first three months of 1986, Games sold 60 ad pages, up 21.7%, for revenues of $771,644, a 30.7% gain over the year-earlier period. Games publisher Jerry Calabrese says a prospectus has been issued for the magazine, which reportedly is being offered for an asking price of $6 million.

Playboy's video division continued its struggle for success by naming a new president, severing its ties with its cable programing distributor and launching a $9.95 "videocassette centerfold" series.

Richard Sowa, formerly exec vp-administration and finance, was named to the new post of president, Playboy Video Corp., with responsibility for the Playboy Channel and home-video products.

In April, 1986, Playboy ended its ties with Rainbow Programing Services Co., distributor of the cable channel, moving responsibility for distribution and marketing in-house. As of April, the company says the channel had 680,000 subscribers among 586 cable systems.

Playboy has refined the channel's programing content several times to win acceptance among cable system operators. It has returned to mostly sex-oriented fare after an unsuccessful attempt at general-interest movies and other programing.

In May, Playboy announced it would shut down company-owned Playboy Clubs in Chicago, Los Angeles and New York, after an expensive revamp of its New York club brought disappointing returns. Franchised clubs in smaller markets such as Des Moines, Ia.; Omaha, Neb., and Wichita, Kan., remain largely profitable, the company says, and will be unaffected by the decision. Some features of the New York club—including male "rabbits"—may be transferred to the franchised properties.

Media dollars shifted from newspapers to broadcast and cable at the Providence Journal Co. in 1985 as the company purchased in joint venture two western tv stations while selling two radio properties based in its hometown, Providence, R.I.

That trend is likely to continue through 1986 as PJC, ranked the 57th largest media company, agreed to buy WHAS-TV, Louisville, for $85.7 million in June, 1986. The CBS affiliate is being sold by the Courier-Journal & Louisville Times Co., the Bingham-family owned media company that has been divesting its holdings.

PJC, based in Providence, R.I., early last month moved to exit the magazine business by offering Soap Opera Digest for sale.

Media revenues at the privately held company in 1985 came from the Providence Journal & Evening Bulletin, Soap Opera Digest, tv stations, Colony Communications Inc. (cable) and cellular telephone and paging systems.

For 1985, newspaper revenues were an estimated $101.7 million, down from an estimated $109 million in 1984.

Combined circulation of the morning and evening papers was off 1.1% to 207,917, according to six-month ABC averages ended March 31, 1986. That loss was attributed solely to a 4.8% decline in the larger evening paper to 119,310. The morning paper gained 4.4% to 88,607. The Sunday paper circulation rose 1% to 258,081.

Ad linage at the Journal rose 2.6% to 2,408,000 ins. Retail accounted for 1,706,000 ins., down 0.1%; general advertising was up 0.8%, to 133,000, and classified rose 12.5%, to 569,000. The Journal introduced a new rate schedule Jan. 1, 1986, amounting to a 5% increase in the daily rate for national advertising (to $78.30 a column in.), and an 8% increase in the Sunday rate (to $86.79 per column in).

Higher rates at the every-other-weekly Soap Opera Digest helped offset a 3.5% decline in ad pages to 317 to effect a 7.7% increase in ad revenues to $2.2 million. The publication's circulation has been declining. Soap Opera Digest was 840,732 at the end of 1984, according to ABC audited statements, but had dropped to 786,858 by midyear 1985, the latest available audit. PJC put Soap Opera Digest on the block in mid-May, 1986, noting the property, which had net revenues of $15 million in 1985, will go to the highest bidder.

On the broadcast side, PJC sold WPJB-FM, Providence, and WEAN, a Providence am station, to Eastern States Broadcasting, Washington. In a joint venture with Mountain States Broadcasting, the company acquired KGSW, an independent station in Albuquerque, N.M., and KMSB-TV (formerly KZAZ), a vhf independent in Tucson/Nogales, Ariz. A company spokesman declined to elaborate on the corporate strategy behind the media acquisitions and sales.

Nonmedia properties at the PJC include four commercial printing plants, which had an estimated $225.9 million in revenue in 1985, and paging operations, which contributed $600,000.

This past winter a federal judge held the Providence Journal & Evening Bulletin in contempt of court for publishing stories contrary to court order. The company has filed an appeal with the First Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston and is awaiting the outcome.

The newspaper got into hot water by publishing tapes of a domestic nature between Raymond Patriarca Jr. and his father, Raymond Patriarca, the reputed organized crime boss in Rhode Island. Tapes were obtained from the government through the Freedom of Information Act. The tapes were printed in violation of a court order. Mr. Patriarca Jr. contended that his privacy would be invaded by publication of the information.

The newspaper continues to be aggressive editorially. It ran a major investigative series on the operations of the Rhode Island Mortgage Finance Corp., a state entity set up to provide low-cost mortgages to eligible Rhode Island residents.

The Providence Journal & Evening Bulletin has expanded the scope of its zoned editions, increasing the frequency to twice weekly, and has added zoned classifieds. The newspaper has experienced gradual circulation increases in the morning and "modest" decreases in the evening edition, but there are no plans to phase out the evening newspaper, says Jim Wyman, deputy executive editor.

The company is investing $59 million over the next two years to become the first all-flexo newspaper printing plant in the country, according to a company spokesman. Flexo printing is a technique used for printing on packaging, and advocates say the method can save a newspaper millions of dollars a year, if the technique proves feasible for newspaper printing. The Providence Journal has been a leading innovator in the development of flexo printing for the newspaper industry.

PJC's Colony Communications subscriber list grew 10.3% to 236,000 basic (231,000 paid) in 49 franchises in 11 systems. While no new systems were added in 1985, Colony did bring in several new franchises—Copley Colony Cablevision of Cypress Inc. in Cypress, Cal.; Copley Colony Cablevision

A battle for control of the Pulitzer Publishing Co. turned a private squabble into a public affair this year as two warring factions of the newspaper dynasty claimed rights to the family heirloom—the 108-year-old media empire and its crown jewel, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The fight for ownership of the Pulitzer media empire did not affect operating results, however, as the company's net income grew 32% to $20.02 million in 1985 as revenues increased 12.2% to $272.1 million, about two-thirds from newspapers and one-third from broadcast.

The St. Louis-based company, the nation's 42nd largest media company, also expanded rapidly in suburban Chicago after its midyear 1985 purchase of the Lerner Newspaper chain. Pulitzer spent $40 million for the Southtown Economist Newspapers in March of this year, bringing its Chicago holdings to 96 newspapers with a total circulation of some 770,000, about one-third paid.

Amid all the acquisition, the feud over Pulitzer ownership neared settlement last month when Pulitzer Publishing offered to buy out dissident shareholders for $183.2 million, and they, in turn, agreed to drop litigation against the company.

But Michigan businessman Alfred Taubman, who in January had purchased an option to buy 20% of Pulitzer's stock for $100 million from one of the dissident groups, immediately filed suit against the company, charging that it interfered illegally with his option agreement. (Mr. Taubman's family company, which owns Sotheby's, the English auction house, and A&W, a chain of fast food restaurants, created a new subsidiary, Taubman Media Inc., for the potential acquisition.)

In April, Mr. Taubman bid $625 million for Pulitzer Publishing, but the offer was rejected by Joseph Pulitzer Jr., chairman, his half-brother, Michael Pulitzer, president, and a cousin, David Moore, all grandsons of the founder. If the proposed buyback agreement reached in May succeeds, it would reduce the number of shares outstanding and would give the three men and their children 73% ownership of the company.

A spokesman for the company says Pulitzer plans to issue a limited public stock offering later this year to help finance the buyback and recent newspaper acquisitions.

Pulitzer's expansion into Chicago made the company the largest suburban community newspaper publisher in the area and threw it into competition with a couple of strong local chains, Paddock Publications and Field Corp.'s Pioneer Press. Pulitzer's Southtown acquisition followed its $10 million purchase last year of the Lerner Newspaper chain of 45 midweeklies, four Sunday papers and three free shoppers. The Lerner papers generate an estimated $10 million to $12 million in revenues annually.

The Lerner papers are distributed on Chicago's North Side and in northern and northwestern suburbs, while the Southtown chain covers southern and southwestern suburbs. Both community newspaper groups are said to be profitable.

Nicholas Penniman, Pulitzer's vp of newspaper operations, says Pulitzer plans to consolidate its holdings in the Chicago area and perhaps to grow by acquiring or starting new publications —or changing existing ones. He says Pulitzer's two chains aren't contiguous, nor do they cover the most affluent areas of Chicago, but both reach a solidly attractive middle-class white-collar market. Former Southtown Economist owner Bruce Sagan has been tapped to run Pulitzer's Chicago operations.

In St. Louis, the Post-Dispatch dominates the daily scene, but its competitor, the Globe-Democrat, has proved to be the newspaper industry's most tenacious survivor.

The Globe floundered through most of 1985 and ceased publishing in December after a bankruptcy court judge removed publisher Jeffrey Gluck for incompetence and mismanagement. But the Globe resumed publication under new owners in late January and now is attempting to rebuild its advertising and readership base.

Globe officials say circulation bottomed out at about 135,000 in January and since has increased to about 150,000. The Globe's new owners, local businessmen John Prentis and William Franke, say they have the capital and the management expertise to put the Globe back in its feet again.

Pulitzer officials insist the Globe's competition hasn't hurt the Post, which picked up about 55,000 new readers during the Globe's hiatus and kept about 20,000 of them. They say the Post's advertising in the first quarter of 1986 ran about 15% ahead of 1985.

Latest six-month (publisher's statement) figures put the Post's daily circulation at 318,589, up 44,504 from a year ago, and Sunday at 519,503, up 24,301. However, the daily figure was bloated by the temporary circulation bulge during the Globe's absence. By mid-April, the Post's daily circulation had dropped back to about 316,000 while Sunday circulation had swelled to 521,000. The Globe doesn't have a Sunday edition.

The Post-Dispatch plans to unveil a new total market coverage vehicle in the fall to replace You, a broadsheet section of celebrity profiles, advice columns and Hollywood gossip. Created two years ago to counter the marketing muscle of the Ingersoll Publications' chain of free weeklies, You hasn't attracted enough advertising to make it profitable.

Despite its dominance in the market, the Post-Dispatch had an operating profit of only 5% in 1985, said to be due in part to high labor costs.

However, some of the company's top broadcast properties showed profits of nearly 40%. Pulitzer's top properties include WGAL-TV in Lancaster, Pa., and WYFF-TV in Greenville, S.C., and two Phoenix, Ariz., radio stations. Its Omaha tv station has been hurt by the depressed farm economy.

RCA Corp. was folded into General Electric Co. in mid-June, 1986, to become the largest non-oil merger in the country. The resulting company has total revenues of about $38 billion, about 7% of that now coming from the unit's major media property, NBC, which surpassed CBS to become the highest-rated network in prime time in the 1985-86 season.

The improved fortunes of NBC Television Network pushed the broadcast total revenues in RCA's entertainment division to $2.65 billion, up 12%, and pretax income grew by 53.8% to $333.2 million—better than half of RCA's pretax income from all business segments. Broadcasting accounts for all media totals at RCA, ranked the fourth largest media company.

RCA, based in New York, reported last December it would be sold to General Electric Co. for $6.28 billion. The Justice Department in May approved the merger, although it required GE to divest some of its assets. Total revenue figures presented in the box heading this profile are for RCA only.

The broadcast side of RCA's entertainment division derives its revenues from the NBC network, the four tv stations, the three radio networks and nine owned radio stations.

RCA's other entertainment activity, generating $43.4 million in pretax income on sales of $757.8 million, up 22% and 38%, respectively, centered on records and home video. In August, RCA and Bertelsmann A.G. merged their worldwide record, music publishing and music video operations into one joint venture encompassing all of RCA's record divisions. The new joint venture, RCA/Ariola International, encompasses the RCA, Ariola, Arista and Hansa labels. The RCA/Columbia Home Video joint venture accounts for the rest of the entertainment division's profits.

Two of the most momentous events in NBC's history took place in 1985, events certain to dramatically change the company in the immediate future. First, NBC's ascendancy to first place in prime time will place even greater pressure on the company and its resources to maintain momentum in the highly competitive network world. NBC also, for the first time since the abortive Moscow Olympics in 1980, attained the rights for the 1988 Summer Olympics in Seoul.

Second, GE's influence, though immediately described by the new owners as negligible, will almost certainly have an impact on the company on many levels. While GE will make every effort to safeguard its profitable new ward, NBC, it will be fast in making changes if necessary. The first order will be to replace Grant Tinker, chairman of NBC, who plans to leave the company perhaps by the end of the year.

NBC's destiny will be of its own making, according to GE. A succession process is already in the making. The successor to Mr. Tinker apparently will be chosen from a cadre of top executives currently at the company.

GE enters the industry steeped in broadcast history, although lacking in broadcast management expertise. The company started one of the first radio and tv operations in the U.S. in 1928, both stations essentially figuring as sales tools in the company's plans to sell tv and radio sets. But the company's interest in the industry failed to mature, and, ironically, its interests later developed into NBC. GE eventually sold a handful of tv stations and, before the purchase of RCA, was left with only one, KCNC-TV, Denver. GE also has sold off several radio stations in recent years and divested its cable operations.

GE has sought an 18-month waiver from the FCC to retain some of its radio stations following the RCA purchase. Like Capital Cities/ABC, GE has said it wants to study the impact of any sale on the viability of radio networks, the NBC Radio Network, the Source and Talknet. Cross-ownership rules would require GE to sell WYNY (fm) and WNBC, New York; WMAQ and WKQX (fm), Chicago, and WKYS-FM, Washington. GE will retain the tv stations in each city.

Only once in recent years has GE acknowledged its serious interest in building its broadcast business, when it tried to purchase Cox Communications in the 1970s.

A key motivation behind GE's RCA purchase was clearly NBC; GE's earnings cycle was affected by the downturn in international trade as well as the strength of the dollar. NBC's high earnings are seen as a stabilizing influence on the cycle.

The NBC-TV network scored its greatest gains in 30 years behind the strength of "The Cosby Show," "Family Ties," "Cheers," "Night Court" and "The Golden Girls," just a few of the comedies that propelled the network past CBS.

In the most recent A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings, NBC scored a 17.6 average rating through April 16. The network had an average 28 share. This was a 5% margin over CBS, which had a 16.7/26, and 18% over ABC, which had a 14.9/23. CBS delivered the same number of households this year as last —about 14.3 million per prime-time minute. But NBC's jumped from 13.7 million last year to 15.1 million in 1986. ABC's average household audience dropped to 12.8 million from 13.07 million in 1985. So substantial were NBC's gains, including growth in key demographic categories such as adults 18-to-49, that the network helped reverse a trend in lower viewing levels to the networks last year.

The strength was reflected in NBC sales; not only was NBC the only network to ever sell more than $1 billion in inventory in prime time, which it accomplished for the 1985-86 season, but it also remained relatively strong during a prolonged sales drought during the first and second quarters last year.

Even NBC's weak daytime schedule remained heavily sold—although this was primarily because of credits paid to advertisers. While the entire network economy declined by about 3% in 1985, NBC managed to increase its over-all sales substantially on the strength of its high demographic profile. NBC also joined ABC and CBS in accepting stand-alone 15-second commercial units.

NBC displayed strengths across the board, but Thursday night reigned supreme. "The Cosby Show" averaged more than a 50 share for months while "Family Ties" continually pulled 45 shares. Wednesday night was also strong with shows such as "St. Elsewhere" and "Highway to Heaven." Friday's greatest triumph was "Miami Vice," which quickly caught on as the most popular teen show of the year, sparking several retail and music trends. Saturday remains NBC's second strongest night, anchored by new hits "227" and "The Golden Girls." The "NBC Monday Night at the Movies" has also been highly successful for the network.

The network's trouble spots are Sunday and Tuesday. "The A-Team," which sent NBC on its victory march only two seasons ago, foundered badly last year. "Hunter" and "Stingray," also Stephen Cannell productions, also failed to deliver audience. Both shows were renewed for next year.

"Hill Street Blues," which lost its top producer last year, also suffered. The show originally had best illustrated the Tinker/Tartikoff doctrine of letting the best shows rise to the top, however long that may take. "Hill Street" managed to secure a position on this fall's Thursday schedule.

NBC's daytime program schedule still remained entrenched in third place. The daytime ratings/share averages ended April 20 showed ABC as the top-rated network with a 6.1 rating/21 share average, CBS with a 6.0/21, and NBC with a 5.2/19. NBC had only two shows—"Days of our Lives" and "Wheel of Fortune"—in the top 10 rated shows.

Top prime-time miniseries during 1985-86 included "Peter the Great," the Procter & Gamble-sponsored "A.D.," "The Long Hot Summer," "Evergreen" and "Wallenberg: A Hero's Story." Each averaged above a 30 share.

NBC also made strides in news programing last year. The NBC "Nightly News with Tom Brokaw" closed the gap with CBS' "Evening News with Dan Rather."

NBC's "Today" finally passed ABC's "Good Morning America" to become the most-watched morning news show. Hosted by Jane Pauley and Bryant Gumbel, NBC engineered its dash past ABC by relying heavily on international live broadcasts from sites including Rome and Moscow. After the first quarter, "Today" had an average 5.8 rating and 25 share; "Good Morning America" has a 5.2/22, and CBS' "Morning News" had a 3.1/13.

NBC News also sought an equity position in Turner Broadcasting System's Cable News Network. Ted Turner was seeking capital to fund his purchase of the MGM/UA Entertainment. However, the deal fell through after Mr. Turner refused to give NBC complete editorial control of CNN. Before this —and possibly to force Mr. Turner into a conciliatory position—NBC said it might try to create its own cable news network. There was little support from the cable industry, however.

In sports, NBC's $300 million rights purchase of the 1988 Olympics put the network back on the Olympic map. The agreement calls for a novel "revenue sharing" arrangement with the Koreans. Many of the events will be tape-delayed. In another major sports event purchase last year, NBC attained the exclusive broadcast rights to the Breeder's Cup.

The division also saw increased ratings in its National Football League—American Football Conference package. Each of the networks last year reversed viewership decline in professional football. NBC also has baseball and National Collegiate Athletic Assn. basketball packages.

Under the leadership of a new administration headed by chairman-ceo George Grune, Reader's Digest Assn. continued its tight-fisted course to maximize its profitability. The private company's strategy included the folding of unprofitable operations, the paring of circulation and a cut in advertising rates at Reader's Digest.

The Pleasantville, N.Y.-based company, ranked the 56th largest U.S. media company, gets its U.S. media revenues from Reader's Digest and Source Telecomputing, a personal computer on-line electronic information service.

Other business areas include a worldwide distribution of RD, with 39 editions in 16 languages, adding up to a paid global circulation exceeding 30 million, which gives RD the highest magazine readership in the world. More than 100 million people worldwide read the magazine each month. Total international ad revenues are estimated at $66 million, second only to Time. The total domestic and international editions of RD provide a reported 39% of worldwide net revenues, or about $565 million.

The company is also one of the world's largest marketers of records and cassettes, and its recorded music division is reported to account for 11% of total company revenues. Another 45% in revenues comes from the publishing division, which sells 20 million volumes of condensed books and 12 million copies of other nonfiction books, primarily in the how-to vein. It is said to be the most profitable segment of Reader's Digest's business.

The domestic edition of RD cut its circulation rate base 8.4% to 16,250,000 and its ad rates by 3.8%, beginning with the January, 1986, issue. The measures were designed to eliminate less profitable circulation. In its first quarter, the Readers Digest gained 45 pages, to achieve its highest first quarter in the past five years.

During 1985, advertising revenues for RD dropped 1.1% to $110.6 million on 1,071 pages, down 0.4%, according to Publishers Information Bureau. Fighting the supermarket checkout clutter and apparently winning the battle were single-copy sales, which rose 9% to 961,014. Subscriptions, however, dropped 1.7% to 16,695,997, according to ABC audited statements at yearend.

RD, formerly the No. 1 circulated magazine in the country, relinquished that crown to TV Guide when the rate base was lowered. RD continues to reach a reading audience of 39.4 million, according to a Simmons Market Research Bureau Study of Media and Markets, which means almost one-fourth of the adult American population reads the magazine.

Reader's Digest Assn. launched on July 1, 1985, a $1 million corporate image campaign by New York-based ad agency James Parry Inc. Ads informing advertisers and company employes of the scope and dimension of corporate business ran in New York, Chicago and Detroit. The four-color, spreads appeared in such publications as Nation's Business, Working Woman, Sports Illustrated and the three newsweeklies. This first corporate campaign in the company's 63-year history chronicles high points in RD's recent past, such as the responsiveness of the magazine's readers to important issues as measured by their writing to congressmen, RD's program to find missing children and its scoop on the purported plot against the Pope. The campaign theme is "We make a difference." A corresponding newspaper campaign promotes editorial features from the magazine.

J. Walter Thompson USA handles RD's tv advertising. However, direct mail remains the company's forte. Subscriptions are sold to the public via the mail both in the U.S. and abroad, where there are 12 million RD subscribers. Subscription lists get an additional workout as mailing lists for direct mail pieces promoting books Reader's Digest publishes. The company sports an annual postal bill exceeding $250 million worldwide. Far from home, RD closed its Japanese unit Jan. 31, 1986, after suffering six years of continuous losses, on a circulation of 450,000. The Japanese subsidiary had been in operation for 24 years, while a Japanese language edition has been published for nearly 40 years.

The Scandinavian editions in Norway, Sweden and Denmark have been consolidated. Reader's Digest also sold an 80% interest in Asiaweek, one of the leading English-language publications in the Far East, with a circulation of 60,000, to Time Inc., which will keep the current management intact. Reader's Digest also sold Bartholomew Map Co. in Scotland last year for an undisclosed price. Other cost-saving measures included an offer of early retirement made to nearly 300 employes, of which 184 accepted.

Source, the computer-based information service headquartered in Washington, has 60,000 subscribers, of which about 2,000 came on line in the past year. New services included the introduction of a free on-line tutorial service, under which subscribers can learn how to use Source for free. According to Nancy Beckman, pr manager for Source, the new free service was well received. "It is rare in this industry to find on-line services offering this type of arrangement," she says.

The Source introduced special interest groups (sigs), which bring together those subscribers who have in common either a special interest or a certain computer.

Among the seven sigs so far are special interest groups for Apple and Macintosh computers, Microsoft users among software users, and a legal sig. Other potential sigs are being investigated. Source charges a $49.95 setup fee and a minimum $10-a-month usage fee, while actual use is calculated in amounts of minutes used.

Last year, Reader's Digest began a contest offering $500,000 in college scholarship aid to students who devise the best programs against drunken driving among teen agers. A contest was held within the ad community to develop a poster announcing the contest to be circulated in the nation's 16,000 high schools. A creative team from Fallon McElligott, the Minneapolis agency, won the ad contest and a weeklong trip to Paris.

In other philanthropic gestures, Reader's Digest continued its QSP school subscription solicitation program that has raised more than $500 million during its 22-year duration for schools and youth groups. Monies from this program in 1985 contributed 5% to the company's over-all revenues last year.

Corporate chairman-ceo George Grune became president of the Reader's Digest Foundation, the company's philanthropic arm, succeeding Kent Rhodes, who will continue on the foundation's board. John Allen, vp-corporate and community affairs, became the foundation's executive director.

August, 1985, marked the opening of the DeWitt Wallace Decorative Arts Gallery in Williamsburg, Va. The late founder of the magazine, DeWitt Wallace, had allocated a $14 million grant for construction of the gallery and its operation.

Kenneth A. Gordon became the publisher of Reader's Digest on Dec. 2, 1985, succeeding Richard F. McLoughlin, named vice-chairman and director of U.S. operations.

In other personnel shifts, Richard Murray, vp-ad sales director since July, 1984, retired and was succeeded Jan. 1 by John Donoghue, formerly RD eastern ad sales director. Tom Rice, a sales representative, succeeds Mr. Donoghue, as New York manager.

Effective Dec. 2, Kenneth Gordon became vp-publisher of books and the recorded music division, succeeding former publisher Richard McLoughlin who had held that post as well. John Bohane succeeds Mr. Gordon as vp-director of books and records. Mr. Bohane had been deputy director of international operations. Ronald Cole joined Lynn Mapes as vp-associate publisher and continues to direct U.S. circulation activities. William O'Neill became vp-director of international operations, after serving as vp-deputy director of international operations.

Rene Isaac was named to the new post of vp-director corporate planning and development in September, in which capacity he will explore new-business opportunities for Reader's Digest. Mr. Isaac had been vp-director corporate planning. Jane Personenni became ad research director in New York after serving as international marketing director. She succeeds John Nephew, who moved to Mediamark Research to assume the new post of vp-marketing.

Mr. Grune offered to develop an ad campaign promoting the magazine industry to international marketers at a conference in Madrid last May. RD will contribute one page in its international editions four times a year to promote the industry internationally and also will put up seed money for the design and implementation of the campaign.

RKO General, a subsidiary of GenCorp, Akron, O., took steps in 1985 to reduce its media holdings by reaching agreements to sell its two major tv stations, although one sale hit a snag before a Federal Communications Commission judge.

The 54th largest U.S. media company received 52.5% of its total revenues from media in 1985, consisting largely of contributions from tv and radio divisions. Lesser contributions to media totals also come from theatrical production for pay tv, motion picture production, hotel development and management and data and information transfer systems. RKO's only major nonmedia operation is soft-drink bottling.

GenCorp had aftertax income from continuing operations, excluding the effects of provisions for plant closures and nonoperating losses, of $98.4 million, up 33.9% from 1984, on net sales of $3.02 billion in 1985, up 7.9%. Net earnings at GenCorp for the year were $75.2 million, up from only $7.2 million in 1984.

In February, 1986, RKO announced the proposed sale of KHJ-TV, Los Angeles, to Westinghouse Broadcasting Cable (Group W) for $308 million. A contract was still pending in mid-June on the sale of WOR-TV, Secaucus, N.J., to MCA, Los Angeles, for $387 million. The sales would leave RKO with 12 radio stations and one tv station.

The sales have been motivated by protracted proceedings before the FCC concerning RKO's qualifications for license renewals. One of those hearings involved KHJ-TV and a mutually exclusive application by Fidelity TV, Los Angeles, for the same channel. The FCC determined that the decision in the KHJ-TV proceeding would be binding in proceedings for RKO's other tv and radio stations. The sale stumbled in its first step before the FCC when an FCC administrative law judge ruled in May, 1986, it would be against the public interest. RKO did not expect the ruling, but reported it would receive a favorable ruling before the full FCC. GenCorp stock plunged 8 points, and trading was halted several hours. It regained all but 3 points once trading concluded for the day.

Under the purchase agreement, Group W would acquire the competing applicant's interest for $98 million and KHJ-TV for about $210 million.

Trouble encountered by the company two years ago, when it was disclosed that RKO had overbilled advertisers by some $7.9 million, was at least partly responsible for RKO's sale of a company that produced network radio programs and the proposed sale of its two tv stations. The protracted hearings before the FCC have been costly. Those proceedings have contributed largely to GenCorp's increases of $54 million and $12 million in 1984 and 1985, respectively, for selling, general and administrative expenses.

In April, 1985, RKO completed the sale of its radio networks to United Stations Radio Networks, a New York-based producer of network radio programs partly owned by entertainment entrepreneur Dick Clark. Company officials refused to disclose terms, but the company reportedly received $10 million—$3 million in cash and $7 million in long-term notes. Its radio networks provided programing and advertising to some 1,500 radio station affiliates. The sale came in the wake of revelations that the FCC was investigating overbilling of advertisers by the company.

RKO owns some top-ranked broadcasting stations, including WRKS-FM in New York, the market leader in the evening broadcast segment, and WRKO-AM in Boston, a leader in the evening slot. Other top markets include Boston where Arbitron Ratings show WROR (fm) ranked No. 8 in the morning drive, and its am sister, WRKO, ranked No. 2 in the morning position and No. 1 in the evening. In New York, WOR, is No. 2 in the morning period, and No. 3 evening, while WRKS-FM is No. 1 in the evening.

For tv stations, A.C. Nielsen Co. determined the following figures for delivery of market for total adults 18 years and older during the late news period of February, 1986: WOR-TV, New York, 8 p.m. news, 4%; KHJ-TV, Los Angeles, 9 p.m. news, 4%; WHBQ-TV, Memphis, Tenn., 10 p.m. news, 20%.

Other RKO revenue came from a tv movie produced by RKO Pictures, "Sweeney Todd," which won three Emmys. In order to increase its access to the North American entertainment marketplace, the company entered into a theatrical distribution agreement with Paramount Pictures. This relationship, when combined with RKO Picture's offshore production capabilities, positions the company for growth with less risk than is usually associated with the motion picture business. New management at RKO Pictures and FilmGroup, responding to changes in the home entertainment market, reduced its distribution of videocassettes and consolidated production activities.

In November, 1985, RKO sold its 45% holdings in Frontier Airlines to People Express for an aftertax gain of $24.2 million. RKO's share of the air carrier's losses in 1984 and 1983, respectively, were $9 million and $9.9 million.

RKO Bottlers posted a record net revenues of $192.5 million during the year. The introduction of Slice, a soft drink made with 20% real juice, increased market penetration.

Rogers Communications Inc., which bowed out of the Syracuse, N.Y., market in 1985 and is expected to sell its California operations this year, experienced a 31% growth in revenues from its U.S. cable properties in 1985—largely a result of rate increases from major systems.

The Toronto-based company ranked the 86th largest media company on the basis of its U.S. media revenues. Canadian cable operations, which added to Rogers' U.S. activity, brought a gain in total operating income of 40% to $91.7 million on revenues of $354.2 million, up 20%, for fiscal 1985 ended Aug. 31, 1984. The company, however, suffered an over-all loss of $16.2 million, actually a 27% improvement over 1984.

U.S. dollar figures for this profile were converted from Canadian currency at the rate of C$1=U.S.$0.716. The same rate was applied to 1984 figures for comparison. The Canadian dollar fell 8% against the U.S. dollar in 1985.

Excluding the Southern California and Syracuse systems that Rogers has sold, 1.1 million homes are located in areas franchised to Rogers in the U.S. At its fiscal yearend, almost 90% of the homes were passed by cable and there were about 475,000 basic subscribers at an average basic penetration of slightly less than 50%.

The company's U.S. cable tv systems are owned through two principal holding companies. The first, Rogers Cablesystems of America, contains about 350,000 basic subscribers. Nearly 60% of these subscribers are in the San Antonio, Tex., system, which increased its rates for basic from $6 to $9 a month in December, 1984, resulting in a substantial revenue increase.

The company's other U.S. group, Rogers U.S. Cablesystems, includes systems in the Minneapolis and Portland, Ore., areas and parts of Los Angeles and Orange counties in Southern California. The last group still is operating below its potential, according to officials from the parent company.

Rogers U.S. Cablesystems' Syracuse franchise was sold in 1985 "to reduce our total long-term debt," says Graham Savage, vp-investment planning. The same holding company is considering the sale of its California group by yearend, although a final decision has not been reached by the company. "California has been a difficult area for us to operate in so we might decide to sell," Mr. Savage says.

The California life style, with an emphasis on outdoor activities, could be partly responsible for the lack of cable tv's success, he says, although he adds that the 18 off-air signals in the area represent "probably more off-air signals than anywhere else in North America."

Gross revenue in Canada showed a 15.7% increase. Each of the 14 cable tv systems in Canada experienced growth in basic subscribers during 1985. Almost 34,700 subscribers were added nationally, with three-quarters of these added in the province of Ontario, 15% in Alberta and 10% in British Columbia.

At the end of its fiscal 1984, pay tv services in Canada had stalled at a penetration of 11% of basic subscribers, and the churn rate was pushing up operating costs. The situation improved dramatically in 1985 with the introduction of specialty services—CNN News and Much Music. "Those specialty packages have improved the value of the service when you combine with pay service. As a result we doubled our subscribers in 1985 and our penetration rate as of now is already 28%," Mr. Savage says.

In 1985, the Canadian Radio-television & Telecommunications Commission, the regulatory body of the industry, allowed the two national pay services to operate in an exclusive regional area, in effect splitting the country. While the loss of pay subscriber units due to move was significant, the stabilization of the pay networks was the first step in relaunching discretionary services to subscribers. For cable companies like Rogers the change was viewed as necessary. "There was a strong chance that a two pay service industry could not survive otherwise," Mr. Savage says.

The cable industry, however, must still do battle with the CRTC on a few topics. For example, government policy allows individuals to own backyard earth stations and to receive any programs available, whether they are subscribers or not. Yet the CRTC will not allow a cable subscriber access to some of those same signals. The government will not allow cable companies to compete with video stores renting movies by means of pay-per-view movies offered by the cable company.

"We are doing it in the U.S.—pay-per-view—and we find our subscribers enjoy the product," Mr. Savage says. The company has not yet given up, however, and still lobbies the CRTC.

Rollins Communications Inc. added modestly to its stable of media properties as it increased net income 21.2% on a 17% growth in revenues during its fiscal year ended June 31, 1985. The company also opened itself to acquisition in mid-June, 1986, by selling 43.5% of its stock to Heritage Communications Inc., Des Moines.

The Rollins family reports that its stock sale, amounting to 6.4 million shares for $260.4 million in cash and notes, is the first step toward a possible merger of Heritage and Rollins.

During 1985, Rollins bought KAUT, Oklahoma City, for $5.6 million from Gene Autry's former wife, Ina, for its first independent uhf station. It has three network affiliates. Rollins also boosted its total number of cable subscribers by 6.6%, many of those at the new Rollins CableVision operation in Philadelphia, one of four cable franchises in that market.

Atlanta-based Rollins Communications, which also owns six radio stations, five cable tv operations and nine outdoor advertising units, ranked the 96th largest media company. It is one of three companies spun off in 1984 from divisions of Rollins Inc. Rollins Inc. is now the title only for the pest control business through its Orkin Pest Control Co., and Rollins Protective Services Co. handles the fire and burglar alarms.

In the first three quarters of its 1986 fiscal year, the company's revenues have continued to increase at a 13% to 14% clip. In the third quarter, which closed March 31, revenues were $27.1 million, 14.3% ahead of the corresponding period a year earlier. The investment firm of Robinson Humphrey Co., Atlanta, predicts per share earnings of 94 cents this year compared with 82 cents in 1985.

Net revenues will hit an estimated $115 million in 1986, according to Michael E. Higgins, vp-chief financial officer of the admittedly conservatively run Atlanta-based media company. "We are perhaps not the flashiest, the most innovative or state-of-the-art company around," Mr. Higgins says, "but I think we have a reputation for generating strong cash flow. We are very stable and reliable."

The Oklahoma City station is dragging down profits somewhat, company officials say. While Mr. Higgins refused to discuss specific revenues from each of the tv properties, he acknowledges the independent station is likely to bring in only about a fifth or less of the estimated $9 million to $10 million produced annually by the three other stations, which cover all the networks—WEAR-TV, serving Pensacola, Fla./Mobile, Ala., is an ABC affiliate; WCHS-TV, serving Charleston/Huntington, W.Va., is CBS, and WPTZ, serving Plattsburgh, N.Y., Burlington, Vt., and Montreal, Canada, is NBC.

"But we don't measure our performance in television by revenue alone," Mr. Higgins says. "Television stations have usually tried to get a higher percentage of advertising income than might be reflected purely in the ratings. If you have a 17 share in a market, but you are bringing in only 10% of the advertising revenue, obviously you aren't doing your job. But if you can bring in 22%, then you are."

The company's philosophy is different for acquiring on-air tv stations versus its cable operations, Mr. Higgins says. In every case, the company has acquired an existing tv station; in the cable market, all of Rollins operations are startups.

The company has 207,000 cable subscribers in 43 cities—up only slightly from the 196,000 subscribers on-line in June, 1985. But the company projects its subscriber base in those cities eventually will grown to 317,000.

"We started in cable from scratch in about 1963," Mr. Higgins says. "We were pioneers in the urban market. When we built our system in Wilmington, Del., it was the first major urban cable system built in the country." The company's three New England cable operations and the Philadelphia and Wilmington franchises reflect the company's continuing emphasis on the urban market.

Sammons Communications, Dallas, a wholly owned subsidiary of $1 billion Sammons Enterprises Inc. and the nation's 77th largest media company, boosted its media revenues, all from cable, by 11% almost matching an 11.4% increase in basic cable subscribers in 1984 and 11.8% increase in pay subscribers in 1985.

Sammons is the largest privately held multiple system operator in the nation. At the end of 1985, the company had 724,838 basic subscribers and 668,108 paid subscribers, ranking it 13th among U.S. multiple system operators—down from 12th in 1984.

Spokesman Jim Rosene attributed the slip to the acquisition fever that has dominated the cable industry in recent months. High demand for cable properties has pushed prices up. Mr. Rosene says Sammons is very cautious about its purchases, and seeks a high ratio of equity to debt.

"The prices are being run up by companies that don't intend to operate the systems they buy, but when we buy a system, we operate it," Mr. Rosene says.

But in a cable marketplace where a few giants are gobbling up small and large properties, Mr. Rosene says Sammons still is looking for good buys and intends to continue growing, although that growth may be slowed by the inflated prices.

"We're not anticipating any merger or sell out," Mr. Rosene says. "And we continue, in the current climate, to be anxious to expand."

For example, he says Sammons was among the companies in a consortium seeking the purchase of Westinghouse's Group W Cable. Group W eventually sold for $2.1 billion to a consortium including Teie-Communications Inc., American Television & Communications, Comcast Corp., Daniels & Associates and Century Communications. Sammons dropped out, Mr. Rosene says, "when the bidding got up into the stratosphere."

Sammons succeeded with several purchases, however. In August, CBS agreed to sell Sammons its 19,000-subscriber Blackhawk System in suburban Fort Worth, Tex., for an estimated $21 million. Earlier buys consolidated into the Sammons system during 1985 included the systems in Seneca, Mo.; Denton, Tex.; Tuskegee, Ala.; 10 systems in the Harrisburg, Pa., area purchased from TCI, and, from Storer Cable Communications, systems near Dallas-Fort Worth in Hurst, Keller, North Richland Hills, Haltom City, Midlothian, Waxahachie, Everman and Mansfield, Tex.

The acquisitions are typical of the kind of properties Sammons seeks—most are contiguous to Sammons systems, and most are in small to medium-size communities. Mr. Rosene estimates the average Sammons system numbers 15,000 to 20,000 subscribers. To date, Sammons has shunned large metropolitan areas, its largest operation being the nearly 70,000-subscriber Fort Worth system.

During 1985, Sammons unplugged the two-way capability of its Fort Worth system, finding it "not currently productive."

Under that arrangement, Fort Worth subscribers had been able to bank, pay bills and use other services through their cable hookup. The hardware for the two-way hookup remains in place in Fort Worth and selected other systems should the service become feasible.

The company is involved in a massive rebuilding of the Harrisburg, Pa., system that began in September, 1984, and will continue until the last quarter of 1986. Sammons has been upgrading its Harrisburg system from 12 channels to 36 and developing new tier structures. There are 73,465 basic subscribers and an additional 47,520 paid in the system.

Sammons is decentralized in its marketing approach, tailoring its promotions to individual areas. Marketing emphasizes print, radio, direct mail, insertion on cable networks and some co-op advertising with the premium channels.

Scripps Howard doubled the revenue potential for its broadcasting division by buying two tv stations in major markets in 1985, announced its intention to buy out a partner in a multistate cable tv venture, closed yet another of its daily newspapers and elected a new chief executive officer.

The Cincinnati-based company, ranked the 18th largest media company, announced March 14, 1986, its agreement to merge with the John P. Scripps newspaper group, which publishes six dailies and four weeklies in California and a daily in Washington. The John P. Scripps group is controlled by a different branch of the Scripps family.

The corporation's media holdings will include 20 daily and 46 nondaily newspapers after the merger. In addition, it has tv, radio and cable tv interests through Scripps Howard Broadcasting Co., Cleveland. The publicly though closely held broadcast company had 1985 revenues of $134.5 million, up 14% from the previous year. The broadcast company's net earnings totaled $30.9 million, up 70.4% from 1984.

Scripps Howard Broadcasting took over WXYZ-TV, an ABC affiliate in Detroit, and WFTS, a Tampa independent, in January after paying Cap Cities/ABC $246 million, with $220 million reportedly going for just the Detroit property. The purchases raised Scripps Howard's nationwide coverage of tv households to 9% from 5.9%, putting it in the top 10 of group owners. Industry sources said at the time of the sale that the two tv properties will nearly double annual revenue for Scripps Howard Broadcasting.

The only broadcast property sold was KMEO (am, fm), Phoenix, Ariz. Scripps Howard agreed in September to sell the station to Group W Broadcasting, New York. Terms of the sale were not disclosed. Scripps Howard had acquired KNXV-TV, Phoenix, in January, 1985, and, because of FCC regulations against media cross-ownership in the same market, had to sell the radio combo.

The last edition of the Columbus, O., Citizen-Journal was published Dec. 31, 1985. The Dispatch Publishing Co., owner of the competing Columbus Dispatch, had declined to extend the newspapers' joint operating agreement, and Scripps Howard was unable to line up a buyer. A group headed by Akron-area businessman Nyles Reinfeld bought the rights, but failed to line up suppliers and the additional investors needed to keep the newspaper publishing.

The company restructured other JOAs with Gannett Co. for its Knoxville, Tenn., and El Paso, Tex., papers. Under the new JOA terms, Scripps Howard's News Sentinel in Knoxville will switch to morning on July 1, 1986, with Gannett's Knoxville Journal moving to evening. Gannett will get a minority partnership increase in the JOA from 22.5% to 25%. In El Paso, Gannett became the business and production agent and the profit split was altered from 50/50, although the parties would not discuss the new split.

Scripps Howard and Tele-Communications Inc. announced March 13, 1986, their intent to end their cable tv partnership organized in 1983. TCI will sell its 50% interest in TeleScripps Cable Co. to Scripps Howard for $78 million. Acquisition of the TeleScripps cable systems in the Southeast will provide Scripps Howard an additional 265,814 cable subscribers, raising its nationwide total to about 375,000 and placing Scripps Howard among the top 25 multiple system operators.

Robert K. Doerr, corporate communications director, says Scripps Howard plans to continue expanding its cable operations. In addition to gaining sole ownership of TeleScripps, the company is building in California what will be its largest single cable tv system. Sacramento Cable Television, established last year, already is serving about 12,000 subscribers, Mr. Doerr says, and the community has 350,000 households with potential customers. The system is scheduled to be finished in 1988.

Scripps Howard directors elected Lawrence A. Leser last June to serve as president-ceo. He took the place of Edward W. Estlow, who retired July 1. The company's new head had been exec vp since June, 1984. A graduate of Xavier University, Cincinnati, Mr. Leser joined Scripps Howard in 1968 as secretary-treasurer.

Scripps Howard bought 15 weeklies and two shoppers in July, 1985, from Hearst Corp. Eight of those weeklies from Hearst Community Group are located in communities adjoining an area served by Scripps Howard Southern California Publishing Co. They were folded into that group. The remaining seven weeklies and two shoppers were the Hillsborough Community Newspapers in Florida.

In addition to the Hearst buys, the company purchased the La Mirada Lamplighter and Buena Park News in Southern California from Knight-Ridder, the Polk County Shopper, Lakeland, Fla., from Thomson Newspapers and Kartes Video Communications, an Indianapolis marketer of home video products.

One disappointment for Scripps Howard was the collapse of its first videotex effort, a partnership with Knight-Ridder and other investors. Last October the two companies started Viewtron/Pittsburgh, but the project ended in March when Knight-Ridder pulled out.

"We had planned to go into our three key newspaper markets—Pittsburgh, Denver and Memphis," Mr. Doerr says. "Last September we announced that if Pittsburgh worked, Scripps Howard may start [the other] videotex services. It was hoped to be the beginning of a videotex experiment that would move into the other cities." Knight-Ridder, however, is not alone in pulling out of videotex operations. Times Mirror also ended its experiment last year.

Another recent project was the construction of a $50 million complex for the Albuquerque Tribune. The new downtown plant provides 286,000 sq. ft., including 9,000 sq. ft. for the newsroom, twice the space available for the editorial staff in the newspaper's old facility.

Mr. Doerr reports the merger with the John P. Scripps newspaper group will add about 263,000 in daily circulation and 100,000 in Sunday circulation. The communications director says Scripps Howard then will have total daily circulation of about 1.5 million and Sunday circulation of 1.7 million.

Circulation competition continues between Rocky Mountain News, Scripps Howard's largest newspaper, and the rival Denver Post, a Times Mirror property. The Post's Sunday circulation rose to 412,102 as of March 31, 1986, up 19.4% from the year-earlier ABC auditing period because of a gain in circulation from a cable program guide. The News' Sunday circulation dropped 2% to 378,133 in the same period. The News retained its lead in daily circulation with a total of 320,441, down 2.7%. The Post's circulation rose 2.4% to 220,861.

Cordovan Corp., purchased by Scripps Howard in 1980, was changed to Scripps Howard Publications Inc. The company sold Jet Cargo News to Hagall Publishing Co., Houston, effective Dec. 31, 1985.

Change comes slowly to the conservatively managed Seattle Times Co., ranked the nation's 66th largest media company. It neither bought nor sold properties in 1985, although revenues increased by 13% at the all-newspaper company. "We are a very inwardly focused company," says H. Mason Sizemore, president.

Times managers are studying a plan to build a $45 million-plus production facility, including offset presses and modern mailroom equipment, adjacent to the company's headquarters on the fringe of downtown Seattle or at an undisclosed suburban location.

The company's present mailroom limits its ability to handle the growing preprint business, Mr. Sizemore says. "We simply don't have the space and the flexibility to handle that with ease in this building."

Management's focus in recent years has been increasing editorial quality of the Seattle Times, the company's evening flagship, and an advertiser service, says Frank A. Blethen, who became publisher in March, 1985, after the death of W. J. (Jerry) Pennington in a boating accident. In recent years, the newsroom budget has been supplemented by $1 million a year. Times also owns the Walla Walla Union-Bulletin.

The company has moved to strengthen circulation by adding more sales locations and replacing contract vendors with employes and has continued an emphasis on newspaper design that has won numerous awards. "We just think that's our lifeblood," Mr. Blethen says.

The evening Times' six-month ABC average circulation ended March 31, 1986, was 230,509, up 1.1% from the period a year earlier. During the same period, the morning Seattle Post-Intelligencer, a Hearst Corp.-owned paper circulated by the Times under a 3-year-old joint operating agreement, increased its circulation to 202,305, up 2.7%. The combined Sunday edition, in which the P-I has four editorial pages but no news pages, had a circulation of 490,105, up 2.7%.

Despite the greater circulation gain for the P-I in the most recent period, the Times continues to lead in most zones in the primary market area, Mr. Sizemore adds. The combined penetration of the Times and P-I is among the highest for any metropolitan area.

Ad volume, weak in 1983 because of a slow economy in the Pacific Northwest and the impact of joint operations with the P-I, grew at a strong annual rate of 11.2% in 1984. But in 1985, Times ad volume rose just 0.68%, the P-I rose 2.1% and the Sunday paper 0.61%, for an over-all increase of just 1%. "This continues to be a soft economic market and advertising continues to be soft," Mr. Blethen says.

For the first quarter of 1986, ad sales rose 1.06% in the Times and 24.47% in the P-I, but shrank 4.24% in the Sunday paper. But the disappointing first-quarter figures for the Times were expected. "You're not seeing the growth of local retail advertising that you would like to see," Mr. Blethen says.

With advertising sales relatively flat, much of the revenue gain for 1985 was because of advertising rate increases that averaged 6%; in 1984, when revenue grew 11.2%, ad rates were raised 7%.

Times Co. continues efforts to revitalize its locally edited Sunday magazine, Pacific, which lost most national advertising to Parade (included in the Sunday package) when the JOA began. Advertising volume increased 103% in 1985 over 1984; first-quarter 1986 figures rose 14% over the same period in 1985.

Increasingly, Times management is emphasizing its service to advertisers. "We are much more today a market-driven company than we have ever been before," Mr. Sizemore says.

In 1984, Times increased the frequency of publication of its total market coverage product, A Slice of the Times, from monthly to weekly. Distributed to 296,600 homes in the Seattle area, the publication is anchored by the Pay'n Save Corp., one of the region's largest retailers, which buys one-third to one-half the advertising in the publication, says R.E. Hallowell, the Times' vp-finance.

In 1985 the company appointed a senior technical employe for advertising quality control, the first time the paper has had such a position. "We always talked about quality; now we're doing something about it," Mr. Blethen says.

Also last year the Times Co. boosted from weekly to daily the frequency of its zoned edition for Bellevue, a growing Seattle suburb, where it faces strong competition from the Bellevue Journal-American. Mr. Blethen says the Times outsells the Journal American 2-to-1 in Bellevue. "We are the dominant newspaper . . . despite some very good suburban papers," Mr. Sizemore says. In addition to the J-A, the Times market is ringed by the Washington Post Co.-owned Everett Herald and the McClatchy-owned Tacoma News Tribune.

Late last year, the company created a small direct marketing subsidiary, Direct Marketing of Puget Sound. The subsidiary will give the Times control over the nonsubscriber list for its tmc product. In the future, the Times may make its circulation and mailing lists available to outsiders through this unit.

Although the Times has no plans to diversify beyond newspapers, it is always interested in acquiring other newspapers, Mr. Blethen says.

The company continues to participate in Data Times, an Oklahoma City research service that puts newspaper coverage on-line for electronic retrieval.

A decision this year by Knight-Ridder to pull out of a joint venture with the Times on videotex has not soured the Times on the possibilities of that medium, Mr. Blethen says. The Times will continue to look for ways to profit on its news and advertising databases, he says. "There's no question we've got a valuable resource" in those databases.

The Blethen family of Seattle continues to own 50.5% of the company's voting stock; Knight-Ridder Newspapers owns the balance of the voting stock, plus 65% of an issue of nonvoting stock.

Stauffer Communications Inc., largely a newspaper company, has directed its interests into tv the past two years, picking up a station in Columbia, Mo., in 1985 and negotiating to buy another, KYCU in Cheyenne, Wyo., in 1986.

The Topeka, Kan.-based company experienced 10.5% growth in net income on revenues that increased 8.3% in 1985. The company's stock experienced a surge in 1985 from $52 in January to $120 a share at yearend. Dividends paid were up 17.6% and the year's $2 cash dividend represented a payout of nearly 30% of 1985 earnings.

In 1986, company revenues should be stimulated by the addition of the Wyoming station and the Kansas City Royals' World Series victory in 1985, which brought about a dozen more stations to Stauffer's Royals radio network, now totaling 120 stations.

Stauffer, the 98th largest media group, still derives most of its revenues from newspapers—21 daily newspapers in eight states. Other media include seven radio stations; a national periodical, Grit; a regional periodical, Capper's Weekly, with circulation in six midwestern states; a cable tv company in Amarillo, Tex., and an information network and an agriculture network in addition to the Royals coverage.

Its flagship newspaper, the Topeka Capital-Journal, circulated 67,049 daily and 76,905 Sunday, according to ABC six-month averages ended March 31, 1986. The daily is up 1.1% over the previous year; the Sunday paper, up nearly 2%. Newspapers represent 63% of total media revenues at Stauffer.

Stauffer is keeping its eye out for new properties. "We're always looking," treasurer William D. Duckworth says. Stauffer started 1985 by buying what was then KCBJ-TV in Columbia, Mo.—now KMIZ-TV—for $4.5 million. Mr. Duckworth says the station, which also serves the Jefferson City and Sedalia areas of Missouri, produced revenue of $1.9 million in 1985. KMIZ-TV is an NBC affiliate.

Now Stauffer is negotiating the purchase of KYCU-TV, but it won't disclose the price offered. According to senior vp John H. Stauffer, KYCU-TV's signal would be sent from Cheyenne to satellite stations in Scott's Bluff, Neb., and Sterling, Colo. Broadcasting has grown from 13% of total media revenues in 1984 to 15% in 1985.

Stauffer also added a weekly paper in 1985, the East Lycoming County Shopper, outside Williamsport, Pa., and the Kansas Information Network, a news network serving 26 radio stations in Kansas with state news.

In his message to shareholders, president Stanley H. Stauffer says an improvement in the local economy in Topeka, home to several company enterprises, points to continued growth in 1986. It had long been feared, for example, that the Santa Fe Railroad might close Topeka operations and move to Chicago or Galveston, Tex., taking 2,500 employes with it. But Santa Fe decided to stay and put up a new office building.

The farm economy is another matter, and one that affects many Stauffer properties. Mr. Duckworth is cautious about it, but says it's on the "upgain." John Stauffer thinks it is one of the few economic sectors not improving.

Growth in audience shares for several of its broadcast units will bring about revenue gains in 1986, as will the Kansas City Royals baseball network, which Stauffer will retain the rights to operate at least through 1988. Company officials say advertising time for the ball game broadcasts is virtually sold out before the season starts.

The late Oscar S. Stauffer built this communications empire from a single weekly in Peabody, Kan., in 1915. Nine years later, he purchased his first daily newspaper, the Arkansas (Kan.) City Traveler. By 1930, six dailies were combined to form Stauffer Publications Inc. Oscar Stauffer died in 1982 at age 95.

Stauffer Communications, in addition to its cable, broadcast and newspapers, owns Grit, Williamsport, a family-oriented periodical that appeals particularly to small towns and rural America. Sunday Grit reaches 31,500 subscribers in Pennsylvania. The ABC six-month average as of Dec. 31 for National Grit is 573,989. "There's a little bit of something in it for everyone in the family," says a National Grit circulation aide. The weekly National Grit costs 65 cents a single issue.

Stauffer also operates a telephone systems company, markets software systems for newspaper advertising and circulation, takes attitude surveys for the media, distributes equipment and supplies for newspapers throughout the Midwest and operates several retail computer stores. It further operates an insurance company, book clubs and a travel and tours agency.

A testimony to the strength of Stauffer has been the movement of its stock. With newspapers beginning to sell at top dollar, brokers are reassessing their pricing of newspaper companies. Heavy demand for the stock was created after estimates reported in early 1986 that Stauffer stock was considerably undervalued.

Stauffer has about 1 million shares outstanding, only about 5% of which is outside control of the Stauffer family, board members or employes. An additional 10 million shares were authorized at the annual meeting.

Taft Broadcasting Co. became the first media group to reach the new FCC ownership ceiling of 12 tv, 12 am and 12 fm outlets with its July 31, 1985, purchase of five tv stations and seven radio properties from Gulf Broadcasting Co. for $760 million.

Taft, the 60th largest media company, simultaneously sold two of the Gulf radio stations and three of its own to CBS for $107.5 million to satisfy FCC rules banning the ownership of both tv and radio properties in the same market.

After the transactions, Cincinnati-based Taft ended up with 15 radio properties and 12 tv stations. The new tv outlets in booming Sunbelt markets raised Taft's coverage of the nation's tv households from 9% to 15%.

Taft's new tv stations are CBS affiliate KTSP-TV, Phoenix, Ariz.; ABC affiliate WTSP-TV, Tampa-St. Petersburg, Fla.; KTXH, a Houston independent; KTXA, a Dallas-Fort Worth independent, and ABC affiliate WGHP-TV, Greensboro-Winston Salem-High Point, N.C.

The Gulf radio properties Taft bought were WKLS (am, fm), Atlanta; KTXQ (fm), Dallas-Fort Worth; KLTR (fm), Houston; WFBQ (fm), Indianapolis, and WLTT (fm), Bethesda, Md. CBS bought KTXQ (fm), KLTR (fm) and WLTT (fm), along with Taft's WSUN and WYNF (fm), Tampa-St. Petersburg.

Revenues of media properties at the company rose 10.6% to $189.6 million in the fiscal year, 50% of total revenues of $375.3 million. Media in 1984 accounted for only 38% of revenues. The higher percentage of media in 1985 was because of a drop of 17.3% in total revenues from 1984 because of the company's sale of its theme parks. Operating profits for media companies rose 9% to $63.3 million. Over-all earnings were $85 million, up 23.5%.

The Gulf acquisitions increased the company's dependence on its broadcast arm. The spokesman says Taft's broadcast properties will generate about 60% of its revenue in the 1986 fiscal year. Broadcasting will provide about 70% of operating profits, compared with 65% in 1985.

The company will receive about 28% of its revenues and 24% of operating profit from its entertainment division in the current fiscal year, while leisure-time properties will account for 9% of revenues and 6% of operating profit, Taft projects.

Debt from the Gulf deal and the nationwide slump in advertising contributed to a short-term earnings decline for the company. Taft's third-quarter revenues totaled $136.5 million, up 27% from the year-earlier quarter, but earnings were down 38% to $8.4 million. The company spokeswoman says Wall Street analysts predict Taft will suffer a fourth-quarter loss of 20 to 30 cents per share. She says Taft is confident the acquisition of the Gulf properties "is definitely going to pay off—it's just going to take a couple of years."

The Gulf transaction was preceded by a brief takeover scare. Robert Bass, one of the wealthy Fort Worth Bass brothers, told the SEC on July 22 that he and his associates had acquired 8% of Taft. The announcement fueled speculation that an unfriendly takeover battle was imminent, even though analysts suggested the debt incurred from the $760 million Gulf purchase made Taft an undesirable acquisition. Taft strongly denied it was interested in selling, and its stockholders voted July 23 to adopt two "poison-pill" measures to discourage a takeover attempt.

Taft had lackluster results in 1985 from its cable tv investments. The company has a 50% interest in TCI-Taft Cablevision Associates, which operates systems in four states. Taft reported a $1.9 million loss on its cable investment for the 1985 fiscal year, and the spokesman says the cable partnership will be profitable in 1986—"but just barely. We're just beginning to turn it around and produce a profit."

Taft originally put $21 million into the venture, and its equity investment "is considerably more now," the spokesman says. The cable operation has 165,000 basic subscribers, with 89,000 pay subscribers out of the total.

In the entertainment field, which is not considered media in this report, Taft continues to expand its production efforts, especially in the first-run syndication market. Hanna-Barbera Productions produced 105 half-hours of cartoons for sale to networks and 155 half-hours for first-run syndication during the latest tv season. During the previous season Hanna-Barbera turned out 155.5 half-hours of cartoons for networks and only 17 for first-run syndication.

The production company supplied a third of the cartoons shown on Saturday mornings by the networks during the latest season, the spokesman reports. Next season the share will rise to 50%.

Taft's other production divisions continue to market more first-run programs such as the miniseries "On Wings of Eagles."

"We're firm believers in first-run syndication," the spokesman says.

Taft Entertainment Co. added production divisions and continued to increase its output of motion pictures. Taft Entertainment Motion Pictures Co., a joint venture with Keith Barish Productions, was formed to produce films, including "In the Light of Day" with Michael J. Fox and "Running Man" with Arnold Schwarzenegger.

Game show developer, Jay Wolpers, joined Taft Entertainment in 1985 as did Edgar J. Sherick, a film and tv miniseries producer.

Acquisition-minded Tele-Communications Inc. batted one-for-three in 1985 when it picked up as part of a joint venture Group W Cable, the nation's third largest cable multiple system operator, but lost out in its bid as part of two other consortiums to buy two more cable giants, Storer Cable and Warner Amex.

The Denver-based company, the nation's 22nd largest media company and the largest operator of cable tv systems, had operating income of $122 million, a 13.3% increase over 1984, although net income was off 42% to $10.1 million, the second successive drop, reflecting the strain of acquisitions on the bottom line.

TCI ended the year with a sizable portion of Westinghouse Electric's Group W Cable in its pocket. The company was one of five multiple system operators that paid $2.1 billion for the system, called the largest system sale in the history of the cable industry.

The Group W buy will bring some 630,000 new subscribers to TCI, added to the 3.9 million basic subscribers TCI was counting at the end of 1985. Group W, with 2.1 million cable subscribers, sold for $1.6 billion in cash and $500 million in liabilities to the mso consortium of TCI, American Television & Communications, Comcast Corp., Daniels & Associates and Century Communications. TCI, whose share of the cost is about $560 million, got the largest number of subscribers.

TCI's subscriber base—not counting Group W's addition—rose in 1985 by 9% from the end of 1984. Pay subscriptions rose to 2.8 million, a 7.6% increase over 1984's 2.6 million.

The Group W deal undoubtedly eased TCI's pain over its failure to nab Warner Amex Cable Communications Inc. During the summer, TCI teamed with Time Inc.'s ATC to offer American Express Co. $1.3 billion for the whole Warner Amex system, provided it could get joint venture partner Warner Communications Inc. to sell its half. But the deal fell through in August when Warner itself bought American Express' share.

Absorbing the Group W properties may, at least temporarily, slake TCI's thirst for acquisition. However, Larry Gerbrandt, an analyst in Denver for Paul Kagan Associates, doubts it: "TCI will continue to invest until it reaches the Justice Department limit. Interest rates are low, and this is a good time for buying."

To raise money for acquisitions, in late spring TCI issued 2,875,000 shares of stock. Apart from the Group W deal, which wasn't to be consummated until June, 1986, TCI spent $130 million in cash and stocks on acquisitions, and sold or exchanged properties worth $107.8 million.

Among its attempts at acquiring systems during the year, TCI linked up with Taft Broadcasting, Knight-Ridder Newspapers and Scripps Howard Broadcasting in an unsuccessful bid to buy Storer Communications from Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co.

The company increased its investment in the stock of its Denver-based mso neighbor, United Cable Television Corp., to more than 3 million shares, about 24% of United's outstanding common stock. Under a stand-still agreement, TCI cannot influence United's operating or financial policies. Nevertheless, some analysts speculate that TCI is quietly drawing United into its camp.

In August, TCI formed a partnership with ATC to take control of cable systems in the Kansas City, Mo., area serving more than 110,000 subscribers. ATC is the managing partner in that arrangement.

TCI is stringing cable in Chicago, where its purview includes 800,000 households. TCI will add to its territory in Chicago the 395,000 households within Group W's slice of that city. TCI also recently won the St. Louis franchise and is building the system there.

In the spring of 1985, TCI signed an agreement to manage District Cablevision Inc., a company owned 20% by TCI that was designated to string cable in the nation's capital. TCI pledged to fund the building of the DC system, provided the city council agreed to scale down expectations for cable service. Those concessions were forthcoming, and in September the council transferred the cable franchise to a limited partnership 75% owned by TCI.

TCI's pared-down approach to cable service also was in evidence in Pittsburgh. In 1984, TCI bought the Pittsburgh system for $93.4 million after its original owner, Warner Amex, had invested more than $100 million and lost $31 million there. TCI immediately sought concessions from the city council and during 1985 began operating a "no-frills" system in Pittsburgh with a favorable cash flow.

TCI sold several smaller systems to other cable operators during the year, but its major divestiture of the period came in March, 1986, when the company announced it would sell back its 50% interest in TeleScripps Cable Co. to its partner in that venture, Scripps Howard. The redemption was estimated to involve about $78 million in pretax gain for TCI. TeleScripps serves 265,000 subscribers in eight southern states.

In April, 1985, TCI gave up negotiations for United Satellite Communications Inc., a direct-broadcast satellite venture that discontinued operations a week before the talks broke down. The dalliance with USCI, however, signaled TCI's growing interest in providing direct-broadcast services.

TCI's next move on the satellite-dish issue came in May, when senior vp John Sie proposed a national cooperative scrambling association, under which the cable industry would establish a single technical standard for scrambling, pay the cost of scrambling signals from cable networks such as ESPN, USA, WTBS and CNN and also buy descramblers for the cable systems.

Scrambling, obviously, makes practical the selling of programing to satellite-dish owners—another TCI focus. In October, it signed an agreement with Showtime/The Movie Channel to distribute its networks to dish owners in TCI franchise areas and surrounding nonfranchise areas. In December, TCI became the first mso to unveil a plan for marketing programs to dish owners. TCI's package included 10 basic and five premium programing services. According to the company, "This direct satellite distribution capability is an important ingredient in creating universal distribution for our program services."

In the assessment of Mr. Gerbrandt, after the Group W acquisition, the most important recent development at TCI has been its move toward providing programing. In the spring of 1986, TCI made several program-related announcements. Plans were revealed for TCI to buy a one-third share of American Movie Classics, a service owned by Rainbow Programming Enterprises and CBS Inc.

Reports surfaced that TCI is developing a plan to offer "super local origination channels"—channels programed similarly to independent stations that would offer sports, movies and syndicated shows. These stations would create programing and sell advertising in competition with existing broadcast stations and, in areas where few independent stations are on the air, one station might serve a six or seven-state region.

Also this spring, TCI announced an arrangement with the Pittsburgh Pirates to offer a regional interconnect of TCI systems to carry Pirates games. And in yet another step into programing announced at the same time, TCI signed an agreement with C.O.M.B. Co., a merchandiser of consumer products through direct mail, retail stores and tv. TCI purchased 9.9% of C.O.M.B stock, and forged an agreement to create "the world's largest cable television-based merchandising service." Under current plans, by June TCI will showcase merchandise and allow subscribers to shop at home in segments ranging from 30-second spots to half-day programs.

TCI was a power player in the battle between Ted Turner and NBC over cable news programing. In November, Mr. Turner wooed NBC as a potential investor in his Cable News Network; when those negotiations fell through, he went to TCI and other cable operators. But TCI appeared to be casting its lot with NBC, which was pondering the launch of a competing service, NBC Cable News. That launch was crippled when TCI backed away from agreeing to offer the service by NBC's deadline of Jan. 31, 1986.

TCI is waging a two-pronged attack on erosion caused by videocassette rentals, characterized by senior vp Mr. Sie as "the first real challenge the industry has had." In November TCI ordered 24,000 vcr interface units and began selling them at cost ($30 to $45) to subscribers during the holiday season. The units allow subscribers to watch one cable channel and record on another and are designed to make cable "friendlier" to vcr owners and encourage the building of film libraries.

In February, 1986, TCI launched the second prong of its anti-movie rental campaign when it announced it would test the first pay-per-view service in company history. TCI traditionally has been skeptical of ppv arrangements and made clear that it will not fully plunge into the new service until it has made favorable arrangements with Hollywood studios and can offer movies significantly earlier than they hit the rental shops.

On the corporate front, TCI found that its phenomenal growth made it impractical to continue to run the company exclusively from Denver, and so it decentralized the company into six regions. TCI appointed six vps to head the divisions, defined by the company as "autonomous operating regions" and each staffed with accounting, engineering and marketing personnel consistent with an independent company of its size.

This structure allows TCI to operate as a collection of small companies that enhance management focus and responsiveness while still enjoying economies of scale. Eventually, according to western states division vp-chief operating officer Barry Marshall, only about 15 people will remain at corporate headquarters in Denver.

In June, McGraw-Hill Inc. joined original partners TCI and Telecrafter Corp. of Lakewood, Colo., as an equal partner in X*Press Information Services, which feeds news, financial, sports and weather information into personal computers through cable lines rather than more expensive telephone lines. X*Press completed a technical test in Boulder, Colo., and was rolled out in a market test there and in Buffalo, N.Y.

By the end of 1986, X*Press will be expanded into other TCI markets, and 16 other msos have committed to offer the service, including ATC and United Cable. In December, X*Press became Apple-compatible. X*Press is oriented toward business users and will offer, among other texts, McGraw-Hill Express, Business Week Summary and Standard & Poor's Marketscope.

TCI is a minority partner along with Time Inc.'s HBO and Taft Broadcasting in Black Entertainment Television. BET president Robert Johnson holds controlling interest in the black-oriented cable network. During 1985, HBO took over a number of BET's marketing and sales activities.

TCI is planning to conduct market research throughout 1986 to determine consumer programing preferences and priorities, and consumer attitudes toward program guide, vcr compatibility, the "cable readiness" of cable-ready sets, second set charges and cable system office hours.

During 1985 TCI stuck with its established advertising compaign, using the theme "Cable Is Choice Tv" on radio, outdoor boards and in print and direct mail. Nine flights were scheduled during the year in what a press release called "the largest mso-sponsored national cooperative advertising effort yet undertaken by a major cable operator."

A 24% growth in revenues at TeleCable, controlled by the Batten family and other corporate executives of its former parent, Landmark Communications, was heavily influenced by TeleCable's efforts to build an advertising base in its cable markets in 1985.

The Norfolk, Va., company, the nation's 82nd largest media company, operates 22 cable systems in 15 states.

TeleCable Targeting, the advertising sales division of TeleCable, began advertising efforts in 1985 in five markets—Lexington, Ky.; Arlington, Tex.; Springfield, Mo.; Overland Park, Kan., and Racine, Wis., reaching some 200,000 homes, or 40% of TeleCable's subscribers. TeleCable closed 1985 with 480,000 basic subscribers, up 6% from 1984.

Targeting will expand its advertising penetration in 1986 to another 100,000 subscribers in Greenville and Spartanburg, S.C., and Plano and Richardson, Tex. Another 100,000 subscribers will be reached by the end of 1987 through advertising efforts in Bloomington, Ill.; Margate, Fla.; Kokomo, Ind., and Beckley, W.Va.

A subsidiary of newspaper publishing giant Landmark Communications Inc. until it spun off in 1984, TeleCable did not add any cable systems to its corporate structure in 1985, concentrating instead on upgrading present systems and on the campaign to generate advertising.

TeleCable ranked 19th in 1985 among cable multiple system operators in the number of subscribers. It could climb to 10th place by the end of this year in ad dollars per subscriber with gross advertising revenues of some $4.5 million, company officials say.

The company ranks even higher in revenue-per-subscriber figures in its systems that accept local advertising. While in 1984 TeleCable just met the industry per-subscriber revenue average of $5.50 in ad revenues, or 19th place, the 1985 advertising effort brought yearend per-subscriber revenue in the five TeleCable Targeting campaign systems to $10.26, compared with the industry average of $7.20. TeleCable is ranked eighth among msos in this category. Company officials predict it will be fourth by the end of the year with a figure of $15.25 per subscriber for its nine cable systems accepting local advertising.

TeleCable Targeting employs some 80 people; each sales office is staffed by a sales manager, three to five sales executives, and four or five additional staff support people, says Alfred F. Ritter, TeleCable vp-finance.

In January, Frank Batten, chairman of both TeleCable and Landmark Communications, announced each company had repurchased 39% of its own stock for an undisclosed price from 56 minority stockholders. He, his family and other company executives now own more than 90% of the stock, Mr. Batten says, adding, "These stock purchases will have little or no effect on the companies' operations. They do ensure that Landmark and TeleCable will remain privately owned."

Thomson Newspapers recorded an increase of 26.8% in sales from its U.S. newspapers, which increased by eight to reach 100 in 1985, as difficult competitive and marketing pressures at its two largest dailies in Canada cut into its financial performance on the home front.

Thomson, Toronto, is solely a newspaper company, its U.S. media equal to 54.6% of combined U.S. and Canadian revenues of $683.2 million, 17.6% more than 1984. Total 1985 net income (both U.S. and Canadian operations) was $125.7 million, up 14%. Thomson Newspapers does not state separately its net income from media operations. Thomson is ranked the 30th largest media company on the basis of its U.S. media revenues.

U.S. dollar figures for this profile were converted from Canadian currency at the rate of C$1=U.S.$0.716 The same rate was applied to 1984 figures for comparison. The Canadian dollar fell 8% against the U.S. dollar in 1985.

"Thomson has among the best records of profitability in the newspaper business," says Murray Grossner, analyst with Richardson Greenshields, Toronto. "They have a very strong balance sheet characterized by low debt relative to equity."

In the U.S., Thomson added nine new dailies (and a separate Sunday paper) during the past 18 months, bringing the total to 100, including 96 dailies, three weeklies, and one twice-weekly. More than 171,000 circulation was added by the new dailies, bringing total 1985 U.S. circulation to 1,497,900, up about 8%. The company also sold in January, 1985, the Douglas (Ariz.) Daily Dispatch with 3,007 circulation.

Thomson publishes 50 newspapers in nine of the 10 Canadian provinces (not Quebec), including 37 dailies, the balance published once, twice or thrice weekly. Media sales in Canada were $310 million in 1985, up 8% from 1984. Canadian circulation slipped about 1% in 1985 to 1,125,900. A major reason for this small drop, according to Thomson, was a new Sunday marketing program for the Winnipeg Free Press. No acquisitions or sales of papers were reported for Canada in 1985.

there," says Brian Slaight, exec vp, Thomson Newspapers. Thomson denies it has any special formula for picking its acquisitions and operating them successfully, but it does have a good track record.

"We try to analyze the newspaper and its market," Mr. Slaight says. "And we do that in all sorts of ways. People approach us. We approach them. We have friends in the industry, and we're aware of a lot that's going on.

"Our papers average about 16,000 circulation. Our main interest is in small and medium-size markets."

Thomson is known to maintain "a very respectable rate of growth . . . they engage in very strong and consistent cost planning to finance acquisitions," securities analyst Mr. Grossner says.

One of the Canadian company's U.S. buys during 1985 was the Daily News, evening and Saturday issues, in Lebanon, Pa., which Thomson purchased from Richard Mellon Scaife. Also included in the Lebanon purchase was the companion Sunday paper, the Sunday Pennsylvanian. Average six-month circulation reported March 31, 1986, by ABC was 25,148 for the daily, down 8.1% for the same period a year earlier; 24,900 Sunday, down 14.2%.

Other Thomson U.S. acquisitions were: The Vidette Messenger, an evening and Saturday morning paper, circulation 13,265, in Valparaiso, Ind.; Richmond Register, an evening paper, 9,056, in Richmond, Ky.; Herald Palladin, evening, circulation 36,284, in neighboring Benton Harbor and St. Joseph, Mich.; the Daily Journal, evening, 12,988, in Fergus Falls, Minn.; Sedalia Democrat, evening, 14,189, and Sunday, 15,502, in Sedalia, Mo.; Daily Advance, evening, 11,119, and Sunday, 12,205, in Elizabeth City, N.C., and the Dickinson Press, morning (except Monday), 8,081, and Sunday, 8,462, Dickinson, N.D.

Circulation at most of these newspapers is down slightly from the previous year—an industrywide trend in 1985-86. "When Thomson acquires a newspaper it tends to boost profits within the next two to three years," Mr. Grossner says.

Thomson does not control its 31-state U.S. newspaper empire from Toronto. It manages and conducts communications from U.S. executive offices in Des Plaines, Ill., a Chicago suburb, and four divisional offices in Boston (Wellesley Hills), Mass.; Tampa, Fla.; Canton, O., and Kansas City, Mo.

Like other chains with papers in smaller cities and towns, Thomson often has no competing papers to confront. Not so in its hometown and biggest market, Toronto, Canada's largest city and the scene of some of the hottest newspaper competition. The daily faceoffs are among the Star, publishing seven days a week, circulating about 516,000 weekdays and Saturdays and 806,000 Sundays; the Sun, smallest during the week with about 268,000 mornings and Saturday but up to 451,300 on Sundays, and Thomson's Globe and Mail, publishing six mornings a week but not on Sunday. Its circulation is 315,000.

Mr. Grossner, who sees Thomson's earnings per share rising from $0.88 a share in 1985 to possibly $1.25 in 1987, says the only cloud on that horizon may be the heavy cost of seeking and winning advertising and circulation for the Globe and Mail. "Even if they should come out of Toronto with losses," he says, "the other [Thomson] papers can certainly reduce those and show an over-all profit."

Thomson has been working in its second biggest market, Winnipeg, Man., to add a Sunday edition to its Winnipeg Free Press, by far the biggest newspaper show in town, circulating about four times as many copies as the rival Sun on weekdays. But the Free Press' success in adding the seventh issue has diluted slightly its totals for daily circulation. Free Press weekday circulation in 1984 stood at about 175,400, and Saturday at 240,140. In 1985, after the Sunday introduction, daily was down to about 174,300, Saturday to 238,200, and Sunday was 151,150.

"It's not axiomatic that we always build or remodel when we acquire a paper, but if needed we don't hesitate," Mr. Slaight says. Thomson spent about $19.8 million on new facilities for its papers in 1985, including a new plant for the Daily Spectrum, St. George, Utah. About the same amount is slated for 1986, including new construction at the Key West (Fla.) Citizen, the Coshocton (O.) Tribune, and at least one more paper about which Thomson will not release details.

With equal partner Abitibi-Price, Thomson Newspapers Ltd. has taken half interest in a recently expanded newsprint plant of the Augusta Newsprint Co., Augusta, Ga. This is Thomson's sole nonnewspaper interest. During 1985 Thomson took its $4 million share of the about $8 million total pretax loss as the North American newsprint market proved problematic because of foreign competition, lessening newsprint demand and undependable pricing. Thomson has reported to its shareholders that the mill is now operating well and the partnership is generating positive cash flow. Thomson's investment as of Dec. 31, 1985, was $215 million.

Thomson Newspapers Ltd. is a public company, owned 61% by Woodbridge Co. Ltd., Toronto. Woodbridge, a private holding company, is owned by descendants of the late Roy Thomson, who began the chain with the purchase of a weekly newspaper in Timmins, Ont., more than a half century ago. He became Lord Thomson of Fleet and owner of the Times of London, since sold to Rupert Murdoch. The present Lord Thomson of Fleet, Roy's son, Kenneth R. Thomson, now heads Thomson Newspapers as chairman of the board and president.

Woodbridge also owns controlling interest, 73.5%, in International Thomson Organisation Ltd., Toronto. This complex organization has several subsidiaries, including International Thomson Organisation plc, London, England, and a principal U.S. subsidiary, International Thomson Holdings Inc., New York, which includes specialized publishers plus travel, oil and gas businesses.

Bedford Park, Ill.-based 3M National Advertising Co. late in 1985 embarked on aggressive expansion plans in the Sunbelt and in several major markets that could push it into the top position among out-of-home media companies.

Ranking a close third behind Los Angeles-based Foster & Kleiser and New York-based Gannett Outdoor, 3M's estimated media revenues of $200 million, ranking it the 59th largest media company, represented about 13% of the out-of-home industry's estimated revenues of $1.5 billion in 1985.

The media company is a unit of 3M, St. Paul, Minn., which does not disclose revenues for units smaller than divisions. 3M's graphic technologies division, which contains 3M National, had revenues of $1.3 billion in 1985, up 2% from 1984.

The 3M National unit is zeroing in on Foster & Kleiser, with revenues of $212 million in 1985, and Gannett Outdoor, with $207 million in 1985 revenues, says Frank Rolfes, analyst with Dain Bosworth, Minneapolis.

3M National in 1986 has set a goal of 15% revenue growth, putting it at about $230 million in revenues. The 3M unit has been growing at a 15% clip each year since 1970 through construction of outdoor bulletins, says Tom Devine, marketing operations manager. By comparison, Gannett Outdoor's revenues grew 4% in 1985.

3M National sought to grow through acquisition of Naegele Outdoor in 1985 (estimated annual revenues of $100 million), but it was forced to call off its plans when a U.S. Justice Department opinion in December, 1984, noted there could be antitrust implications. Naegele subsequently was purchased in July, 1985, for an estimated $400 million by Morris Communications, Augusta, Ga.

The 3M unit is the nation's largest owner of painted bulletins with 25,000 standard, highway and expressway sizes in 80 markets. That compares with 400 painted bulletins in 10 markets when 3M entered the business in 1970. Painted bulletins account for about 85% of 3M National's revenues, Mr. Devine says.

The 3M unit constructed more than 600 new bulletins between September, 1985, and May, 1986, in a broad area between Atlanta and the Rio Grande valley, Mr. Devine says. In the same period, it has added another 300 bulletins in the Chicago and Detroit markets. In 1985, the 3M unit added 50 new employes to its property leasing department, bringing the total to 150.

"In outdoor advertising, your product is the [property] lease. The most important guy in the company is the one who can give you a location," Mr. Devine says.

3M has taken a different approach from Foster & Kleiser and Gannett by specializing in painted bulletins while its two biggest competitors are stronger in posters.

It spreads out its holdings along highways and urban expressways in 80 markets while its two big competitors are concentrating in about 15 markets each. And it focuses on local and regional advertising accounts, while Foster & Kleiser and Gannett have focused more heavily on national accounts. This latter difference has made 3M less vulnerable than its competitors to recent losses in revenues from tobacco and liquor advertising, Mr. Devine says.

About 10% of 3M National's revenues come from eight-sheet posters and from shopping mall advertising. The latter category is estimated to be a $25 million segment dominated by 3M, which has exclusive contracts with 650 of the nation's 1,800 malls. The 3M unit also operates 10,000 to 15,000 eight-sheet panels in New Jersey, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

About 5% its revenues come from Panagraphic backlight displays, one of its fastest growing segments. Growth is spurred by a trend toward the use of backlights in 14-by-48-ft. and 20-by-60-ft. sizes by big tobacco companies. R.J. Reynolds Industries now has 400 backlights in 40 markets. Philip Morris and Lorillard each have more than 50 displays in 15 to 20 markets. All three companies are rapidly expanding backlight installations.

Technology is a factor in the booming backlights business. In recent years, the graphic technologies division has developed the world's largest screen press, capable of printing 14-by-48-ft. sheets, at its 3M-Italy plant in Bologna. Gannett's Mediacom subsidiary in Toronto, by comparison, recently has developed North America's largest screen press, capable of printing 10-by-30-ft. sheets.

"As outdoor advertising locations become dearer, the desire to make a site more valuable means building it up by installing backlights," Mr. Devine says.

The graphic technologies division also continues to iron out difficulties with 3M's Comput-a-paint system, a computerized, four-color painting process now under development. The 3M system is in a race with Mitsubishi Corp. of Japan to revolutionize production of painted bulletins. The systems would provide magazine-quality reproduction in hours, compared with wide variations in quality from hand-painting, which takes several days.

There also have been several personnel shifts at 3M National, including the appointment in January, 1986, of Jack Pickett as general manager and Jim Shaeen as eastern marketing director. This completes a management restructuring that began late in 1984 with the appointments of Harry Bolin as western marketing director; Tom Devine, marketing operations manager; Frank Loftus, sales manager-national accounts, and Paul Gill, research manager.

In an era of unfriendly takeovers and a less buoyant economy, Time Inc. has moved toward a new strategy that includes cost-containment measures, a reorganization to further bolster its magazine group, and a spate of acquisitions that will be paid for in part by the 20% sale of its American Television & Communications Inc. subsidiary.

The nation's third largest media company had an over-all revenue growth of 11% to $3.4 billion in 1985 over 1984; however, earnings dropped 7.4% to $200 million. Earnings were affected by a $13 million charge against staff reductions, a decline in interest income from lower cash balances and the absence of a 1984 pretax gain of $37 million. The media portion of Time Inc. was up 11.5% in revenue, but down 1% in pretax operating income to $396 million.

Media revenues, which represented 84% of total revenues—about the same per cent as in 1984—are derived from a video operations unit and a magazine group, which publishes 11 magazines, including Time, the nation's No. 1 title in total advertising revenue, according to Publishers Information Bureau, New York. A third division, books and information services, is not considered media in this report.

Magazine group revenues increased 12%, while pretax operating profit declined 6% to $176 million. The drop in income was primarily because the acquisition in March, 1985, of Southern Progress Corp.

Video operations include Home Box Office, the nation's largest pay cable service; Cinemax pay cable, and ATC, the nation's second largest cable tv system operator. Revenue from video operations was up 9%, and pretax operating profit was up 3% to $220 million.

During 1985, Time Inc. initiated a plan to cut operating costs in 1986 by $75 million or 2.5% because of a slowed economy and an effort to fund growth "internally or by acquisition." To meet that goal, Time Inc. tightened some of its liberal benefits and laid off 136 employes.

Through much of 1985, Time Inc. was visibly concerned about the potential of a hostile takeover. It adopted tough antitakeover measures. But it was reported to have had friendly merger discussions as well with several sources, including Gannett Co. Time Inc. in June, 1986, authorized the repurchase of 10 million shares, or 16% of Time's shares outstanding—a move designed to put a floor beneath the stock.

Time Inc. spent $480 million in March, 1985, for Southern Progress in its biggest to-date magazine investment. Southern Progress publishes Southern Living, Creative Ideas for Living and Progressive Farmer. While the purchase caused operating income to drop slightly in 1985, the publishing company says the acquisition "has been successful beyond our expectations . . . and will add to 1986 earnings." In October, Southern Progress purchased W.R.C. Smith Publishing Co., Atlanta, publisher of Southern Accents, and merged into it Southern Living Classics, an every-other-monthly it recently had introduced that closely resembled Southern Accents.

Time Inc.'s magazine group saw many changes this past year. A test of Picture Week, a newsstand-only human-interest photo weekly, was suspended last February after 4½ months and is scheduled to resume in mid-July. The company also is taking a financial stake in a new magazine, Parenting, to be published outside Time Inc.

The magazine group also underwent a major reorganization involving 18 executives. The most significant action in the move was the formation of a four-man executive team, headed by Kelso Sutton, exec vp, Time Inc., to run the group.

While magazine industry advertising revenues were lukewarm in 1985—rising just 4% over-all—Time Inc.'s publications saw a 9% gain in ad revenues to a record $840 million. For the 16th consecutive year, Time was first in ad revenues among all publications, up 3.3% to $346.6 million, according to PIB.

Life, meanwhile, had its best year since resuming publication as a monthly in 1978, with ad revenue gains of 14% to $39.8 million. People also had a record year as ad revenues increased 8% to $250.7 million. And Money, which Time Inc. calls the nation's "fastest-growing major magazine," had revenue gains of 8% to $237.3 million.

Time Inc. also moved to strengthen its international holdings in September with the purchase of a majority interest in Asiaweek, a leading English-language magazine that is in a neck-and-neck battle with Dow Jones & Co.'s Eastern Economic Review. Earlier this year, Time Inc. also joined in a venture with John Fairfax & Sons to publish Time South Pacific.

On the video front, Time Inc. posted gains in revenues and profits and reach an agreement to sell 20% of its ATC cable subsidiary in a public offering. Proceeds of the sales, estimated to run as much as $400 million, will be used for acquisitions, says Time officials.

In December, ATC and four other companies purchased nearly all the cable operations of Westinghouse Electric's Group W. Total Group W purchase price is estimated at $1.75 billion. Time Inc. expects to pay about 20% to 30% of that price for its share. ATC, meanwhile, increased its number of subscribers to 2.7 million, up 200,000 from 1984.

Home Box Office and Cinemax turned in strong performances. HBO posted a slight gain in subscribers to 14.6 million; Cinemax moved to 3.7 million from 3.3 million, making it the nation's third largest pay service.

HBO also signed a series of deals with major studios giving it film rights. The latest agreement was reached in early June, 1986, with Warner Brothers Inc. that gives HBO rights to Warner Brothers' films for the next five years. The deal is valued at an estimated $600 million. Other deals were struck with Columbia, Orion Pictures, Universal, Twentieth Century-Fox and Tri-Star Pictures. HBO this year began testing a third pay channel called Festival.

In other ventures, Time Inc.'s Selling Areas Marketing Inc. market research company signed an agreement earlier this year to purchase Burke Marketing Services. SAMI and Arbitron Ratings Co., in another agreement, plan a joint venture to monitor audience viewing of tv and commercial verification by brand, product and manufacturer.

Times Journal Co., Springfield, Va., broke even for the first time on its Journal newspapers serving suburban Washington, launched Defense News and closed its Times Magazine supplement to Army Times in boosting media sales 20% in 1985 over 1984.

The nation's 87th largest media company, Times Journal, launched Defense News, a national weekly newspaper devoted to defense, security and strategic policy, amid great fanfare January, 1986, throwing a coming-out party that included as guests Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, top Reagan administration officials and some 30 members of Congress.

Defense News printed several preview issues in 1985. Its circulation is pegged at 12,000, although it has not yet been audited. Annual subscription price is $65, or $2 an issue at newsstands. Start-up costs may have approached $5 million for the publication, which the company says has "surpassed our hopes, both in circulation and advertising." Defense News has an editorial staff of 12 in Washington and correspondents in Israel, Paris, London and Brazil. Richard C. Barnard, a former editor of Defense Week, is the new publication's editor; Jack Kerrigan, a 25-year veteran of the Washington Post, is its publisher.

Defense News is part of the Times Journal Co.'s Army Times group, which began in 1940 with the publication of the Army Times and added the Air Force Times (1947), Navy Times (1951) and the Federal Times (1965). The group also publishes Military Market, a trade magazine for military commissary and exchange personnel.

Times Journal officials say although circulation for the Times publications remained fairly constant at about 320,000 in 1985, advertising revenues increased 7%, primarily because of a 5% display ad increase.

The Army Times publications discontinued publication in December of Times Magazine, a slick-stock insert supplement to the military Times papers; elements of the magazine were consolidated into the Life in the Times section of the publications.

Bigger revenue producers for privately held Times Journal are the five suburban Journal newspapers, five-day-a-week papers covering Washington's Maryland and Virginia suburbs. In 1984, the papers showed a profit for the first time since they went from a twice-weekly status in 1981, and built on those profits in 1985, although the company would not say how much.

As did the Times publications, circulation at the Journal papers remained relatively flat in 1985, increasing to 151,206 at the end of the year from 150,000 in 1984. Both classified and display ad rates were hiked in 1985, and total advertising revenues from the five papers increased almost 27% from 1984.

Journal publisher Geoff Edwards says he believes the papers' relatively flat circulation figures are the result of a settling-in process as subscribers become accustomed to a daily format. "I think we'll see a growth of maybe 10,000 subscribers a year for the next few years," Mr. Edwards says.

The Journal papers not only face stiff competition from increasing suburban coverage by the Washington Post, but also by competing local newspapers in the Journal papers' five circulation areas—Prince Georges and Montgomery counties in Maryland, Arlington and Fairfax counties in Virginia, and the city of Alexandria in Virginia.

In 1985, as in 1984, Times Journal spent almost $500,000 in radio advertising promoting circulation and classified advertising for the Journal papers. In 1986, the company has added tv advertising, much of it in support of its redesigned Friday real estate section—now a tabloid insert—and will spend an estimated $1.5 million in radio and tv promotional efforts.

Times Journal Co. has two other divisions, the Times Journal Printing Co., and Times Journal Telemarketing Co. Revenues were down for the telemarketing division, which not only solicits subscriptions for Times Journal but also for other companies and services such as automobile clubs and credit card insurance.

Revenue at the Times Journal Printing Co. leveled off in 1985, says Steve Ackley, public affairs director, primarily because of revenues lost when the Washington Post discontinued printing its Sunday tv guide on Times Journal presses. The printing division did pick up some new customers in 1985, including the Audubon Society's tabloid newspaper and the Chronicle of Higher Education. Times Journal Publishing Co. continues to print USA Today's regional editions and Times Mirror Co.'s Sporting News.

Times Mirror Co. media operations, ranked fifth among the nation's media companies, underwent considerable shuffling in 1985, but nothing like the first half of 1986 in which the company shelled out $600 million for A.S. Abell Co., owner of the Sunpapers in Baltimore, and $10 million for the prestigious weekly magazine National Journal.(See the A.S. Abell profile elsewhere in this report.)

The heavy buying by the Los Angeles-based company followed a year in which the company sold three of its seven tv stations, closed Gateway videotex, bought the Morning Call in Allentown, Pa., and launched a New York City special edition of Newsday.

Times Mirror, whose earnings increased 1.9% in 1985 from 1984—largely because of tax considerations (operating earnings were up 14%)—will experience a dilution of earnings from the Abell acquisition for four to five years, according to the company. In the first quarter, which closed just before the purchase, net income fell 22% to $34.5 million on a slight decline in revenue to $693 million.

Newspaper publishing, accounting for 51% of total revenues at Times Mirror, improved by 10% in 1985 aided by the acquisition of the Allentown (Pa.) Morning Call and increases in ad linage at Times Mirror's eastern newspapers.

But while its eastern newspapers prospered, Times Mirror's western papers, notably the Los Angeles Times, didn't fare as well. Full-run ad linage at the Times dropped 4% compared with 1984. Over-all, newspaper group operating profits rose 5%, with declines offset by ad rate hikes and expense controls.

Times Mirror's book, magazine and other publishing segments ended 1985 with a 14% increase in revenues and a 15% gain in operating profits. The magazine division reported reduced profits, a downturn marked by the soft national advertising environment. Cable tv experienced a record year, with revenues up 11% and operating profits increasing by 25%. Times Mirror made these gains by restructuring its operation, divesting unprofitable systems and trading others to focus on specific regions, such as the greater Phoenix area.

In March, 1986, Times Mirror decided to dump its struggling Gateway videotex system, after numerous attempts to revive the information system failed. Times Mirror management said that after 15 months of commercial trial, it didn't believe there was sufficient consumer demand to make it an ongoing business.

In October, 1985, the Los Angeles Times dumped its 40-year-old Home magazine for a new, glossy publication named the Los Angeles Times Magazine. In its 8¼-by-10¾-in. consumer size, the magazine is designed to attract the national and retail advertisers that had become disillusioned with its predecessor. Many observers predict it may signal a trend in the Sunday magazine field.

For its maiden issue, the Los Angeles Times Magazine had a whopping 184 pages—a radical change from the skimpy appearance of Home. But since then, the size of the issues has dropped substantially, although Times Mirror insists the magazine is performing precisely as expected—an average of 48 pages per issue, with 65% of ad revenue from national advertisers.

As a potential circulation booster, the Los Angeles Times introduced a new feature, a "Monday Sports Special," a color wrap-up of weekend sports news. It also stepped up its business coverage.

The 1,088,155-plus circulation paper introduced a new San Fernando Valley edition in October, 1984, enabling the Times to compete head-to-head against the Los Angeles Daily News in the Valley and southern Ventura County. The Times' daily circulation in the San Fernando Valley was 185,926 in 1985, compared with 177,316 in 1984. On Sunday, the Valley circulation was 217,673 in 1985, compared with 210,148 a year earlier.

The Los Angeles Times set up an internal committee to determine the feasibility of a western edition for the West Coast and some contiguous states.

While the Times dominates the Los Angeles market, other Times Mirror papers face tough competitive challenges in the weak economies of Denver and Dallas.

Its Denver Post received a massive circulation boost after the ABC allowed it to count as paid circulation 50,000 readers it added in a distribution deal with a local cable tv operator. In a controversial agreement with United Cable of Colorado, the Post incorporated the cable operator's program guide into its Sunday paper.

The Dallas Times Herald by most accounts seems to be losing in its war against A.H. Belo Corp.'s Dallas Morning News. For the six-month period ended March 31, 1986, the Times Herald's daily circulation rose 1.5% to 244,629, but that slight gain was made with the help of contests and promotional giveaways. The Times Herald still lags the News by a wide margin—145,646 copies.

In an attempt to shore up the Times Herald's numerous problems, Los Angeles Times publisher Tom Johnson took on the additional responsibility of running the Dallas paper. For a year before new management was put in place, Mr. Johnson spent about 60% of his time in Dallas, where he was publisher before moving to the Times. Many have criticized Times Mirror's management ranks as too thin.

During the year, the Times Herald put into operation the first of four offset presses and a satellite facility for inserting preprints, actions meant to make the paper more attractive to advertisers and readers.

Also to that end, the Dallas paper introduced a special section on Mondays called Dallas Inc., a tabloid covering business news features.

The paper hired Arthur Wible away from the Chicago-based Tribune Co.'s New York Daily News to become president of the Times Herald in the fall of 1985, a vacant post. In addition, U.S. News & World Report and Washington Post alumnus Shelby Coffey III joined the paper as editor, replacing Will Jarrett, who resigned.

Concentrating on trying to build circulation, the paper has undertaken extensive market research, which led to a number of editorial changes, including new sections and new graphics.

Newsday is expanding from its suburban base, having launched a special New York City edition of the paper in April, 1985, promoted by a $3 million tv, radio and outdoor board advertising campaign. The move puts the 500,000-circulation Long Island daily in competition against the New York Times, the New York Daily News and the New York Post. Industry estimates are Times Mirror is investing $10 million in the expansion. It intends to have the edition on every newsstand in Manhattan by yearend.

While it began as a special edition for Queens, the company is increasing its staff, trimming suburban news from the paper in a bid to become the complete newspaper for all of New York City.

Times Mirror acquired the Morning Call in Allentown, Pa., in late 1984. Since then, the Call has revamped and renamed its Saturday tabloid. The paper redesigned its Sunday package as well.

Times Mirror magazines gained the National Journal in late May, 1986, paying Anthony Stout for his 80% share of the magazine and the Washington Post Co. for its 20% equity. The publication, with only 5,000 circulation, has influence far beyond those numbers. It carries a hefty $546 one-year subscription. Ad revenues for 1985 were $1.9 million, a 119% increase over 1984, on 552 ad pages, up 91.2%. The publication just began accepting ads in 1982.

Times Mirror magazines named Andrew Dempsey, formerly exec vp, McCall Corp., as president, replacing John A. Scott, now publisher, Madison Avenue magazine. James Kopper, a former president of Ziff-Davis, took on the new title of exec vp-group publisher.

The company entered into an agreement to sell three of its seven tv stations for $84 million, a move that freed it to make bids in larger markets. The stations, sold to Smith Acquisition Corp., were in Harrisburg, Pa., and Syracuse and Elmira, N.Y. As part of its plan to redeploy its assets, Times Mirror sold 80% of its Publishers Paper Co. to the Jefferson Smurfit Corp. The company completed the transaction in Febuary, 1986. The company also has stated its intention to dispose of its timberlands.

Otis Chandler, who was publisher of the Los Angeles Times from 1960 to 1980 and chairman and editor-in-chief of Times Mirror for the past five years, added the title of chairman of the executive committee of the board of directors. He succeeded Franklin Murphy, who reached the mandatory retirement age of 70.

At the annual meeting in April, 1986, Times Mirror announced that, as of Jan. 1, 1987, senior vp-eastern newspapers David Laventhol would become president of Times Mirror, succeeding Robert F. Erburu, who continues as chairman-ceo. Additionally, Tom Johnson, senior vp-western newspapers, takes on the additional post of vice-chairman of the corporation. Exec vp Phillip Williams will become vice-chairman of the board.

Times Publishing Co., St. Petersburg, Fla., reports gains in both advertising and circulation for its daily newspapers and in September will launch the third of its Trend business magazines, the Phoenix-based Arizona Trend.

Times Publishing, a privately held corporation, reports a 10.8% increase in revenues from its media properties for 1985 over 1984, making it the 69th largest U.S. media company. Times Publishing is 100% media.

Arizona Trend will be the second statewide monthly business journal to be started by Times in two years. Times reports the year-old Georgia Trend is, as of March 31, circulating 24,500 copies. Although both magazines started in a new market, they are not new product categories for Times. Florida Trend has been operating since 1958. Its circulation rose 6.5% to 42,997 in 1985.

In the company's primary market, St. Petersburg, both Times papers, the St. Petersburg Times and the St. Petersburg Evening Independent, report circulation and advertising gains. The Independent is showing a 1.7% circulation growth rate two years after its distribution was confined to the immediate St. Petersburg area and the beach communities just south of the city. Circulation, according to six-month ABC statements ended March 31, 1986, was 39,998, up from 38,085 in the corresponding year-earlier period. The morning Times, by contrast, circulated 315,698 in the same period, up 9.7%. Sunday Times circulation rose a dramatic 10.2% for the same reporting period, to 408,095. The daily and Sunday Times papers retain a regional target area. Their distribution is not restricted like the Evening Independent.

Ad inches in the morning and evening papers are also on the rise. At the Times, ad inches are divided into part-run, ads that appear in one but not all of the Times eight regionally-zoned editions, and full-run, ads that appear in all the zoned editions.

For the morning daily, part-run advertising inches were up 13.4% to 2,656,119, according to Leo Kubiet, vp and advertising director. He reports full-run ad inches for the Times at 3,858,300, a gain of 4.2% from the previous year. For the Evening Independent, where all the advertising is full run, inches totaled 1,661,736, up 8.5%.

Times Publishing is restricted in how it can expand by the will of its former owner, Nelson Poynter, who died in 1978. Mr. Poynter established that the company could not acquire papers other than those it owned when he died—the two St. Petersburg papers. He further stipulated that those two papers never be sold.

This does not keep Times from acquiring or starting magazines such as Georgia Trend and Arizona Trend. And it also has meant studying the possibilities of cable and other electronics. But Times decided not to venture into those fields.

"We studied the possibility of getting into cable communication videotex or other forms of electronics," Mr. Kubiet says, "and decided against that. We found that it's impractical and not profitable."

Not so the Trend magazines. Although Times won't disclose its revenues or earnings from the Georgia and Florida magazines, Mr. Kubiet describes their performance as outstanding.

Arizona Trend is confident its 20,000-controlled circulation monthly will reach the top business and political leaders statewide. Although it will compete with two weeklies, Scripps Howard's Phoenix Business Journal and the Arizona Business Gazette, owned by the Arizona Republic & Phoenix Gazette newspaper, Arizona Trend will be the only slick, in-depth monthly aimed directly at business and community leaders.

Ad director Blayne Bosse says Arizona Trend will start off charging advertisers $1,690 for a full-page, b&w ad, with four color to cost $700 more. As an incentive, charter advertisers will be able to get one ad free for buying three.

Arizona Trend has its genesis in a prototype slick monthly called Arizona Inc., published in November by former associate publisher of the Des Moines Register James Kaiser. Mr. Kaiser sold the idea to Times Publishing and now will stay on to direct Arizona Trend.

Times Publishing is confident a monthly business magazine can sell in Arizona because it gained a foothold in Georgia. Georgia Trend's circulation is up 22.5% from a year earlier, when it started with a 20,000 paid-controlled circulation mix.

In Georgia, Georgia Trend competes with Scripps Howard's Atlanta Business Chronicle and Communication Channels Inc.'s Business Atlanta monthly.

The Times Publishing-owned Modern Graphic Arts will be printing all three Trend publications. A commercial printing house, its revenues of $7.7 million are folded into newspaper revenues. Modern Graphic Arts also prints inserts and the covers for the Sunday Times TV Dial guide.

Times Publishing further puts out "Congressional Quarterly" and Editorial Research Reports. Mr. Kubiet reports sales for these two publications of $13.3 million, all of which is folded into the magazine total.

Triangle Publications, Radnor, Pa., relaunched a magazine discontinued more than a decade ago and suffered declining ad pages but increased ad revenues from its two long-standing magazines in reporting over-all net revenue growth of an estimated 4.3% in 1985.

Triangle, ranked the 20th largest media company, is a private company owned by Walter Annenberg, who relinquished his title of president to William Henrich in 1985 while adding his own name to the new role of chairman.

Triangle in February, 1986, added Good Food, a digest-size consumer weekly, to its publications lineup after a hiatus of 12 years. The company already publishes two magazines, TV Guide and Seventeen, as well as the turfside newspaper, the Daily Racing Form. Triangle published eight issues of Good Food in 1974.

A subsidiary, Triangle Communications, was created by the parent company in 1985 to accommodate the operations of Good Food and Seventeen. Frank G. Wolf, former publisher of Seventeen, was named group publisher.

For a number of reasons, the relaunch of Good Food met with less success than anticipated. Twelve years ago, the magazine averaged 1.3 million in circulation with an average of 40 ad pages an issue. In the intervening years, competition in the food magazine category has intensified. Advertisers, apparently concerned about the company's commitment to the project, have adopted a wait-and-see attitude.

According to Mr. Wolf, the initial issue of Good Food contained 20 ad pages. Two million copies of the inaugural issue were circulated in more than 40,000 supermarkets (it has a 750,000 guaranteed circulation rate base). Single copies go for $1, and subscriptions, $12 per year.

Through the first six issues, Mr. Wolf expects the magazine to average 12 pages of advertising. Despite the seemingly slow start, Mr. Wolf is optimistic. "Our judgment is that with the growing interest in food and nutrition we should be successful," he says. "We had some initial problems with our supermarket distribution, but those wrinkles have been ironed out. We expect strong results from our yearend subscription drive. Our reader mail has been so positive that we know there is a demand for our product."

Triangle is prepared to stand behind the publication to make it a success, he says. Work has just been completed on a test kitchen for Good Food. Bob Young, formerly with New York, was hired as associate publisher-advertising.

Seventeen, the other publication under Mr. Wolf's direction as group publisher, had another strong year in 1985. Although advertising pages were down 4% to 1,437, gross ad revenue climbed 5.9% to $34,145,984, according to Publishers Information Bureau.

Circulation rose to an all-time high of 1,750,513, according to yearend ABC figures, a slight 0.3% increase over 1984. Seventeen has achieved new single-issue circulation records for 34 of the past 36 issues.

Seventeen attributes its success to its increasing penetration of the teen market. It is achieving circulation highs at a time when the number of 13-to-19-year-olds is on the decline—an upturn in this demographic is not expected until 1992. In 1986, Mr. Wolf says, the magazine will reach 14.3% of the 12.3 million American teen agers with its 1.75 million circulation. By contrast, in 1976, when the number of American teens was at an all-time high of 14.7 million, Seventeen's market penetration stood at 9.8% from 1.45 million circulation.

TV Guide, by far the most powerful of Triangle's publications, carried 3,670 ad pages, a 3.4% drop, according to PIB, which monitors gross ad revenues. However, those pages generated 3.2% more in gross ad revenues for a 1985 total of $314 million.

TV Guide has been unable to reverse a declining circulation trend, prompted in part by a September, 1984, price increase to 60 cents on newsstands and $29.90 basic subscription, costs up 20% and 28%, respectively. The publication's average circulation dropped 1.2% to 17,002,000 in 1985. Circulation for 1985 was equally divided between subscription copies and newsstand sales.

In reaction to the circulation decline, TV Guide will initiate a rate base reduction to 16,400,000 from 17,000,000 effective July 5, 1986. However, any ad rate adjustments will be offset by rate increases. The cost of a four-color page in TV Guide will rise by 1.2% in July. A one-time insertion for a four-color ad in the magazine now costs $94,700.

"We still will have the largest circulation of any magazine in America," says William Deitch, assistant to TV Guide publisher Eric G. Larson.

Through 1986, the magazine has had an average of 16.9 million issues sold, just slightly below its guarantee.

TV Guide's editorial product continued to expand to reflect the interests of the tv viewer. Coverage in 1985 included an increased emphasis on videocassette recorder usage and cable. Page format listings were changed.

Michael P. Sandler, publisher of the Daily Racing Form, reports that ad revenues for the broadsheet were up 12% from 1984 levels, though he would not provide specific figures. The publication is largely circulation driven.

Mr. Sandler believes this advertising interest mirrors the growing interest of the general public in horse racing as more and more states approve racing, and others sanction off-track betting and simulcasting. To keep up with increased demand, the Daily Racing Form has added editions, printing as many as 45 regional editions on Kentucky Derby day.

It has begun satellite transmission of its West Coast editions to a Seattle printing and distribution facility. A similar satellite relay system is planned to link East Coast operations between Hightstown, N.J., and Pompano Beach, Fla., for publication of an all-Florida edition.

ABC figures show net paid circulation for 1985 at 183,559 on Saturday, 124,787 on Monday, and 107,163 each Tuesday through Friday. These figures are about 1% lower than 1984 levels.

Triangle Publications also operates a magazine distribution network that circulates five titles in addition to the company's own publications.

Tribune Co., Chicago, experienced strong gains in 1985 influenced by returns from its record-breaking acquisition of KTLA-TV, Los Angeles, and by the financial performance of its leading newspaper sector, even though the company's two big-city dailies posted circulation declines.

The Chicago-based company also sold the Los Angeles Daily News and began to divest all its cable properties. Gross proceeds from the disposition of the Daily News and 15 cable systems was $506.5 million.

Media revenues ranked Tribune the ninth largest media company in 1985. Those revenues represent nearly 90% of the corporate total, and rose 9% in 1985, compared with an over-all revenue growth of 8%. The only nonmedia operations are newsprint and forest products division and the Chicago Cubs baseball team. Over-all operating profits were $241.4 million, a 28% gain.

The $510 million KTLA purchase from Golden West Television made Tribune Co. the nation's fourth largest broadcaster, behind the three networks, by giving the company an entree to 18.6% of U.S. tv households. But it also required Tribune to divest the Los Angeles Daily News and several cable tv systems to comply with FCC cross-ownership rules.

While analysts believed Tribune Co. overpaid by as much as $100 million for the plum tv station, the company also reaped surprising rewards from its divestitures. The Daily News, sold to Jack Kent Cooke for $176 million in December, was a four-day-a-week community shopper when the company bought it for $24 million in 1973. It now is a paid daily with a circulation of 150,000.

Required sales of two Los Angeles-area cable systems led to the eventual sale of the company's entire cable operation amid disappointing returns from its investment. So far, the sale of eight systems to Jones Intercable, Denver, has been completed for $195 million. Others are pending.

The newspaper publishing segment, which makes Tribune Co. the fourth-largest newspaper publisher in the U.S., recorded a 6.5% gain in revenues from 1984 and operating profits of $175 million, up 21%.

While nonunion dailies in Fort Lauderdale and Orlando, Fla., remain profitable, the company has faced troubling situations in large markets. A year-old strike by 1,000 unionized production workers at the flagship Chicago Tribune continues, despite at least symbolic attempts to reconcile disagreements between management and staff.

Tribune management says automation has made high unionized staffing levels unnecessary, and it has sought to retrain workers for other departments. Union members believe such redirection of labor will cost them job seniority and have picketed the Tribune since July, 1985.

Tribune officials used the occasion of the strike last August to implement a planned phaseout of its late-afternoon Green Streak edition, which it replaced with a revamped national edition circulated primarily via new satellite printing sites near St. Louis and Madison, Wis. It later increased distribution of that edition at Chicago-area newsstands.

New sections introduced last year include three zoned tabloids: a revamped "Style" fashion and life-style section, a new Monday business tab and "Friday," a successful weekend entertainment vehicle zoned to nine regions of the metropolitan area.

Average daily Tribune circulation for the six months ended March 31, 1986, was 760,031, down 2%, which for the first time put it below the Washington Post rankings. Sunday circulation was 1,163,083, down 0.2% from the year-earlier period.

Meanwhile, the Daily News in New York has faced intensified competition from Times Mirror Co.'s Long Island, N.Y., Newsday, whose expansion into Manhattan has given it a 100,000-circulation foothold.

The Daily News is answering that challenge with improved tv and sports coverage, a new "Money Talks" business section and a Sunday "City Lights" entertainment tab.

Still, the paper lost more than 100,000 daily sales in the six-month average ended March 31, yet remained the largest-circulation U.S. daily newspaper. Its daily circulation was 1,275,268, an 8.3% loss, while Sunday circulation dropped 5.4%, to 1,676,858.

Despite the high visibility of the New York and Chicago properties, Florida has proved the most lucrative market for the Tribune Co., with the Fort Lauderdale News and Sun-Sentinel and the Orlando Sentinel now contributing more than half of the company's newspaper operating profits. Both papers are in noncompetitive environments. Neither is unionized.

Circulation for the Orlando Sentinel for the six-month period ended March 31 averaged 263,865, up 7.6%, while Sunday circulation was up 6.9%, to 330,251. The morning Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel posted a 22% daily gain, to 155,197, while the evening News lost 8%, dropping to 76,992. Combined Sunday circulation was 288,916, a 7.9% gain.

In broadcasting, the KTLA purchase enabled Tribune to reach tv households in the top three markets as well as Atlanta, Denver and New Orleans. It thus is able to guarantee program placement for shows its Tribune Entertainment subsidiary jointly produces and distributes. The trend has proved popular among other station owners, too, at a time when more stations compete for fewer syndicated programs.

Broadcast (tv and radio) revenues were paced by a record $231 million from tv, up 17%. Radio added $42 million, up 9%. Although WPIX, New York, was tv's largest contributor, company officials say KTLA may quickly replace it. Four of the six tv stations are the top-rated independents in their markets, and the company says Chicago's WGN (am) is the top-billing radio station in the country. The five-station radio group also posted record revenues 9% higher than in 1984; gains made by WGN more than offset losses at some other stations. Operating profit for the entire broadcasting, entertainment and cable division (which includes the Chicago Cubs baseball team) increased 11%, to $45.7 million.

Tribune Entertainment Co., formed in 1982, lost the hosts of its founding program—"At the Movies"—when Roger Ebert and Tribune film critic Gene Siskel left in 1986 to launch a new movie-review program for Walt Disney Co.'s Buena Vista Television. (That move quickly led to a "realignment" of Mr. Siskel's role as the newspaper's chief film critic). The tv program will continue in the 1986-87 season with new hosts Bill Harris and Rex Reed. The group had total revenues of $58.6 million, up 29%.

Most Tribune Entertainment projects are joint ventures with program producers, with Tribune handling distribution and barter ad sales. Among those projects are "Soul Train," "Dempsey & Makepeace," "Tales from the Darkside" and the animated "G.I. Joe."

The cable business, once thought to be a major area of expansion for the company, has drained profits through expensive capital spending and waning enthusiasm from would-be cable subscribers. Tribune Co. has decided to concentrate its resources on areas of proven success, and system sales either completed or pending have removed the company from the cable arena.

Turner Broadcasting System, Atlanta, was left reeling from its thwarted takeover of CBS Inc. in 1985, as profits dropped 88.5% for the year. Profit in 1986 will further be influenced by Turner's ability to recoup its investment in MGM/UA Entertainment, which TBS acquired in March, 1986, for $1.5 billion.

TBS, which ran up $16.3 million in expenses in its $5.4 billion bid to buy CBS before CBS began buying back 20% of its stock, is beginning to lessen the load of its subsequent acquisition of MGM/UA with its agreement in early June, 1986, to sell certain assets to Lorimar-Telepiciures Inc. and United Artists Corp. for $490 million.

MGM/UA Entertainment was purchased to provide movie classics from MGM's film library as programing for the company's WTBS superstation. TBS subsequently sold the United Artists portion of the purchase to UA majority stockholder Kirk Kerkorian for $480 million.

TBS was forced to pay Rainbow Programming Enterprises, Woodbury, N.Y., $17.5 million as its share of a $50 million judgment brought against TBS and MGM/UA. Rainbow sued the two claiming it had an agreement for certain rights to the film library of the Culver City, Cal.-based MGM studio.

In agreements announced in June, 1986, TBS agreed to sell MGM's 44-acre real estate holding to Lorimar-Telepictures for $190 million, and sell the film and tv production business, home video company, its half-interest in MGM/UA distribution company and the MGM logotype to United Artists Corp. for $300 million in cash.

TBS ended up paying about $1.2 billion for the film library minus these asset sales. The library generates about $100 million annually in cash flow. Also TBS is considering the sale of a half-interest in Cable News Network to finance the MGM/UA acquisition. During 1985, TBS courted suitors including Rupert Murdoch's News America, Time Inc. and NBC for the cable news service. Talks with the latter for an estimated $200 million to $300 million buy-in fell apart in late November because of TBS' refusal to relinquish editorial control to NBC.

Denver-based multiple system operator Tele-Communications Inc. also has offered to purchase an undetermined portion, but TBS' interest in finding a CNN buyer has begun to wane. TCI, however, is talking with TBS regarding the launch of a new "flagship" basic cable channel that may use WTBS as a base or utilize MGM studios to produce made-for-cable programing.

Media revenues at TBS, which account for 90% of company revenues, ranked TBS as the nation's 34th largest media company in 1985. The big contributor is WTBS, the company's superstation, accounting for 33% of revenues. WTBS increased subscribers to 36 million households, up 9% from 1984. WTBS is available in 87% of U.S. cable homes and 42% of U.S. tv homes. Advertising revenues rose to $172.8 million, up 10.6% from 1984.

An anticipated revenue producer is WTBS' July transmission of the Goodwill Games, an international sports competition arranged with Moscow's Soyuzsport and Gosteleradio. But so far the coverage has attracted little advertiser interest. Sponsorships, originally intended for sale at $6 million, shrunk to $1.4 million, with only three major sponsorships—Pepsi-Cola, Mars Inc.'s Snickers bar and Stroh's beer—so far. TBS spent $7.9 million through last December on the games, which are to be broadcast from the U.S. in 1990. The 1986 games also will be syndicated.

Bolstered by a per subscriber fee to cable operators (25 cents for systems not carrying WTBS, or 18 cents per subscriber for systems carrying all three TBS services), cable interests CNN and CNN Headline News contributed a combined 56% of TBS revenue in 1985. CNN reached 33.5 million households, up 6.7% from the previous year, representing 81% of U.S. cable homes and 39% of U.S. tv homes. CNN, available in Australia, Canada and Japan as well as the U.S., also broadened its base to include Western Europe in October. CNN generated $56.5 million in advertising revenues, up 23.3%.

CNN Headline News widened its subscriber base to 18 million from 15.3 million, representing exposure to 42% of U.S. cable homes and 21% of U.S. tv homes. CNN Headline also more than doubled its flagging advertising revenues in 1985 to $13.7 million from $6.4 million. Both CNN and CNN Headline News plan to hike the fee per subscriber next January. In 1985, the company also switched primary satellites to Galaxy I from SATCOM III-R for each of its three services.

Operating profit for the cable segment did an about-face in 1985, posting an $18.8 million gain compared with a $15.3 million loss the prior year. Operating profit for the combined CNN and CNN Headline News was in the black for the first time in TBS history, with $20,753 compared with a $13,000 loss the prior year. Broadcasting segment operating profit, however, fell 15.4% to $55.7 million.

In nonmedia properties, TBS maintains a 96% interest in the Atlanta Hawks professional basketball team; wholly owns the Atlanta Braves professional baseball team through TBS subsidiary Atlanta National League Baseball Club, and operates minor league farm teams in Richmond, Va.; Greenville, S.C., and Sumter, S.C. The Atlanta Braves accounted for 6% of the company's revenue in 1985. Revenues for the total professional sports segment were $23.4 million, down 3.7%.

In May, 1985, TBS acquired for $1.8 million a 75% interest in Omni Ventures, a real estate and hotel operator in Atlanta. The property, which accounted for 2% of company revenues, includes the Omni International office building into which TBS will move its corporate offices as well as CNN and CNN Headline News operations.

United Cable Television Corp. maintained its watch for acquisitions in 1985, grabbing the Hartford franchise and others to push its total subscriber count up 18.4% to 838,000 and increase total revenues 20%, all from cable.

In the first three quarters of fiscal 1986, ended May 31, Denver-based United is continuing its growth pace of 1985 with revenues of $143.9 million, up 15% from the similar period in 1985. The gains came as revenues flowed from several systems acquired in 1984 and 1985. Income from new systems contributed 9% of the revenue increase during the period. The remaining 6% came from increases in basic subscribers in existing systems and rate increases.

Net earnings during the nine months dropped 13.7% to $6.8 million because of the cost of financing the purchase of the Hartford system, says the company, ranked as the 67th largest media company in the nation.

Basic subscribers from consolidated properties on Feb. 28, 1986, numbered 838,000, up from 708,000 a year earlier. That number rises to 999,000 when including subscribers in the company's managed limited partnerships, up from 796,000 for the same period the prior year.

United, with 41 systems in 17 states and ranking as the fifth fastest growing major multiple system operator in basic subscribers and fourth fastest in homes passed, acquired the Hartford, Conn., system, numbering 60,000 subscribers from Times Mirror Cable Television for $61.5 million. The deal, consummated in October, was its biggest for the fiscal year.

Tele-Communications Inc., Denver, also sold two mature systems to United. One covered Golden, Lakewood and Jefferson County, Colo., and La Vista, Neb., and totaled 30,000 subscribers. The deal was completed in August, 1984. The other, concluded in April, 1985, was in the Tulsa, Okla., suburban area with 11,500 subscribers.

United exchanged stock for the TCI systems in Oklahoma. TCI has been a heavy investor in United's common stock; it now owns more than 3 million shares, or about 24%. In its SEC filing, TCI says its purchase of United stock "has been and continues to be for investment purposes," and TCI is bound by a stand-still agreement not to influence United's operating or financial policies. Nevertheless, some analysts speculate that TCI is bringing United under its umbrella.

During 1985, United completed construction on systems in Oakland County, Mich.; Scottsdale, Ariz.; Alameda, Cal., and part of Los Angeles County, Cal. During the fall, United began construction on two major systems covering 300,000 homes in Baltimore, Md., and 170,000 homes in East San Fernando Valley, Cal.

Finding financing for the East Valley system brought United some tense moments during 1985. United's franchise in the area, which includes Van Nuys, Studio City and North Hollywood, was set to expire January, 1987, and the company told the Los Angeles Board of Telecommunications it could not complete its limited-partner financing package for the $66 million system if it didn't get a 10-year extension. The city balked because United had missed construction deadlines. But at the last minute the city agreed to extend the franchise. The financing was completed and certified and construction continues, although United still faces fines over the missed deadlines.

United is looking at other sources of income besides subscriber growth. In April, 1985, it launched a pay-per-view experiment in its system in Oakland County, Mich. For about $5 for one showing, subscribers were able to view films about six months before they reached the premium cable services. United found that during the experiment, the average subscriber spent an extra $7.50 a month.

United has begun to roll out pay-per-view systemwide. The first systems—those already having addressable equipment—were to receive the "First View Theater" package by June, 1986. The company has pledged to replace all nonaddressable equipment within three years, enabling the ppv service to be delivered to United's entire subscribership. United expects ppv to generate about $2 million in revenue during its first year.

United also has been taking full advantage of advertising revenues. United Cable of Colorado, which serves the Denver suburbs, set up an advertising interconnect in October with Mile Hi Cablevision, which operates in Denver proper. United gleaned $1.2 million in gross ad revenues during fiscal 1985 from the Denver suburban system, and officials expected profits to climb with the interconnect. Meanwhile, United's system in Tulsa reported $2 million in advertising revenues for fiscal 1985.

United has decided to share its business success, establishing in December, 1985, United Cable Advertising Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary created to help cable systems—affiliated with United or other msos—in their ad sales efforts. In some systems, United will work as the local sales rep, and in others it will manage the local department. United launched the subsidiary in its systems in Tyler, Tex., and Scottsdale, Ariz., and anticipated operating in more than 10 systems by the end of 1986.

United appointed former vp-finance William J. Elsner as senior vp-cfo. David J. Leonard became vp-operations, and Donald J. Masters was named vp-general counsel. Former director of marketing Nimrod J. Kovacs became vp-marketing and programing, replacing Charles Townsend, who in March became president of Colony Communications of Providence, R.I.

U.S. News & World Report, Washington, continues to undergo dramatic changes more than a year after Mort Zuckerman, a real estate developer, purchased the employe-owned magazine, but those changes, including redesigning the magazine, slashing subscription prices and shuffling editorial and business staff, have yet to bear fruit.

Mr. Zuckerman's media holdings under the corporate banner, U.S. News & World Report, lost ground in 1985, as revenue from U.S. News and the Atlantic dropped 3.8% to an estimated $144.8 million, ranking the company as the 75th largest media company.

Ad pages at U.S. News in 1985 rose 1.2% to 1,779, while competitors' ad pages fell. Advertising revenue, however, rose only 1.1% to $102.6 million. For the first quarter of 1986, U.S. News' ad pages were off 6%, but revenue increased 3.2% over the first quarter of 1985.

Most recently the magazine announced a 6% increase in circulation for the first quarter of 1986. Dick Thompson, publisher for the past year, says he expects to deliver a 10% circulation bonus on the rate base of 2.05 million for the rest of the year, but will not increase ad rates.

A cut in the subscription price last November to $29 from $41 also helped boost circulation. This year the magazine launched a $2 million-plus tv and print campaign targeting new readers. Dancer Fitzgerald Sample, New York, the agency selected last fall to replace Foote, Cone & Belding, New York, handles.

U.S. News unveiled a cleaner, more colorful look in its Dec. 30 issue. Harry Evans, editorial director, spent a year supervising the redesign. The magazine is now divided into sections, with more pages devoted to business and new features such as recommended movies, books and entertainment.

The magazine's executives hope the redesign will attract younger, wealthier readers, and it seems to be working. Readers' median age dropped to 41.9 years from 42.5, according to a Mediamark Research report for the six months ending in February. The median household income for the period increased to $38,096 from $35,057.

Mr. Zuckerman involves himself in the day-to-day editorial operations of the magazine. In April, 1985, two weeks after appointing Shelby Coffey III editor, Mr. Zuckerman named himself editor-in-chief. By January Mr. Coffey had left for the editorship at the Dallas Times Herald.

Mr. Zuckerman looked outside the magazine for a replacement, but after a three-month search, promoted David Gergen, managing editor, to the post. Mr. Gergen is formerly White House director of communications but has no journalism background.

Gary Fisketjon was named editorial director of U.S. News in mid-May, 1986, replacing Harold Evans, who remains editor-in-chief of the publication. Mr. Fisketjon was the editor at Random House who directed it into its Vintage Contemporary series.

Jim Glassman, exec vp of U.S. News and president of the Atlantic, also left earlier this year, to be replaced at U.S. News by Bill Harris, vp-consumer marketing since July. Mr. Harris was circulation director of Time Inc.'s magazine development group.

Bill Anderson, a partner at an energy consulting company, became Atlantic president in May. His experience includes stints as associate publisher for Science 82, Science 83 and the Saturday Evening Review.

Mr. Zuckerman is now moving to control expenses by consolidating Atlantic and U.S. News business operations, although the two magazines will be operated separately. In March, Fred Drasner, who was vice-chairman, president and ceo of U.S. News, added vice-chairman-ceo, the Atlantic, to his duties. Later this year the magazines will move business operations into shared quarters.

Other top spots filled in the past year include Jake Winebaum to vp-circulation from special assignments at Time Inc.'s magazine development group. He replaced Joe Aserno, who resigned. Another Time compatriot, Robin Johnson, in March became vp corporate development of U.S. News and vp-operations for the Atlantic.

Despite the first-quarter drop in ad pages, Mr. Thompson says he expects to show an increase for the year. In May he announced a special space commitment program for advertisers. Patterned after similar programs at Fortune and Forbes, it gives bonus pages to advertisers who commit to buying certain levels in 1986 and 1987. Mr. Thompson also this year increased circulation of the magazine's blue chip edition to 650,000 higher income households from 475,000.

U.S. News this year will offer special sections on small business, health and international travel.

Last year Mr. Thompson said he wanted to position U.S. News between the newsweeklies and the business magazines. Now he says, "What we would like advertisers to do is not niche us." The magazine carries about 37% advertising, a much lighter ratio than its competitors.

U.S. News last year discontinued the "U.S. News Washington Letter," a weekly newsletter with circulation of nearly 80,000. The company continues to publish "U.S. News Washington Business Report," which is a smaller newsletter. Revenue for 1985 is estimated at $2 million.

The Atlantic in 1985 had 579 pages, a 2% decline from 1984, but its ad revenue grew by 1.7% to $6.84 million. For the first quarter of 1986, the magazine joins the rest of the industry's slump, as ad revenues for the first quarter of 1986 dropped 14% to $1.35 million, while ad pages plummeted 18% to 108. Mr. Anderson's main task will be to boost advertising at the monthly general interest magazine.

Among nonmedia operations, Atlantic Monthly Press was sold in mid-May, 1986, to Carl Navarre Jr., a 34-year-old businessman and writer from Chattanooga, Tenn. Purchase price was not disclosed. He outbid Mondadori, the Italian publishing house, for the property. U.S. News also owns Publishers Service International, Carlstadt, N.J., which has estimated annual revenues of $20 million. The company sets type and graphic data for a number of publications.

Viacom International, New York, which moved aggressively into the cable network business in 1985 in buying the stock it did not already hold in MTV Networks and Showtime/The Movie Channel, spent the early part of 1986 fending off a takeover challenge by financier Carl Icahn.

Viacom appeared to have weathered the Icahn move by late May, buying him off in a deal comprised of $217 million in cash for 3.5 million shares he had accumulated. Viacom got assurance from Mr. Icahn that he would not purchase any additional stock during the next 11 years, but the price for such an assurance was dear—a stock purchase option guaranteeing a $65.40 to $72 per share price for six years and $10 million worth of commercial time on its cable, radio and broadcast tv outlet stations. Mr. Icahn had gained 16.9% of the stock.

Such "greenmailing" success could set up Viacom for target from other investors hungry for a company whose shares, for example, ranged from $62 in April to $70 May 9 when Mr. Icahn let his intentions be known. Before his takeover attempt, J.M.B. Realty, Chicago, acquired 13.5% of Viacom's stock, spurring takeover rumors although J.M.B. Realty said the accumulation was friendly. Warner Communications owns warrants to buy 10% of Viacom shares, and Lorimar-Telepictures Inc. has been mentioned as a potential takeover candidate.

During all this, Viacom, the nation's 29th largest media company, saw first-quarter revenues in 1986 leap a dramatic 159% to $212.6 million from the corresponding period a year earlier. Net earnings, however, fell 32% in the period to $4.2 million—a factor of higher interest expense and good-will amortization associated with the company's November, 1985, acquisition of the 50% of Showtime/The Movie Channel the company didn't own and the purchase of two-thirds of MTV Networks Inc. from Warner Communications and its subsidiary, Warner Amex (now Warner Cable). The remaining one-third, which was in the public's hand, was acquired in March, 1986.

In May, the company announced a two-for-one stock split, and a 16⅔% increase in its annual cash dividend. It also announced it has signed a definitive agreement to acquire Movielab, a postproduction facility with $5 million in revenues. The $14 million transaction was accomplished by a stock switch.

The company formed Viacom Networks to house its Cable Health Network, Showtime/The Movie Channel and MTV Networks along with Lifetime, the advertiser-supported cable tv network, owned by Viacom, Hearst Corp. and ABC Video Enterprises. Video Enterprises is now the company's second largest division with revenues of $86.5 million in 1985.

Viacom Cablevision, the 11th largest multiple system operator, paced the cable segment with $206.1 million, up 12.6%. Other media contributions come from broadcasting, up 18.7%. Only program distribution, with revenues of $66.5 million in 1985, up 8.7%, is not considered media for the purpose of this report.

Lifetime continued to lose money in 1985. Viacom suffered a $6.5 million loss from its equity in the venture. Losses in the first quarter of 1986 declined, in part because of a per-subscriber fee passed on to cable system operators that was initiated in January, 1986. A company spokesman says Lifetime is expected to turn the corner in late 1986 or early 1987.

In 1985, Lifetime began a redesign to further target its prime audience—upscale, working women with large disposable incomes—an audience particularly attractive to advertisers. Reacting to that redesign, billings from advertisers sales rose 30% last year. Several new programs are in development, and some syndicated tv series are ready to be aired. At yearend, Lifetime was carried by 2,700 cable systems reaching 24 million domestic households, a 12% increase in penetration over 1984. Paul Kagan Associates projected Lifetime's 1985 ad revenues at $26 million.

Subscribers for Showtime/The Movie Channel remained level in 1985—5.4 million for the former and 3.1 million for the latter. In November, Viewer's Choice was introduced as Showtime/The Movie Channel's third network. It offers feature films at a flat fee per viewing, specials and live concerts are slated to be added to the roster.

Increased marketing and promotion of all three networks are planned for 1986.

A spokesman says while 1985 was the year for original pay tv programming, 1986 will be the year for exclusivity. In addition to the five-year agreement Showtime/The Movie Channel has in place with Paramount Pictures, Viacom recently signed a pact with the Cannon Group, good through 1989.

Atlantic Releasing and Touchstone Films also have signed exclusivity pacts with Viacom. The latter studio produced the successful "Splash" and "Down and Out in Beverly Hills"; it is also producing a remake of Paul Newman's "The Hustler."

MTV Networks, which is comprised of MTV:Music Television, VH-1:Video Hits One, Nickelodeon and Nick at Nite, instituted some changes in 1985. According to A.C. Nielsen Co., MTV:Music Television reached 28.2 million subscribers as of March, 1986.

Nielsen's numbers are being discussed by Nielsen and MTV management; both agree that Nielsen's metered samples do not adequately reflect the composition of MTV's targeted audience of 12-to 34-year-olds.

The company says that last year MTV:Music Television generated the highest advertising revenue of any cable-originated basic network. Kagan Associates projected MTV:Music Television's 1985 revenues at $83 million.

An MTV spokesman says this year, as the network celebrates its fifth birthday, viewers can expect to see a continuation of out-of-studio events, more live concerts, more new videos and more syndicated programing along the lines of "The Monkees" revival. MTV has syndicated such programs as its "Top 20 Video Hit Countdown." Viacom also is discussing some MTV co-ventures with major studios for youth films along the lines of "Pretty in Pink."

The company also increased its ownership in Cable Health Network from minority to 80% by yearend, 1985. CHN had a pretax loss in 1985, but added to a pretax gain from Showtime/The Movie Channel produced about $9 million in pretax earnings at Viacom.

In broadcasting, WLTW (fm) was the No. 1 fm station in New York for ages 25 through 54, according to Arbitron figures. Viacom acquired Memphis am station WKDJ and changed it to WRVR, the same call letters as Viacom's fm station in that market. WMZQ-FM in Arlington, Va., got a companion am station. A Viacom spokesman says the fm station's country format has been so successful that the No. 2 country station changed its format.

Viacom agreed to buy KMOX-TV in St. Louis, a CBS affiliate, in late May. The company is paying CBS $122.5 million for the property. FCC approval is pending. And in a package from the Tribune Publishing Co. Viacom will acquire Puget Sound Cable and an fm station in Tacoma, Wash.

A company spokesman says the only field where Viacom doesn't enjoy a major stake is the motion picture studio industry.

In February, 1986, Viacom did acquire a 15% stake in Orion Pictures, but it will be a number of months before Viacom decides what action to pursue. Viacom had been talking to Ted Turner about purchasing 50% of MGM-UA Entertainment Co. before talks broke off and Mr. Turner sold major assets of the company to Lorimar-Telepictures.

The media composition at Warner Communications Inc. changed dramatically in 1985 as Warner bought out its partner in the nation's sixth largest cable system—Warner Cable Communications Inc.—and disposed of several major cable networks.

Media at New York-based Warner, the 35th largest media company, now consists of Warner Cable (formerly Warner Amex), with small contributions from DC Comics and Mad magazine.

Warner Cable, consisting of 101 cable systems in 21 states with a subscriber base of some 1.2 million, came under complete Warner ownership in early 1986 after Warner and American Express reached an agreement in August, 1985, to sell American Express' portion of the joint venture for $450 million.

Warner also got $510 million in cash, short-term notes and additional considerations on Nov. 12, 1985, from Viacom International for Warner's interest in Showtime/The Movie Channel Inc. (31%), Warner Amex's interest (19%) in the same cable network and Warner Amex's 66.1% share in MTV Networks Inc., once a subsidiary of Warner that went public in 1985. MTV operates MTV:Music Television, VH-1: Video Hits One and Nickelodeon.

Warner's net income for 1985, up dramatically to $195.3 million from a net loss of $586.1 million in 1984, reflects an aftertax gain of $86 million on the sale of the networks to Viacom. Operating income at Warner showed steady improvement to $160.2 million, up 6.5%.

Warner in 1985 continued to account for Warner Cable and its cable networks ownership percentage during the year by the equity method, meaning only income and not revenues were folded into Warner's results.

Treating MTV and S/TMC as discontinued operations in 1985, Warner Cable had total revenues of $295.9 million just for the cable side, down from $363.4 million in 1984, a figure also including the divested cable networks.

The comics books and Mad added another estimated $35 million in revenue, providing Warner with $330.3 million in total media revenues, or 15% of total revenues at Warner. Warner consists of filmed entertainment, recorded music/music publishing and publishing/related distribution. DC Comics sales were hurt during the year by weakness in newsstand sales, although specialty store sales picked up. Mad had a record year in subscription sales and performed well at newsstands, according to the company.

In other moves, shareholder equity in Warner increased 55% during the year to $525 million. The company's debt was reduced to $510 million from $840 million in 1984. Staff was pared in 1985—corporate overhead fell 40% —and interest expense dropped 31%.

Warner continued its strong financial growth in the first quarter of 1986. Net income of $30 million represented a 42% gain over the first quarter of 1985. Total revenues in the quarter were $688 million, up 22.4%. Part of that growth came from the cable and broadcasting division: $3.5 million in operating earnings compared with a $4.4 million loss in the first quarter of 1985.

The quarterly results also include Warner's 42.5% share of the income from Chris-Craft subsidiary BHC Inc. Chris-Craft, which owns about 30% of Warner's voting stock, apparently settled its differences with Warner and dropped its plans for a threatened proxy fight.

During 1985, Warner Cable sold its Dallas franchise to Heritage Communications for $110 million. The New York franchise's first subscriber went on-line in December; 1991 is the target year for the system's completion and it is expected to pass 500,000 homes. Milwaukee, another newly won franchise, is being financed through a limited partnership, and Warner Amex has a 35% interest. The system is expected to be complete by the third quarter of 1986 and will pass more than 250,000 homes.

Warner showed strong gains during the year from its filmed entertainment division (Warner Bros.) with operating income of $160.2 million on revenues of $1.2 billion; recorded music and music publishing division with operating income of $112.7 million on revenue of $912.3 million, and publishing and related distribution, the only group with a decline in income. Operating income dropped 14.5% to $13.7 million on revenues of $121.7 million, up 5%.

Warner Cable in April, 1986, named James L. Gray president-coo. A 12-year veteran of Warner Cable, he moved up from group senior vp and president of its national division at Dublin, O. He succeeds Drew Lewis, who resigned as chairman-ceo on April 1. John Fowler, executive vp, and Jack Messman, executive vp-cfo, resigned with Mr. Gray's appointment. They had been considered candidates to replace Mr. Lewis. John Charlton, senior vp, programing, marketing and sales, turned in his resignation at the same time.

Mr. Gray's real test will come in 1987 when the FCC lifts its restrictions on the rate increases cable operators can make. Decisions on the prices the market will bear, reduced or increased services and other factors will be critical not only for Mr. Gray and Warner Cable, but also for other multiple system operators.

Washington Post Co. is continuing its strategy to diversify into other types of businesses and invest in other media companies with the Jan. 3, 1986, acquisition of the 53-system cable division of Capital Cities Communications.

The company, ranked the 15th largest media company, continues to generate profits from the meat of its business, newspapers and magazines.

In 1986, the company's earnings will be diluted because of the $350 million Capital Cities cable tv purchase. The Post Co. set up a new division, Post-Newsweek Cable, to oversee the operations. The systems serve 360,000 subscribers in the Midwest, South and West. Howard E. Wall is president of the new division; he had been vp-chief account officer, Post Co.

The Post says it will invest $30 million over the next two to three years to upgrade the systems. Richard Simmons, Post Co. president, says that in the first quarter the cable systems generated about $20 million. The Post continues to own portions of four regional cable SportsChannels.

Revenues in the newspaper division rose 8% in 1985. The Washington Post, which dominates the division, had a 4% increase in advertising volume to 5.5 million ins., while ad revenue grew 9% to $426.7 million. The newspaper in 1986 hiked its ad rates by 6.5% and saw its advertising inches in the first quarter of 1986 fall 1% from the year-earlier period. Mr. Simmons, however, believes the newspaper will end 1986 ahead of last year.

The Post's circulation surged ahead this year, making it the seventh largest newspaper for the six months ended March 31, 1986, according to ABC. The Post had a 1.3% daily gain, to 781,371, putting it ahead of the Chicago Tribune. On Sunday, the Tribune still leads. But the Post's Sunday circulation rose 2.4% to 1,065,782.

The Post continues its strong penetration in the Washington market, reaching 54% of the households during the week and 73% on Sunday.

This year the Post is devoting efforts to an expensive redesign of its Sunday magazine supplement. The new format, which debuts in September, is small and glossy, with full-color capability. The magazine will nearly double its editorial staff. The sales staff already has received a major commitment from Sears to advertise its designer lines. The Post wants to attract more upscale retailers and national advertisers to the magazine.

Last year, the Post added the weekly tabloid supplement, Health, which has attracted image advertising from drugstore and grocery chains that already use the newspaper for product advertising.

In 1985 the Post broke its first tv image campaign, hoping scenes of Washington would sway younger readers to pick up the paper. The newspaper this year is putting its ad budget behind its Sunday magazine and may break a consumer campaign in the fall. Needham Harper Worldwide, Washington, handles.

The Herald, Everett, Wash., was in the black in 1985, for the first time since 1980. "It was in the black not a material amount," says Mr. Simmons, who expects the Herald to continue turning a small profit. In 1985, ad inches grew 15% to 2 million.

The Washington Post National Weekly, a spinoff started in 1983, reached a circulation of 50,000, up 5.5% from 1984. Ad pages, however, "haven't attracted the level we expected we would have," Mr. Simmons says. Circulation, however, is larger than expected.

Newsweek saw the most changes in the past year. Its over-all revenue decreased 2% to $326 million in 1985, and it again led the newsweeklies in ad pages with 2,714 pages, according to Publishers Information Bureau. However, total pages decreased 9.8%, compared with competitor Time's 4.3% drop to 2,695 pages. Total ad revenues were $274.1 million for both 1985 and 1984 at Newsweek. Operating income rose 32% to $29 million in 1985. For the first quarter of 1986, Newsweek revenue rose 7%, while domestic ad pages were flat.

The magazine spent $1 million on its redesign unveiled in November. Since the redesign, Mr. Simmons says, newsstand sales increased 20%. Over-all ad revenues remain down in the first quarter, but Mr. Simmons predicts, "When the year is over, I'll expect we'll lead everyone again."

Last July Newsweek announced it would sell ads based on audience rather than circulation. It's actually using both figures in its sales presentations, offering an audience of 16,887,000 readers and a circulation base of 3.05 million. Mr. Simmons says it will "take a while for advertisers to evaluate our new service."

Newsweek in January launched Newsweek Japan, a Japanese-language edition that is the magazine's first foreign-language edition. The magazine has a circulation of 120,000. The Japanese edition comes a year after Newsweek began a joint publishing venture with the Bulletin, the leading Australian newsweekly.

Newsweek this spring entered a joint venture with American Express, producing Travel & Leisure Asia, a monthly magazine with a circulation of 100,000. Newsweek is responsible for selling advertising.

In personnel moves, Gerard Smith last July was promoted to publisher of Newsweek, from associate publisher and senior vp. Before coming to the magazine two years ago, he was a senior vp and managing director, Ogilvy & Mather, Los Angeles. Stephen Smith became executive editor in January, from acting assistant managing editor, Time.

Newsweek has been test marketing "Newsweek on Health," a quarterly compilation of recent Newsweek articles on health and fitness.

The International Herald Tribune, Paris, one-third owned by the Post, this year began printing in Miami. The "Americas" edition has a 15,000 circulation in the Caribbean, North

The Post's four tv stations saw operating income rise 14% to $58 million in 1985. Its Detroit, Hartford, Conn., and Jacksonville, Fla., stations each rank first in their markets; the Miami station is tied for first. In the first quarter of 1986, revenue rose 8%.

The Post last year pumped $71 million into a 20% stake in Cowles Media Co., a family-owned company that owns the Minneapolis Star & Tribune. Mr. Simmons says no further investment in Cowles is planned.

A sale to Times Mirror Co. of National Journal Co., another media company in which the Post has a 20% share, was pending at press time.

In nonmedia, the Post last year sold its cellular interests in the Northwest and will focus on the three systems in which it has a substantial interest. Its Washington-Baltimore cellular system, in which it has a 20% interest, will be profitable this year, Mr. Simmons says. The Post also has a 60% share in a Miami system, which may become operational this year. And it retains an 18% share in Detroit.

In late 1984, the Post purchased Stanley H. Kaplan Educational Centers. It also owns an electronic database publisher, Legi-Slate.

Westinghouse Electric Corp., Pittsburgh, has exited the cable market in 1986 as a multiple system operator while becoming more involved on the television media side.

The 14th largest media company based on media revenues reached an agreement earlier this year to sell Group W, the country's third largest multiple system operator with 2.1 million basic subscribers. A consortium of companies is paying $2.1 billion for the mso.

Westinghouse is seeking to purchase KHJ-TV in Los Angeles from RKO General. The company agreed to the purchase in January, costing an estimated $313 million, but a federal judge subsequently ruled against the transfer of ownership of the station.

gain ownership as soon as licensing problems are cleared up with the FCC.

Not included in the Group W sale are the cable systems Group W is building in the Chicago area. They will be completed and sold separately. The Group W sale is set for completion at midyear.

Westinghouse says it should realize $1.6 billion and book about $500 million from the sale of the cable company that accounted for about $535 million in revenues and slightly less than $34.7 million in operating profits.

The cable sale will not affect Westinghouse's operation of Home Team Sports pay-cable station, which has about 300,000 subscribers. Neither will it affect the marketing and distribution of the Oklahoma Publishing Co.'s 24.6 million-subscriber Nashville Network handled by Group W Satellite Communications.

The media portion of Westinghouse's Broadcasting & Cable segment generated $1 billion in revenues and an estimated $129.7 million in operating profits during 1985. These totals do not include Group W Productions, a program production company, and the only nonmedia activity of this business segment at Westinghouse.

Group W Productions, which produces "PM Magazine," "Hour Magazine," "Newsfeed Network," "He-Man and Masters of the Universe," "She-Ra: Princess of Power," "Every Second Counts," "Fat Albert and the Cosby Kids" and "Music of Your Life," generated an estimated $70 million in revenue and $9.02 million in operating profits.

Total revenues for Westinghouse Broadcasting & Cable for 1985 were $1.07 billion, up 8.6% from the $985 million in 1984, and operating profits totaled $138.7 million, up nearly 95% from the previous year.

At the same time, capital expenditures by the division have fallen sharply since 1983 when it spent $290 million. In 1984, it spent $234 million, or 19.3% less, and in 1985, it spent $155 million, down 33.8%.

Over-all, Westinghouse Electric Corp. reported revenues for 1985 up 4% to $10.7 billion and operating profits up 21.7% to $742.1 million. Net income rose 13% to $605.3 million.

Group W Cable will go to a group made up of Tele-Communications Inc., Time Inc. subsidiary American Television & Communications, Comcast Communications, Daniels Associates and Century Southwest Communications Corp.

Despite the apparently high price tag, analysts say the $1,050-per-subscriber sale actually may have been discounted because if the cable system had been broken into components and sold separately, those separate units would have brought in more money.

The sale was made even though Westinghouse was relatively happy with the cable system's performance in contributing to the 95% rise in operating profits Westinghouse Broadcasting & Cable experienced for the year. Group W Cable would contribute about $286.2 million in revenues to the company's performance in 1986.

Westinghouse says the sale was made because "the properties' true value was not and would not be fully reflected in the price of Westinghouse stock."

Shortly after the sale, Westinghouse

He closed the letter saying, "in an unprecedented display of behavioral flexibility" he had switched allegiance from an unnamed soft drink to Cherry Coke, heretofore the official Broadcasting Cable president Daniel Ritchie said the decision, "really had nothing to do with the cable business, oddly enough, but it has to do with the stock market and valuation."

What was happening, he said, was that Westinghouse was growing undervalued and thus becoming a potential takeover target. In conjunction with the sale of the cable group, the company announced plans to buy back 25 million of its stock shares, paying for that with the proceeds of the sale.

Such a move increases the price of the stock and generally makes a takeover more difficult by putting that much more stock in the company's direct control.

"The differential between the stock market value and the underlying asset value of Westinghouse was becoming so great that it was becoming an uncomfortable situation," Mr. Ritchie said. Yet the divestiture of its cable operations did not signal a move out of broadcasting for Westinghouse.

Upon the close of this sale later this year, says Westinghouse chairman Douglas D. Danforth, the company intends to complete an extensive strategic restructuring of its businesses focusing on what the company perceives as key growth areas. "One such growth area is broadcasting, where Westinghouse has, from the birth of the industry, been a leading factor," he says.

In January, the company signed a definitive agreement to buy KHJ-TV in Los Angeles, the country's second largest market, from RKO General. However, late in April federal administrative law judge Edward J. Kuhlmann rejected the sale. In a strongly worded ruling, Mr. Kuhlmann said the sale would be "detrimental to the public interest."

The sale was part of a complex effort to allow RKO to sell the station by paying off a separate group called Fidelity Television, which had challenged its license. Fidelity consists of a number of prominent Southern California investors, among them the late Donna Reed.

The FCC has battled RKO over the company's qualifications to hold broadcast licenses. It ruled that RKO cannot dispose of its interest in KHJ-TV until the issue of its qualifications has been settled.

Linda Stern, a Westinghouse spokeswoman, says the ruling was not totally unexpected and the company's position is to take whatever steps it can to bring about a faster settlement, which it believes would be more beneficial to the public and all parties. The RKO-Fidelity litigation has been going on for nearly two decades, she says.

She says many lawyers agree that the FCC, particularly in light of new legislation expanding its powers, can take such a case and it was a "fair bet" the FCC would overrule the judge's recommendation.

The Westinghouse agreement requires an FCC order substantially approving the deal by Jan. 31, 1987, and final FCC approval by July 31, 1988. If neither of those deadlines is met, any party can cancel the agreement.

In other radio property buys, Westinghouse Broadcasting & Cable bought radio stations KMEO (am, fm) in Phoenix, Ariz., and sold WIND radio in Chicago. Its Group W Radio Inc. is buying KEZW in Denver for between $1.5 million and $2 million.

Nets outdistance tv advertisers

The networks spent the most ad dollars promoting themselves among tv segment advertisers listed by LNA, a service that monitors national advertising in seven media. No. 1 was CBS at $31.8 million, followed by ABC Tv Network, $29.8 million; NBC Tv Network, $27.9 million; Television Program Enterprises, $3.4 million; GenCorp's KHJ-TV (L.A.), $1.9 million; Tribune Co.'s KTLA (L.A.), $1.2 million; AMBA Marketing Systems's KCOP-TV (L.A.), $988,000; Lexington Broadcasting Tv Programing, $809,000; WABC-TV (N.Y.),

Winston Network, an out-of-home media company, is compensating for an industrywide reduction in spending by tobacco companies by directing its sales tactics at nontraditional outdoor advertisers and expanding its outdoor capabilities by developing telephone poster coverage in New York.

Ranked the 92nd largest media company, the privately held concern's current volume compares with sales of only $5 million in 1976, says Marc Winston, president. Mr. Winston, 40, took over in 1978 as president from his father, Irwin, 75, now chairman.

Winston Network, based in New York, is the fourth or fifth largest competitor in the $1.5 billion out-of-home media industry. In total revenues, Winston follows Foster & Kleiser, Gannett Outdoor, 3M National Advertising, in that order, and perhaps privately held Naegele.

Unlike many out-of-home companies, Winston Network has a full range of out-of-home media, such as painted bulletins, 30-sheet posters, eight-sheet posters and smaller media. Its production formats in 30 locations nationwide covering 60 markets include 25,000 commuter posters, 11,000 eight-sheet posters, 1,250 30-sheet panels and 250 painted bulletins.

Operations also include posters and interior cards on 20,000 buses, 2,000 taxis and 500 bus shelters. In 1986, the company began adding 4,000 telephone posters in New York on a 10-year permit.

Winston Network provides analytical tools to help advertisers select combinations of out-of-home media. Its MAPPING system (Marketing Analysis of Predictable Patterns of Intra-Neighborhood Geo-demographics) helps pinpoint market segments based on syndicated information and other sources.

MAPPING generates a rating index based on known buying habits, and a computer plotter creates a block-by-block map of each target group in a market. Coupled with information on transportation patterns, advertisers are able to fine-tune media plans.

Winston Network's MAPPING system and its diverse media options are helping the company target potential advertisers in the package goods, retail and healthcare categories, Mr. Winston says. Falling revenues from tobacco and liquor companies in the past few years have forced out-of-home media companies to become more aggressive, he says.

"This industry has gotten so fat on cigaret and liquor [advertising] that it has forgotten how to sell," he says. Winston Network gained about 25% of in 1986. Media companies accounted for about 19% of 1985 sales. Entertainment and package goods categories accounted for 5% to 6% each, with the latter being a growth category, he says.

Acquisitions have played a role in Winston Network's ability to attract new advertisers. In February, 1985, Winston Network acquired Independent Outdoor for an undisclosed sum, one of the nation's largest eight-sheet networks with 6,500 posters throughout Southern California.

The acquisition was important because eight-sheets provide access to minority groups and other segmented markets in urban areas, Mr. Winston says. And because urban zoning laws are making it more difficult to erect bulletins and 30-sheet sizes, eight-sheets increasingly are viable options. Winston Network is plowing 35% to 40% of its annual revenues into building eight-sheet and other size poster plants in all of its markets.

Another factor favoring eight-sheet and other posters is that media combinations are needed for general coverage and segmented campaigns in all markets. An example is Los Angeles, out-of-home's most competitive market, where Winston Network is a niche player with about $15 million in bus fleet and eight-sheet revenues in 1985, compared with Foster & Kleiser's and Gannett's estimated $45 million each in 1985 revenues from 30-sheet and painted bulletins.

Winston Network is stronger in other markets, such as New York, where it dominates with about $30 million in 1985 revenues from 25,000 posters. Chicago is its third biggest market with about $7 million in commuter, bus fleet and terminal advertising, followed by San Francisco and Washington, with $5 million to $6 million each in 1985 revenues.

Winston Network also is known as an innovator among out-of-home media companies. One example is its "Streetfare Journal," introduced in seven cities early in 1985, covering themed topics such as weddings, swimsuits and the arts. "Streetfare Journal" entices commuters to read bus cards.

Winston Network also reorganized its management team in fall, 1985, naming three senior vps to oversee three new regions, including: Don Foley, West; John Mikovich, Midwest, and Burt Miller, East. Other top management appointments include Craig Heard senior vp-general manager; Angelo Schifano, senior vp-outdoor advertising, and Larry Silverman, vp-marketing.

With the financial success and growing sophistication of Winston Network, Mr. Winston says his next goal is to make it a diversified media company.

"We will be looking at radio and possibly tv and newspapers to eventually [follow the example of Metromedia chairman] John Kluge or Carl Eller," Mr. Winston says. "We understand media and marketing."

Ziff Communications Co., New York, which devoted itself to divestitures rather than acquisitions the past few years, scored one of the few successful acquisitions in the past few years with its purchase of Interactive Market Systems in 1985, the first full year of operations.

PC Week is among six computer magazines and electronic information service subscriptions comprising media at Ziff, the nation's 80th largest media company.

The company's six computer magazines netted $97.8 million in gross advertising revenues, with the largest gains (260%) and greatest number of total advertising revenues ($36.5 million), coming from PC Week, according to Sheila Clarke, vp-marketing at Adscope Inc., Goldendale, Wash.

Ziff took a respite this year from its reductionist tendencies. Several years ago, company revenues hovered near $500 million. But it since has sold its tv stations for $100 million, 24 consumer and trade publications for a combined price of $712.5 million, folding or sold computer magazines, and scaled back its electronic-information offerings. Owner of the closely held, family-owned company, William Ziff, has been quoted: "We've reached the end of the line. There will be no additional sales of properties," a company spokesperson says.

Ziff continues to look into new ventures, but "nothing is imminent," says Baird Davis, vp-production, purchasing and circulation at Ziff Communications. Last November, the Wall Street Journal reported Mr. Ziff plans to expand the company, though no direction or activities were cited.

The current scaled-down version of Ziff Communications consists of six computer publications in both the consumer and trade areas, a real estate publication that caters to affluent markets, a publishing subsidiary that puts out college directories for various schools and five electronic information services.

The five services fall under the Ziff-Davis Technical Information Unit. Total subscriber count for all five is 4,744.

Ziff folded Creative Computing, a monthly consumer magazine, with its December, 1985, issue, apparently as a result of segmentation and a heavier business orientation in the microcomputer market. Creative Computing, with a circulation of 375,000, had addressed those interested in computer applications in various areas, such as art, music, education and games. But last year alone, the magazine lost more than $4 million in advertising over the previous year, according to Adscope.

The company also abandoned a new venture in the computer magazine field last year when it discontinued publication of "Computer Industry Daily" several months after introduction. The ad-free daily newsletter was to have also appeared in electronic magazine format.

Last March, Ziff Communications sold three trade publications to Lakewood Publications, Minneapolis, for an undisclosed price. Publishing offices for Photomethods (circulation 53,000), Photo/Design (circulation 28,000) and International Television (circulation 26,000), remain in New York.

In November, Ziff sold the assets of its Data Decision unit, which included computer magazine Data Decision, to McGraw-Hill Inc., New York, for a price reported to be less than $25 million, which a Ziff spokesman discredited as too high a break-off point.

These sales followed the 1984 sale of 12 consumer magazines to CBS Inc. for $362.5 million, which was finalized Feb. 4, 1985. This sale, which analysts said was the highest price ever paid for a group of specialty publications, included such titles as Car & Driver, Modern Bride, Popular Photography, Stereo Review and various sporting magazines such as Runner, Boating, Cycle, Skiing and Flying.

Close on the heels of the sale to CBS was the purchase by Rupert Murdoch's News America Corp. of Ziff's 12 trade titles for $350 million. The deal marks News America's first venture into the trade publication field and includes such travel and aviation titles as Travel Weekly, Hotel & Travel Index, Rumors continued to fly with reports of the pending sale of the Financial Information Services Group, part of the Strategic Information Inc. subsidiary of Ziff Communications. The group provides applications software and information services to financial institutions.

Ziff has been fighting a suit filed by CBS against Ziff-Davis Publishing and its independent auditor, Touche Ross & Co., over what CBS claimed were overstated earnings of the 12 consumer magazines CBS purchased. Although New York state supreme court Justice Martin Evans dismissed CBS' claims of fraud and misrepresentation on the part of Ziff, the court let stand other CBS charges, including breach of contract. A Ziff spokesperson, satisfied with the dismissal of the most serious charges against the company, referred to the matter as "past history."

In other court matters, consumer advocate Ralph Nader accepted a $20,000 settlement from Ziff-Davis in November from a libel litigation he had brought against Car & Driver magazine, which Ziff-Davis Publishing had owned at the time of the suit.

The highly publicized appointment of David C. Cole, former software executive from Ashton-Tate Inc., to the position of president-chief operating officer, Ziff Communications, ended with Mr. Cole's resignation in January, 1986.

Ziff Communication's entry into the growing field of advertising expensive homes to affluent readers, Unique Homes, now boasts a circulation of 77,845, of which 44,645 are subscribers of the every-other-monthly publication. Time Inc. launched a competitor, New York/New Jersey/Connecticut Real Estate on April 21, 1986. It joins other titles such as Manhattan Living from MKL Ltd., Homes International & Previews from Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s Coldwell Banker unit and Merrill Lynch's Fine Homes.

Unique Homes' cachet in this field is its acceptance of property listings from all companies, unlike its agency-associated competitors, from which it also accepts and carries property advertising. Unique Homes also is the only audited book in the genre.

Priority of the real estate book is to pursue the home furnishings market, says the company. The publisher has hired three rep companies. There are also long-term plans to enhance circulation to 100,000.

All the remaining Ziff magazines are computer-oriented. The entire computer magazine package contributed close to $94 million in ad revenues. The Ziff magazine stable is promoted via direct mail and in trade and consumer magazines.

One additional source of revenue is the company's University Communications Inc. subsidiary in Rahway, N.J., which publishes a directory of classes for various colleges and which functions as an advertising vehicle.

30 days. In May, 1,000 adults were questioned by telephone. Under adWatch methodology, an increase or decrease of 2.8 percentage points is considered statistically significant and attributable to more than sample variation.

In springtime, a working stiff's fancy turns to vacation.

That was evident in the May adWatch figures, which showed some shuffling among the ad awareness leaders in the airline and credit card categories.

Among airlines, advertising for Eastern gained 3.6 awareness percentage points, boosting its score to 11.8% of first mentions, good for the third position among air carriers.

Trans World Airlines' advertising lost 7.6 points of top-of-mind awareness, falling to fourth place from first place in April with 10.1% of first mentions.

Eastern scored points with a campaign themed "There's no face like home," designed to encourage domestic travel. The spots pitch lower domestic fares and fly/drive packages.

TWA lost share of top-of-mind awareness when it virtually eliminated tv commercials in April and May while reviewing its account, then at Ogilvy & Mather, New York.

Winning ads from Young & Rubicam, themed "Today's TWA—Find out how good we really are," broke May 19, too late to affect TWA's May adWatch score.

In May, 14.4% of consumers named United's advertising as the first that came to mind for that industry, good enough for the No. 1 spot. American was No. 2 with 13%.

Consumers interested in financing their vacations in May got an eyeful of a new MasterCard campaign touting the value and benefit of credit cards rather than the card's status. MasterCard's share of first mentions rose 5.5 points to 25.5%.

Advertising for Visa remained tops in consumers' minds, garnering 32.1% of the first mentions, rising slightly from a month earlier.

American Express was third with 12.9%.

The top 10 best recalled ads in May were, in descending order: Coca-Cola, Pepsi-Cola, McDonald's, Miller/Miller Lite, Budweiser/Bud Light (Anheuser-Busch), Ford, Chevrolet, K mart, Burger King and Coors beer.

In other news from the May adWatch survey:

- For the third month, the normally volatile soft-drink category is silent, though the spread between Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola's share of first mentions is widening. In May, Coke garnered 36.4% of first mentions, up slightly from April, and Pepsi scored 29.7% of first mentions, down slightly from April.

Advertising for Pepsi's Slice juice-added drink moved into the No. 3 position with 2.7% of first mentions while 7UP's advertising fell to fourth with 2.5% of first mentions.

- Joining soft drinks as a stagnant advertising awareness category is fast-food, where the battle for first mentions is as tough as competition at the cash register. McDonald's advertising scored 46.6%, up slightly over its April score, while Burger King's ad awareness score remained flat at 12.4%.

Look for BK's ad score to get a boost from "This is a Burger King town," a new campaign that broke in May.

- Tylenol's share of first mentions dropped 5.1 points in the medicine & drug category. That may reflect the cessation of the heavy media weights that backed Johnson & Johnson's introduction of Tylenol caplets. Tylenol's 31.9% share of first mentions in May is still 10.3 points higher than the 21.6% the brand's advertising scored in the January survey before the cyanide poisoning incident.

Glenbrook Labs' Bayer and Whitehall Laboratories' Advil tied for the No. 2 spot with 6.8% of first mentions.#

in 1985 U.S. spending, and certainly much lower than the 15.8% increase recorded in 1984, an Olympics and presidential election year.

In 1986, first-quarter ad spending was "about as expected, but there are growing indications of softness during the second quarter and considerable uncertainty about how the last two quarters of the year will finally turn out," said Mr. Coen.

Network tv ad revenues in the first quarter were up only 4%. Spot tv, up 12% was "surprisingly strong," though "there is reason to expect that it will not last throughout the rest of 1986," said Mr. Coen. He predicted that network spending would be up 4% in 1986 and 6% next year.

As for magazines, lack of growth in the transportation, tobacco and technology categories led to first-quarter flatness in pages and a 6% increase in revenues. National ad revenues in newspapers were up 1.3%.

While "national marketers are obviously guarding their budgets and spending cautiously," said Mr. Coen, local ad budgets were growing at a "better pace."

In the first quarter, local ad revenues in newspapers were up 4.1%, local tv revenues were ahead 13% and local radio revenues were up 8.1%. "Above-average growth in the broadcast media is expected to offset some of the sluggishness that has been occurring in the newspaper sector," said Mr. Coen, "and during 1986 the total local budgets for all media should rise considerably more than those of the na-

B/PAA gets push on creativity, risk

'Uncertainty can be opportunity'

By LISA E. PHILLIPS

BOSTON—Business-to-business advertisers attending the Business/Professional Advertising Assn.'s 64th annual conference here were urged to embrace strong creative concepts to make product advertising stand out.

"Good ads are directly related to a good concept, not to company logos, tag lines or design of the ad itself," said Don Just, president of Martin Agency, Richmond, Va.

Although good advertising, by definition, is risky, he said, uncertainty should be an advertiser's opportunity.

Mr. Just listed several factors that go into making good business-to-business ads, including: Projecting the personality of the product and the company; speaking to prospects as people first, not as clients; supporting a company's sales force but not presuming to substitute for it; being interesting, memorable and conversational, and generating enthusiasm, empathy and awareness for the company and the product.

According to a study made public at the conference, held June 15 to 18, business-to-business advertisers last year spent $93.6 billion in the U.S. alone.

The study, compiled from 300 sources, was the work of Business Marketing, a publication of Crain Communications Inc., which also publishes ADVERTISING AGE. The study tracked spending on advertising, direct marketing, trade shows, sales promotion, sales-force management, incentives and other promotional areas.

Of those categories, BM estimates that business marketers spent $30.8 billion on direct marketing, $21 billion on trade show promotions and $15 billion on sales incentives.

Also at the conference, Daniel Bellack, principal at Tycer-Fultz-Bellack, Palo Alto, Cal., was elected B/PAA's 1986-87 chairman, from first vp. He succeeds Frank Compton, president of Sawyer, Riley, Compton, Gainesville, Ga., who had served as B/PAA president.

Effective with this election, the title of B/PAA's chief elected officer becomes chairman, rather than president.

David Green, assistant to the chairman of PPG Industries, Pittsburgh, and a past international president of B/PAA, received the 1986 G.D. Crain Jr. Award, named for the founder of Crain Communications.#

Losses

W-L management in each country.

• RJR Nabisco, Winston-Salem, N.C., pulled $96 million from Bates' William Esty Co. unit and another $32 million from Doyle Dane Bernbach. RJR was one of Esty's initial accounts 54 years ago.

• General Foods pulled from Bates two coffee brands, Maxim and Mellow Roast. Neither had been supported recently, making the loss less costly, but it was another not-so-subtle hint that the integrity of the conflict policy will be maintained. Saatchi & Saatchi Compton Worldwide handles Procter & Gamble's High Point decaffeinated coffees.

Maxim was assigned to Ogilvy & Mather, which handles other Maxwell House brands. Mellow Roast was not assigned.

The biggest winner in this record-setting round of account changes during the last two months is an agency that has remained a spectator rather than a participant in the new merger game. Young & Rubicam, New York, pushed out of the No. 1 spot to No. 3 by Saatchi and Omnicom, has realized a net gain of $254 million in business since those mergers were announced.

Meanwhile, the two agencies involved in the biggest acquisition and merger deals in ad-agency history have fared dismally. The Saatchi group has sustained a net loss of $255 million, mainly because its clients have refused to accept conflicts despite Saatchi's parallel agency structure. And the three Omnicom agencies have taken a net loss of $117 million, for much the same reason.

Besides W-L and RJR Nabisco, other advertisers that have sent a stern no-conflict message to their agencies by reassigning their business include Mars, Colgate-Palmolive and Procter & Gamble (AA, June 9). P&G accurately forecast—if it didn't inspire—the reaction when its vp-advertising, Robert Goldstein, said of the megamergers, "The client chapter has yet to come" (AA, May 26).

Events of the last few weeks raise the question of the advisability of growth through merger and acquisition, a strategy Y&R president-ceo Alex Kroll eschewed in an internal memo. Although he does not rule out acquisitions altogether, he said Y&R seeks "organic growth, in which the integrity of the company remains intact, its values and mission recognizable."

In the memo sent June 2 to office managers, he stated, "Advertising thrives on differentiation, and our competitors have handed us a wonderful difference. So it may be said that the recent mergers have put Y&R in a class by itself. We have won major global accounts and significant local ones at a rate faster than any other company."

The two marketers rearranging their assignments this week both officially cited "consolidation" as the reason for their moves. Nonetheless, Bates expressed "shock" that W-L ended its long-term relationship.

Agency executives surmised that the conflicts, paired with a relatively new W-L management that has been cutting costs, sparked the decision. Bates conceded that the loss of the RJR Nabisco business did not come as a complete surprise, but denied the move was conflict-related.

(see story, Page 8). McCann gained an estimated $30 million in new RJR Nabisco business.

TLK also picked up another $8.7 million from the company with Hawaiian Punch drinks, which was moved from DYR, Los Angeles. That brings its Nabisco new-business total to $19 million. And Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt got an estimated $2 million in billings for Nabisco Confections, including Junior Mints. It had been working on other Nabisco candy

Among the brands pulled from Esty were Salem cigarets, an estimated $50 million account, which moved to FCB/Leber Katz Partners. LKP, recently acquired by Foote, Cone & Belding, has been a Reynolds agency for some time. FCB/LKP also got an estimated $6 million in Nabisco business, including Milk Bone and Butcher Bones dog biscuits, from Esty. And it got Nabisco's hot and cold cereal business and Royal desserts from DDB, worth an estimated $22 million. Another $10 million in Blue Bonnet and Fleischmann margarine and Fleischmann Egg Beaters business has been moved from DDB to Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago, sparking that agency's resignation of the $12 million butter account of the National Dairy Promotion & Research Board, Rosslyn, Va.

FCB/Leber Katz Partners, however, lost two RJR cigarets, Now and More, billing an estimated $22 million and $25 million, respectively, to Y&R. Y&R, despite the loss of responsibility for RJR Nabisco's network buying to in-house RJR Nabisco Broadcast earlier this year, has been on a roll with Reynolds for the past 16 months. Y&R picked up several liquor brands from its Heublein unit during last year's RJR agency shakeup, and last week added its first domestic cigaret business since it lost Liggett & Myers in 1970.

DFS-Dorland Worldwide, already a major Nabisco agency, picked up an estimated $31.8 million in Nabisco cookie business, including the Oreo and Newtons lines, from Esty; McCann-Erickson got Nabisco's Premium Saltines and Ritz crackers from Esty. When combined with the Nabisco snack-cracker business acquired with the purchase of Ohlmeyer Advertising business.

The $30 million package W-L presented to Y&R includes Rolaids antacid ($12 million), Efferdent denture cleanser ($8 million), Mediquell cough squares ($10 million) and Remegel antacid, a minor brand with about $100,000 in ad spending last year. That business joins Y&R's existing $21 million in W-L billings that include Dentyne gum ($11 million) and Certs mints ($10 million).

JWT received Trident sugarless gum ($16 million), Bubblicious bubble gum ($3 million), Halls cough drops ($8 million), Listermint mouthwash ($8 million) and Suplical calcium supplements ($3 million). Before the reassignment, W-L had about $62 million in billings at JWT, including Listerine mouthwash ($16 million), Schick razors ($7 million), Sinutab sinus remedy ($8 million) and Clorets mints ($7 million).

> The evaluation at RJR Nabisco that led to the shakeup was under way "long before" Bates went to Saatchi.
> —sources close to Reynolds

Rumors were circulating for several days that Melvin Goodes, W-L president-ceo, was upset about the conflict created by the Bates acquisition by Saatchi, since Saatchi's DFS-Dorland handles RJR Nabisco's Bubble Yum bubblegum, Life Savers candies and Care*Free sugarless gum.

A W-L spokesman conceded that "conflict was a concern" but would not elaborate beyond a basic statement about the realignment. Unlike other major package-goods companies that have faced conflicts in the past, W-L had not and therefore its reaction could not be predicted.

Ironically, just days before W-L dropped Bates, chairman Joseph Williams was on the dais at a B'nai B'rith dinner in Manhattan honoring Bates chairman Robert Jacoby as its advertising man of the year.

W-L's Mr. Williams delivered several jokes about the Bates chairman in a speech more appropriate for a roast than an awards dinner. Mr. Williams jokingly apologized to the American people for the W-L campaigns Bates created over the years. He kidded that, had W-L known that Mr. Jacoby's agency would develop slogans so insulting to people's intelligence, the company never would have launched the products.

He also joked that Mr. Jacoby had helped destroy the foundation of American education by convincing people that the word "relief" is really spelled "R-o-l-a-i-d-s." "To which Mr. Jacoby replied," said Mr. Williams, "at least we got the first letter right."

The evaluation at RJR Nabisco that led to the shakeup was under way "long before" Bates agreed to come under the Saatchi umbrella, according to sources close to Reynolds.

Those sources believe the mega-client simply was dissatisfied with Esty's performance, especially on the estimated $50 million Salem cigaret account. Salem, although firmly ensconsed in the only growing segment of the cigaret market (females), has lost nearly a share point between 1982 and 1985, when its share stood at 7.9% of all cigarets sold in the U.S., according to John C. Maxwell Jr., tobacco industry analyst with Furman Selz Mager Dietz & Birney, New York. A share point for a branded cigaret is worth an estimated $200 million in annual sales.

A year ago, RJR's relationships with both Esty and Bates had soured to the point that RJR pulled Winston, its flagship brand with about $60 million in billings, from Esty, and Sterling, a relatively new brand that had been spending at the $40 million level during its 1984 introduction, from Bates. Winston, which had been America's No. 1-selling smoke from 1966 through 1974, went to McCann-Erickson, which had been handling Camel for RJR. Sterling went to TLK in Chicago, a relatively new Reynolds cigaret shop that had handled the highly successful introduction of RJR's Century brand family. Compounding matters, General Foods, a Bates client, was acquired by RJR archrival Philip Morris last fall.

Nabisco's withdrawal of some $32 million out of DDB is believed to be a direct reaction to that agency's merger with Needham Harper Worldwide and teaming with BBDO. Needham is a major agency of Kraft, handling, among other products, Parkay margarine, a direct competitor of Blue Bonnet and Fleischmann's. It is also a major General Mills agency, handling, among other brands, Wheaties cereal. Nabisco's Shredded Wheat is a direct competitor.

A spokesman for DDB said the agency was not "totally surprised" by the Nabisco move, but he added that when they entered into the merger, it was hoped that some arrangement could be worked out.

The three biggest losses at Bates—Colgate, W-L and RJR—are remarkable in that all three had been at the agency or its Esty subsidiary for more than 30 years.

Other names—Maybelline cosmetics and Eveready/Energizer batteries—have joined the list of clients that may be shaky at these shops. Maybelline president David Brittain called the Maybelline reports "absolutely untrue."

General Mills, Minneapolis, is staying put, sources say, although the food company is exerting "silent" pressure on its shops to drop conflicting clients, including Pillsbury, P&G and Quaker Oats.

Plough Inc.'s Maybelline eye and nailcare lines, billing more than $20 million, are handled by Bates; Eveready/Energizer, which officially becomes part of Ralston Purina Co. today, uses Esty for its $25 million business.

Ralston sources say the company is holding a creative competition for the account, something it does periodically with all its accounts. "We're not necessarily looking for a new agency, though," the source added.

Bates recently lost on one such competition, handing over the $9 million Continental Baking Co.'s Wonder bread account to TLK after the company's acquisition by Ralston. Bates kept the $12 million Hostess snack cake and Home Pride bread portion of the account (AA, May 12).

Part of General Mills' $50 million in Needham billings had conflicted with Nabisco's estimated $25 million in DDB billings that just moved to FCB/Leber Katz Partners. But General Mills still is worried about its $80 million in Big G cereal billings at DFS-Dorland, which conflict with cousin Saatchi & Saatchi Compton's $40 million in P&G Duncan Hines billings.

Although the company hasn't set any deadlines, a spokesman noted that conflicts cannot continue for long.#

Distribution Co., will have separate marketing departments. WRG/West president Larry Olshan said he is confident the agency will keep the MGM business and be given a fair shot at the UA account.

Gregory Morrison, recently promoted to exec vp-marketing, MGM, has ties with WRG, having worked with the agency since he joined the studio in 1980. UA is a different story. Andrew Fogelson, a former independent producer and Warner Bros. executive, joined UA in January as president/worldwide marketing. Observers think it's certain UA will open its business up for review. Mr. Fogelson was unavailable for comment.

Winchell's Donut Houses, La Mirada, Cal., has named Tom Anderson as vp-marketing, a vacant post that senior vp-marketing and planning John Hatch assumed temporarily. Mr. Anderson, formerly director of promotions, Taco Bell Corp., Irvine, Cal., hasn't yet been replaced at the PepsiCo division. His appointment follows Winchell's decision to shift its $6 million account from Foote, Cone & Belding to McCann-Erickson, both based in Los Angeles (AA, May 26).

Golden State Warriors, Oakland, Cal., a National Basketball Assn. franchise, assigned its $200,000 direct-marketing account to Lewis & Partners, San Francisco, its first agency, following a review. Grey Direct, Jamison & Associates, both San Francisco, and RAHM, Oakland, also competed.

Ketchum Advertising/Los Angeles has hired Brandt Irvine, formerly a senior writer with Doyle Dane Bernbach, Los Angeles, as vp-associate creative director, a new post.

California State Lottery Commission, Sacramento, starts new tv commercials in key markets for its latest instant game, "The Good Life," around the same theme this week. Separately, the commission will evaluate all advertising, marketing and public relations at its July 9 meeting. Needham Harper Worldwide, Los Angeles, which will become Rubin, Postaer & Associates July 1 (AA, May 12), handles the $24 million account.#

New York—Phil Dusenberry has been elected chairman and Tom Clark ceo of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn. Both also were elected vice-chairmen of BBDO Worldwide.

The new titles are an outgrowth of the merger earlier this year of BBDO International, Doyle Dane Bernbach Group and Needham Harper Worldwide.

Mr. Dusenberry, formerly vice-chairman and executive creative director, will continue to head the creative department, under the new title of chief creative director. Mr. Clark continues as president-chief operating officer.

The titles of chairman and ceo were held by Allen Rosenshine,

An empire builder without peer, John Werner Kluge has cashed in his cellular radio phone chips for $1.65 billion—and he's on the loose again.

With $2.5 billion, what's next target for John Kluge?

By VERNE GAY

One of the best stories told about John Werner Kluge involves his desire for a little elbow room around his home in the exclusive Premium Point section of New Rochelle, N.Y.

He purchased the huge, completely furnished house of his neighbor, Christian Dior chairman Bernard Arnaud, and immediately had it bulldozed to the ground. Unconfirmed reports have it that Mr. Kluge did not bother to have Mr. Arnaud's furniture removed before the bulldozers arrived.

That's vintage Kluge, and just what Kluge-watchers expect from the man who already has built and dismantled one of the largest media companies in the world—Metromedia.

Now the 71-year-old empire builder has struck again, selling his mobile cellular radio phone business last week to Southwestern Bell for an astounding $1.65 billion—almost double what analysts expected he would get.

Mr. Kluge appeared to be cashing out with a personal fortune estimated at more than $2.5 billion, owning only a beef company, two long-distance telephone networks in Texas and Florida, interests in Broadway plays and real estate, and—as usual—one keen eye cocked upon the future. "This is just the beginning," he told a colleague a

High Court's ruling sets back ad rights

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—While the rest of America celebrated Lady Liberty, the advertising industry last week was rummaging through a painful U.S. Supreme Court decision for signs that commercial speech will retain its First Amendment protections and not fall prey to widespread bans.

Although some silver linings appeared in the Court's ruling that Puerto Rico could ban certain advertising for casino gambling, the immediate industry reaction was gloom, doom and uncertainty over how proposed bans on tobacco and alcohol advertising might be treated by the Court.

"The Court may not have reversed itself by 180 degrees" from decisions of the past 11 years that expanded protection of commercial speech, said Thomas McGrew, a noted First Amendment and advertising attorney in Washington, "but it certainly did turn 179 degrees."

Allen Rosenshine, designated chief executive officer of Omnicom Group, called the Court's decision "an unfortunate abridgement of freedom of speech" that he believes could lead to a "further encroachment against the First Amendment."

And David Versfelt, counsel to the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies, said: "It's a dark day for Madison Avenue."

Reacting more gleefully was the antitobacco element on Capitol Hill.

The health and environment subcommittee chaired by Rep. Henry Waxman (D., Cal.) plans hearings July 18 on tobacco advertising and promotion—a $2.8 billion annual expenditure—and a committee aide said the Court's ruling "makes it perfectly clear that the constitutionality of an ad ban is no longer in question."

The gloom-and-doom case involved a challenge by a casino to a Puerto Rican law that bans casino ads "to the public of Puerto Rico," while permitting advertising to tourists.

The significance of the Court's 5-to-4 ruling upholding the partial ban was multiple:

- It marked the first time the Supreme Court upheld, even in part, a ban of truthful, accurate advertising for a legal product.
- The majority decision was writ-

May signal start of layoffs

DDB shifts 2 key execs

By STEWART ALTER

Two key creative executives at Doyle Dane Bernbach/New York have been moved out of major roles and their creative group has been disbanded as agency personnel anxiously await major layoffs.

Michael Mangano, at one point No. 2 in DDB/New York's creative department, and John Caggiano, also a DDB veteran, last week lost their posts as co-creative directors of one of the agency's three creative groups.

An agency spokesman said the two are "stepping aside as co-creative directors and will be working on special assignments for the indefinite future." Their group, responsible for about $160 million in billings from GTE Corp., Hershey Foods, Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Clairol and Borden, is being folded into the other two groups. The reason seems unclear; no one at DDB would discuss the matter and observers say the group's efforts for its client list have been well received.

The creative shifts are a surprise prelude to the large number of layoffs expected soon at DDB as a result of recent account losses and its impending merger with Needham Harper Worldwide under the Omnicom Group umbrella (AA, June 30). But they are said to be unrelated to those developments.

The DDB moves come as two other agencies, Ted Bates Advertising/New York and William Esty Co., prepare for major layoffs following account losses, also in large part related to the major agency merger activity of recent months. Esty, hardest hit in RJR Nabisco's recent account realignment with a $96 million loss in billings (AA, June 30), also now finds itself under review on its $20 million-to-$25 million Eveready Battery account following Union Carbide Corp.'s sale of that unit to Ralston Purina.

Hancock's direct appeal 3

Glitzy gimmicks in tv advertising can capture the eye, but it takes more than that to capture a viewer's imagination. That would seem to be what judges at this year's International Advertising Film Festival were thinking when they gave the Grand Prix to a campaign by Boston-based Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos for John Hancock Financial Services.

Fiber optics Sprint into view 3

US Sprint Communications Co.'s current campaign touting its fiber-optics technology is only its first marketing thrust in an estimated $100 million advertising effort announcing the formation of the new company.

Lever's latest labels 4

Lever Bros. is stepping up its new-product activity, with most of the items bearing familiar names. In various stages of test market and national rollout are Wisk powder detergent, Aim Anti-Plaque toothbrush and Pepsodent denture cleanser and adhesive.

Time runs out for 'Science 86' 6

Science 86 has become the first casualty in the magazine industry's hard-hit popular science category. Following Time Inc.'s purchase of assets of Science 86, the July/August issue becomes its last, and subscribers instead will be offered Discover, Time Inc.'s problem-plagued popular science title.

Putting on the dog for walkers 12

Walking may be making strides as exercise, but marketers seeking to capitalize on it could be in for a long, arduous trek. Shoe marketers are leading other specialty items such as apparel, socks and accessories in pitching to walking enthusiasts.

Italian wines unfreeze 22

Leading importers of Italian wine have returned with new campaigns and hefty increases in summer ad spending after pulling their ads following last April's methanol scandal in Italy.

Clarion's clearly for the masses 39

Noxell Corp. this fall will go national with Clarion, a new line of cosmetics that retailers are calling "the Clinique of the mass market."

Kellogg logs bran entry 40

Kellogg Co.'s $7 million introduction later this week of All-Bran Fruit & Almonds targets the ready-to-eat cereal market's big growth area. Adult bran/fiber cereal varieties last year grew twice as fast as the market in general.

Horns of plenty 77

Five days a week, 50 weeks a year, for the past 15 or so years, director Steve Horn and his wife, producer Linda Horn, have been following roughly the same routine. It starts with reveille at about 6:30 a.m., followed by Linda's 45-minute workout and an 8 a.m. start at their studios on Manhattan's East 83rd St. It usually ends around 8 p.m.—an average working day of 12 hours. It is this demanding, often punishing, routine that has made Steve and Linda Horn the industry's most prodigious, prolific and award-winning directing team.

The country list is not a complete breakdown of each agency's shops worldwide.

Some additional business was not included because of lack of space.

strengthen the creative product.

"A lot of people from the outside say Milt was being eased out, but without Milt it would never have happened," said Mr. Wax, 49, of Mr. Gossett, 61.

"There was a recognition of a need to update and be more innovative in the execution area." Senior people had to be added "because the perception was so negative," he said.

Another source noted the Saatchi influence in creative: "Not only did they [the Saatchi brothers] do good creative work, but their attitude toward creative is more single-minded than ours has been."

The Saatchis were able to accomplish this creative shift without hands-on interference. "Even within their own agency, they let their managers manage," said Mr. Wax. "They believe in autonomy of operations."

Mr. Wax said, "We'd send them our commercials. . .we got a note from Charles, who said the new Tide stuff was wonderful."

But from the point of view of many "old" Compton people, the Saatchis' success in improving Compton's performance comes from the feeling of partnership. Compton has gone from U.S. billings of $304 million and world billings of $1.3 billion in 1982 to U.S. billings of $590 million and world billings of $3.2 billion in 1985.

"We didn't suddenly become smarter, but we were one organization that became a better entity," said Mr. Wax, who would like to "get away from the implication that the Saatchis shook us up."

Many Compton executives feel that the view presented by the financial community is oversimplified. Since the Saatchi purchase, Compton's pretax margins of 6% to 7% of revenues have doubled, due to better financial systems, the closing of money-losing operations and better cash management.

"Saatchi brought something to the party with some very good fiscal-management systems," said one source, "but they were not rescuing a hapless organization that didn't know how to make a profit."

Compton executives would sometimes "wince" at what was being said about them, the source said, but swallowed it because the Saatchi legend benefited everyone.

After Mr. Gossett became ceo in 1975, he and his management launched an aggressive expansion program, and that accounted for the low margins, the source said.

What Mr. Gossett found was a mixture of success and frustration. "In 1975, we had billings of $105 million in the U.S., were 25th [in the agency rankings] and we were flat and spotty as an international network," he said. "Our team decided we had to reach $250 million in five years and that that would move us up to No. 15."

It achieved success in billings growth, so it targeted another $150 million and embarked upon an aggressive acquisition program, buying Rumrill-Hoyt; Ross Roy of New York; Klemtner; Fairfax, Hoffman-York, and Mayo Infurna Design in the U.S. as well as making overseas buys and startups.

But the agency was on a treadmill because of competitors' faster growth. "We grew $300 million in billings in six years, but we still ranked 18th. We had shot for $400 million and we got it, but we were still 18th and not 15th," he said.

It found in 1980 that it still had the ambition, but "we ran out of borrowing power," said Mr. Gossett. "To get into the top 10 we felt we had to merge."

It was that expansion and that borrowing that was chiefly responsible for Compton's poor bottom line, said Mr. Gossett. But he added, "Our stock historically grew as a private company at 20% a year, so we couldn't be too sloppy."

Another source noted that the debt service from the borrowing also affected the bottom line because interest rates were high.

But no one downplays the role of the Saatchis. "They helped us immeasurably financially with suggestions and procedures," said Mr. Gossett, who added that their objectivity as outsiders also helped. For example, on selling Hoffman-York, Milwaukee, Mr. Gossett said, "we might have kept it because it was our baby." Others note the agency was spun off because of conflict reasons.

But some of the turnaround in Compton's financial picture, sources said, began to occur because interest rates started declining, some relatively new overseas operations began to do well, and—with access to the stock markets—Compton had less need to borrow money in order to grow.

When Compton became public under Saatchi, it also changed its perspective. "As a public company, we all recognized that it was now advisable for existing units to think harder about ways to improve margins," said one source.

Becoming a public company led initially to Compton selling to Saatchi, an agency half its size. This access to capital for expansion has also been part of the motive cited by Backer & Spielvogel, Ted Bates Worldwide and Dancer Fitzgerald Sample to explain their subsequent deals with Saatchi.

Compton and Saatchi had worked for and shared many clients for seven years before the sale—for $29.2 million in cash and additional payments up to $27.6 million.

Compton first went overseas in 1960 when it bought a 49% interest in an agency that became Garland-Compton in London. Eventually, Saatchi bought the majority share in that agency.

In 1980, Compton and Saatchi began talking merger. "We tried to buy them," said Mr. Gossett. "They were going to sell us 40%, which we could have bought. Then Maurice said, 'Why don't you buy all of us?' That would have been about $10 million," continued Mr. Gossett.

Then, said Mr. Gossett, "Maurice made an incredible suggestion: 'Why don't we buy you?' " And they did.

Saatchi house

Maurice Saatchi, a telephone and a list of other people's clients. Now it is more like a roving team of hit men, rivals say.

While other agencies have new-business directors, Saatchi has sales directors in charge of new business for a country, region or the entire world.

"Saatchi has a different approach to clients, based on its own business acumen," said David Butter, Young & Rubicam's new-business director for Europe. "Other agencies say how good and clever they are and what they can do for you. But Saatchi says: 'We're a business with real vision; we're going to be No. 1; here's our share price; you can be big, too, if you work with us.' "

Saatchi buys companies that are growth-obsessed. Dorland, a low-key but hard-driving London agency, is making international growth a priority after buying Dancer Fitzgerald Sample last year. Bates is also building an international business services network.

Saatchi's hands-off management style, apart from imposing financial controls and the occasional lunch with Maurice at his regular table in a turret at the Connaught Grill, is legendary.

As the Saatchi web extends, relationships with clients become more delicate and complex. Saatchi's brief relationship with McDonald's Corp. is the clearest recent example of the behind-the-scenes maneuvering, unsuccessful, to parlay a locally won account into a slice of global business.

According to London sources, after McDonald's awarded Saatchi its $12 million U.K. account last March, the client wanted Saatchi to resign its $8 million Krystal hamburger business in New York as well as other fast-food accounts. Saatchi was unwilling to give up business unless McDonald's would guarantee the agency the McDonald's account in other markets. McDonald's refused.

But other sources said client conflict was a non-issue, and pointed to Saatchi & Saatchi's attempts to "reinvent the wheel." The final straw, sources said, occurred when Saatchi creatives insisted on altering a campaign involving "Ronald McDonald," a McDonald's character whose popularity in the U.S. rivals Santa Claus.

McDonald's fired Saatchi and moved the account to Leo Burnett Co., beginning Aug. 10.

IBM, a Saatchi client in the U.K. and France, could be another relationship to watch. IBM already fired Saatchi from most of its business in Spain and may be concerned about the rival Olivetti account Bates holds in Europe.

Saatchi is sensitive about the creative reputation of the flagship London agency. It is credited with outstanding work for British Airways' global "Manhattan landing" campaign and Silk Cut cigaret ads for Gallaher, among others.

But many echo the creative director at a big London agency, who said: "It's the iceberg principle—they have a small proportion of work they push, and the other 90% they hardly admit to."

Maurice and Charles are being squeezed out of their overcrowded headquarters at 80 Charlotte St., where 750 of Saatchi's 12,000 employes worldwide (including Ted Bates) are housed. The brothers will move to a separate Regent Street office this month with about 30 corporate staffers, while Saatchi negotiates to take over the adjoining Charlotte Street building, giving it an entire block for its offices.

Away from the office, Charles, 43, lives in a converted Victorian Gothic chapel in the affluent North London neighborhood of St. John's Wood. His American wife, Doris, is U.K. editor of House & Garden magazine.

A quiet, temperamental man who takes his dog to the office, Charles "is never reticent about his opinions, and always thought big," said Ross Cramer, a former partner with Charles at Cramer/Saatchi, a creative consultancy.

"He makes up his mind quickly. . .he won't stay at a bad

All newspapers represented are subscribers to Media Records. For those newspapers that subscribe to Media Records National Advertising Reporting Service, Total Advertising data shown has been supplied by the publisher to Media Records and included in this compilation. All publisher supplied figures are converted to MRCS SAU inches by Media Records. These newspapers are indicated with an asterisk (*).

REPORTING METHODOLOGY

Media Records continues to measure in linage but due to the introduction of the SAU 6 column format Media Records has designed and developed a methodology with the approval of our subscribers, the (NAME Measurements Committee, The ANPA/NAB Working Committee, The AAAA Newspaper Committee, and other industry groups.

The approved methodology is titled The Media Records Conversion System (MRCS) and is based upon the printed page area of each product of the newspaper and is a five step approach as follows:

1. Measure Printed Page
   Width and Depth in Inches
2. Determine Square Inches of Page
   Multiply Width by Depth Inches
3. Determine the Number of SAU Inches of Page
   Divide the Square Inches by 2.0625 (SAU Inches)
4. Measure the Total Lines of the Page.
   Multiply Column Depth Agate Lines by the Number of Columns on the Page
5. Determine the Factor for Converting Measured Lines to Reported SAU Inches

Adults lead cereal boom

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

Last year was another record year for the cold-cereal industry, with volume up 4% to 2.17 billion lbs. from 2.09 billion lbs. in 1984 and 2.02 billion lbs. in 1983.

In dollars, the market was up to $4.45 billion from $4.05 billion in 1984 and $3.65 billion in 1983.

The main growth related to adult ready-to-eat bran varieties, which grew six times faster than the market and now have roughly 10% of the market, up from 7.5% in 1984. Family-type products and adult fortified-bran products grew in line with or slightly ahead of the market as a whole.

The presweetened cereals continued their decline, mainly because of the lack of interest in licensed products. We would expect 1986 to show the same trends.

Again, Kellogg had the biggest jump, up almost two share points, with most companies either flat to somewhat down. However, in the latter part of 1985 Kellogg's growth abated, due to lack of new-product entries. Thus, more of their growth occurred in the first two-thirds of the year.

However, Kellogg's Just Right and Raisin Squares seem to be doing very well. This, plus the introduction of several new products in the not-too-distant future, probably will enhance the company's share during the current calendar year. Kellogg's share could exceed 43% or even approach 44% by the yearend.

General Mills was the only other company to see an uptick, though it was small. However, new products such as Circus Time and Raisin Nut Bran seem to be doing very well, and General Mills' share is close to 21% on a poundage basis.

The main share of decline occurred at General Foods and Quaker Oats. Both companies are characterized by a lack of new-product entries and a decline in the share of their old-line products. Quaker Oats has recenty introduced Quaker Oh's, which looks interesting, and hopefully will begin to stabilize Quaker's share, which was down a point in 1985. However, General Foods is yet to be heard from and that company's share is now just above 13% on a poundage basis.

Ralston had several new products, which include Rainbow Brite and Cabbage Patch. These new-product introductions helped offset the decline in Chex and the disappointment of Donkey Kong. Again, these products seem to have run their course, and unless new products are forthcoming we would expect Ralston to lose a slight amount of share this current year.

Nabisco Brands' main product, Shredded Wheat, continues to move up.

In summation, Kellogg was probably up 8% in unit volume for the year. General Mills was up 5%, Nabisco was up 11% and Ralston was up 2%, while General Foods was down 4% and Quaker Oats was down 7%. In dollar volume, Kellogg was up 15%, General Mills was up 12%, Nabisco was up 3% and Ralston was up 9%, while Quaker Oats was down 3%.#

some cancers and suggesting that its All-Bran should be part of a high-fiber diet (AA, Oct. 29, '84, et seq.).

The marketer has told industry analysts to expect two or three more cereal entries by yearend but has not been more specific.

White Plains, N.Y.-based General Foods' Post division, the second-largest bran/fiber cereal marketer with a 32.7% share of the segment, has had its over-all market share saved by two of its bran lines, including the $13 million introduction of two new Fruit & Fiber varieties last year (AA, July 22). Also, last September Post reformulated its Raisin Bran, renaming it Post Natural Raisin Bran, removing the sugar coating from the raisins and taking out the preservatives.

The reformulated cereal was backed by a $15 million ad campaign using singer John Denver (AA, Sept. 9).

Grey Advertising, New York, handles the two Post brands.

Post's share of the total cereal market, now at 13.2%, had been as high as 19% in 1983, said Eric Larson, industry analyst with First Boston, New York.

But Post's share started to slip because of a lack of new-product introductions and declining ad support in '84 and early '85—down 60% to about $4 million for Raisin Bran—while Kellogg and General Mills were increasing their ad budgets, analysts say.

Minneapolis-based General Mills jumped into the bran/fiber segment last year with Fiber One, backed with $13.5 million in ad support, and Bran Muffin Crisp, backed by $16.2 million. General Mills already has garnered a 6.3% share of the bran segment, good enough for the No. 3 position.

The company followed that with the $24 million introduction of Raisin Nut Bran.

DFS Dorland Worldwide, New York, handles Fiber One and Raisin Nut Bran; Needham Harper Worldwide, Chicago, handles Bran Muffin Crisp.

Industry analysts give General Mills good odds at taking over the No. 2 position in the bran/fiber segment if Post remains sedentary.

Other competitors in the segment include Ralston Purina Co., St. Louis, with its Bran Chex (3.1% share); RJR Nabisco, East Hanover, N.J., with 100% Bran and Shredded Wheat & Bran (4.4% share), and Quaker Oats Co, Chicago, with Corn Bran (3.1% share).

In the over-all cereal market, Kellogg holds a 42% share; General Mills, 21.1%; Post, 13%; Ralston and Quaker, 7% each, and Nabisco, 5%, according to First Boston's Mr. Larson.#

New fragrances readied

NEW YORK—Chesebrough-Pond's, Greenwich, Conn., in September will introduce Masquerade fragrance in drug and department stores. William Esty Co handles.

Separately, Max Factor & Co., Stamford, Conn., will introduce a line of Michael Jackson fragrances for women. They are called Heartbeat, Unwind and Wildfire.

The agency has not been announced. Wells, Rich, Greene is Factor's agency of record.#

ABC, CBS prices drop for 1st time

Big spenders get 5% cuts in upfront

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK--ABC and CBS made network tv history last week by selling nearly $1.4 billion in prime time upfront inventory at lower rates than the previous year.

This also is the first time any network, let alone two, cut prime time prices. The cuts averaged about 1% less than the 1985-86 upfront market, but fell as much as 5% for some big tv ad spenders.

The cuts are a major victory for advertisers, who reversed a decades-long trend in which rate hikes were routine and often more than 10% a year.

NBC dominated the upfront market for the second straight year with average price hikes of 3% to 7%. The top-rated network sought 20% increases for its best shows.

NBC is expected to command at least $1 billion of the total $2.47 billion 1986-87 prime time upfront marketplace, which is flat over-all compared with last year. ABC already has cleared $700 million in sales, with CBS believed to be slightly behind. CBS, however, claims it leads ABC.

This year's lackluster market performance is due to lower budgets from network tv's biggest spenders. McDonald's Corp., which last year led upfront prime time spenders with a $133 million buy, decreased its expenditure to $120 million. McDonald's agency, Leo Burnett USA, the biggest upfront agency buyer, spent $300 million, down at least $15 million from last year.

The biggest spending cutbacks came from Sears, Roebuck & Co., which halved its upfront spending to $30 million, and Bristol-Myers, which dropped $20 million, to $30 million.

Other big spenders stayed out of the market altogether. Beecham Group, which spent $76.3 million in network tv last year, and Revlon ($24.2 million), made no upfront buys. The computer category also was a bust for the second year in a row, with Apple Computer, Data General, Commodore International and IBM Corp. making no deals.

Package-goods spending also failed to ignite the market. Network spending leader Procter & Gamble spent about $100 million, equal to last year's upfront buy. General Foods made $96 million-to-$100 million in buys, also flat. Johnson & Johnson cut upfront spending from $75 million to $70 million.

Lever Bros. was down to $60 million. Ralston Purina equaled last year's levels with $48 million to $50 million.

Coca-Cola Co., which has yet to complete deals for its estimated $55 million upfront budget, is nearly $5 million off last year's pace.

The market was not totally grim for the Big 3 networks. AT&T reversed a two-year slide by pumping an additional $5 million into its upfront buy. The company spent about $55 million.

The biggest upfront boost came from the wine-cooler segment. Led by E. & J. Gallo, upfront wine spending increased 50% across the three networks to about $100 million.

Despite Big Mac's conservative approach, the fast-food business continued to grow. Burger King raised spending 25% to $50 million, while Wendy's International also made a sizable buy.

Cereals were led this year by Kellogg's $60 million-to-$64 million buy. Kellogg, however, spent more in upfront last year.

The automotive category also

Saatchi deal not in danger despite losses

Bates lets go 60 in N.Y.

By STEWART ALTER

NEW YORK—Ted Bates Worldwide last week dismissed 60 employes at its flagship unit, Ted Bates Advertising/New York, the final step in keeping profits intact and averting any renegotiation of its $450 million sale to London-based Saatchi & Saatchi Co.

Top officials of the two agency groups met in London July 4 and 5 and set an Aug. 7 closing date on the biggest acquisition in agency history.

Bates chairman Robert Jacoby and several Saatchi officials last week denied persistent rumors the deal would be renegotiated downward if Bates lost 10% of its total billings by closing. Those rumors were fed by word that the original July 31 closing date had been postponed one week.

Since the announcement of the merger, Bates has lost 9.7% of its total billings due to client conflicts with other Saatchi shops.

"The price is not going to be renegotiated, nor have they [the Saatchis] ever brought it up," Mr. Jacoby said. Several Saatchi officials confirmed Mr. Jacoby's report.

Saatchi's auditing of Bates' 102 offices took a week longer than expected, which is why the tentative July 31 closing had been changed. "The due diligence is done and fine," Mr. Jacoby said. "I have all the closing papers already."

The toll of account losses at Bates has led to the layoffs. Another 25 to 50 people at its William Esty Co. subsidiary also are expected to be let go (AA, July 7).

The major Bates losses—$100 million from Colgate-Palmolive Co., $38 million from Anheuser-Busch's Michelob and $68 million from Warner-Lambert Co.—plus $96 million in RJR Nabisco business lost by Esty—total $302 mil-

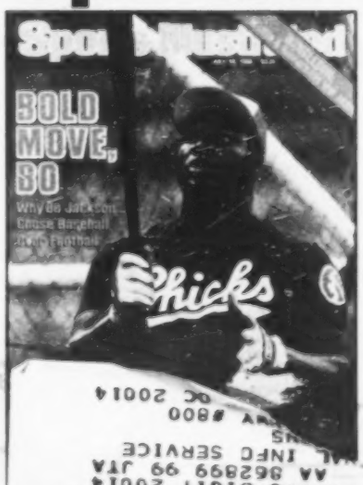
Sponsor deals enrich Bo and Boris



Nike prefers grid

By ROBERT RAISSMAN

Nike Inc. is about to give Heisman Trophy winner Bo Jackson another incentive to give up professional baseball and sign with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers of the National Football League.

Beaverton, Ore.-based Nike shortly will sign Mr. Jackson (left) to an endorsement contract. If he stays in baseball (he signed with the Kansas City Royals for $100,000 and a $100,000 signing bonus and was assigned to its minor league club, the Memphis Chicks), Mr. Jackson will receive less than $100,000 from Nike.

But a switch to football (he turned down a five-year, $4.6 million offer from Tampa Bay, which made him the first college player selected in this year's NFL draft) could net Mr. Jackson more than $1 million from the Nike deal.

The clause in the Nike contract that

Coke inks Becker

By ROBERT RAISSMAN

Boris Becker, the 18-year-old West German tennis star and winner of two consecutive Wimbledon men's singles titles, has signed a multiyear contract with the Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta, worth at least $3 million.

Neither Coca-Cola executives nor representatives of T-V Enterprises, the management company representing Mr. Becker, would confirm financial terms of the deal, which was finalized last month. But sources said Coca-Cola was willing to pay the teen ager's asking price to continue its assault on the teen market by using Mr. Becker on a worldwide basis.

Mr. Becker (right) has won only five major pro tournaments—although two were prestigious Wimbledon titles—but he is the most charismatic player among young tennis fans.

Israel's poster uproar 50
What began as a creative and profitable advertising idea has turned into a nightmare for Emanuel Shalem, ceo of Poster Media. Mr. Shalem's company constructs bus shelters throughout Israel and places poster ads on them. The ads, many depicting women modeling swimwear, have been at the center of a controversy between secular and ultra-Orthodox Jews angered by the public display of scantily clad females. Other ads that are equally offensive to the religious groups depict men and women together.

Officials at some media outlets said publicity on earlier drafts of the report unfairly grouped mainstream magazines, broadcast media and films with those that contain more explicit "adult" material.

The latter "pornography," the commission said, should be the subject of an intensive consumer effort. The commission suggested consumer "watch groups" boycott retailers selling the material and pressure legislators to ban its sale.

Can Coca-Cola tap Reid's fountain magic?

Succeeds Zyman as marketing chief

By NANCY GIGES

John Reid, who will succeed the dynamic Sergio Zyman as senior vp-marketing at Coca-Cola USA, is a sharp contrast to his controversial predecessor, who has been credited with key product and advertising successes despite his often abrasive, impatient style.

Mr. Reid, 35, moves up from vp-marketing in Coca-Cola's fountain department on Aug. 1 when Mr. Zyman, 40, leaves to join a private investment group. Anthony Eames succeeds Mr. Reid, taking the title of vp-director of marketing, fountain sales. Mr. Eames had been director of marketing services for the fountain sales department.

Equipped with a planning and economics background, Mr. Reid will guide Atlanta-based Coca-Cola's advertising efforts at a time when the company is struggling to find the right strategy for selling two sugar colas.

Sources close to the company were somewhat surprised that Mr. Reid was selected over C. Patrick Garner and William Schermerhorn, directors of marketing for citrus and cola brands, respectively. Both reported to Mr. Zyman.

But others suggest that Coca-Cola may be hoping that Mr. Reid can take some of the magic of the fountain department, which has been doing quite well, and transfer it to supermarket shelves, where Coke still has not found a way to combat Pepsi-Cola's aggressiveness.

Some say Mr. Zyman's flamboyant personality led to a mutual agreement that he should leave, but both he and Coca-Cola deny that account. Reports that Mr. Zyman and Coca-Cola USA president Brian Dyson would leave or move into different positions have been circulating for at least six months.

There is still speculation that Mr. Dyson may be involved in a spin-off of bottling operations that Coca-Cola is assembling through acquisition of its biggest bottlers. If so, his most likely successor would be exec vp Edwin Mellett. Mr. Mellett was recruited two years ago from rival PepsiCo, Purchase, N.Y.

A source who worked with Mr. Zyman said: "I think his method of operating probably was a problem.

J. Reid

S. Zyman

He's a dynamo; he works seven days a week. He's more of an entrepreneurial-type person anyway and likes to do his own thing, which doesn't fit into a big corporate organization. He did a job of shaking up that company, to get it going in different directions."

Executives said many bottlers, in particular, objecte ' to his domineering approach and "bottlers have a lot to say about what ultimately happens," the source said.

Mr. Reid, who was not available for comment last week, joined Coca-Cola in 1974 as sales forecasting manager in the market research department. He then moved

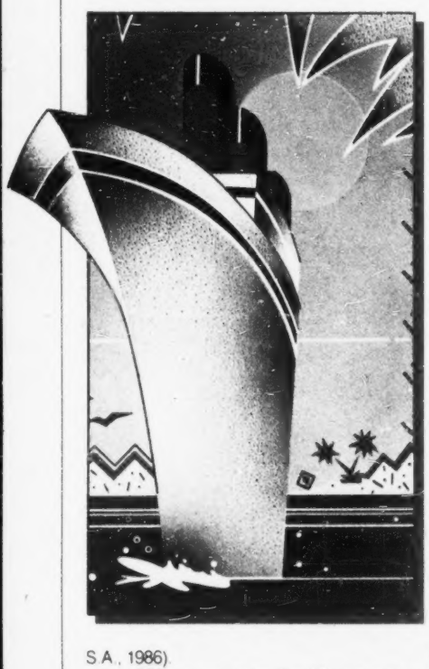
If you're completely at sea, there's even a cruise to nowhere

Fewer than 10% of U.S. vacationers have discovered cruising, yet it is the fastest-growing segment of the travel industry, writes Douglas Ward, executive director of the International Cruise Passengers Assn., in his book, "Complete Handbook to Cruising" (Editions Berlitz division of Macmillan



S.A., 1986).

In 1985, more than 2 million people worldwide went on a cruise, visiting more than 300 ports. The most recent survey gives Americans the hands-down lead in the seafaring tourist category, followed by the British and the Germans, Ward writes.

The book explores cruising from stem to stern and is packed with information, ratings, anecdotes and ship descriptions. For example, Ward writes, "The standard of luxury is in direct proportion to the length of the cruise." The standard of fun is a much more subjective area. Besides the traditional gastronomical, sports and social events, most cruise ships offer a library with a large selection of books, periodicals and reference materials. One learns also that during the last few years "women have outnumbered men on many cruises by about 8 to 1"—a fact that will not be lost on seaworthy bachelors.

For those who have already settled down, dreams of romantic, moonlit nights at sea may be disrupted by the patter of little feet. Cruise lines are accommodating and entertaining an increasingly younger passenger with extensive kiddie programs. And if the sea air serves to arouse a healthy appetite, duck a l'orange and other delicacies are available from cruise ships' army-size galley stockpiles. The Queen Elizabeth 2, for example, carries as much as 25,000 lbs. of beef and 700 lbs. of marmalade on a trip.

The trend is toward specialty cruises, according to the author, and these range from bridge and chess to Trivial Pursuit, from children's educational to computer science to fashion cruises. There are even murder mystery cruises, and—no kidding—bird-watching cruises. For those who can't or won't make up their minds, there are cruises to "nowhere."

To get one's sea legs in proper stride, Ward offers a dictionary of maritime expressions and terminology (a fathom is 6 ft.), and advice on how to conquer seasickness—before, not after you get the bill.

The stage is set for another baby boom

Several companies seem to be picking up on that "Back to the Future" theme song, "Back in Time," by Huey Lewis & the News.

Hanna-Barbera Productions' "Flintstones" stars Fred, Wilma, Barney and Betty are coming back in September—as 10-year-olds. (Dino, the Flintstones' pet dinosaur, will be returning as a pup.)

ABC-TV is adding the prehistoric gang to the Saturday morning cartoon roster. The new series is scheduled to run against CBS' "Muppet Babies," Jim Henson's animated series, which was renewed for its third season.

Time travel is nothing new for the Muppets. Before Kermit, Miss Piggy, Rowlf and the rest were turned into toddlers, Henson had included a nonanimated Muppet Babies flashback sequence in the movie "The Muppets Take Manhattan." Since that time, the Babies have revitalized the Muppets' licensing power for New York-based Henson Associates. The company is planning a premium promotion for Pampers disposable diapers and Muppet Babies in 1987; their 1984 premium linkup was Procter & Gamble's "most successful," Henson says.

Flapper Betty Boop—she of the bee-stung lips and wide green eyes and dimpled knees—also is part of this miniaturization process. King Features, New York, has created Baby Boop-Betty Boop. King has developed this small-fry version of an established character to excite potential licensees in the juvenile marketplace.

Who will go back to the future next?

Akimine's unusual way with materials blends fashion and third base

"If you can lift it, you can wear it," says San Francisco's Estelle Akimine, designer of dresses made of sticks, fiberglass screen and, most fetchingly, twin baseball mitts that caress the female torso.

"When I began making [regular] clothes in the late '70s, no one bought them," the 33-year-old designer says. "That was when a lot of punk stuff was coming out. I felt like I was in the Dark Ages." Damning her darning, Akimine traded needle and thread for drill press and wire.

San Francisco is "going crazy with costuming," she says. The large gay community "would do anything to dress up and celebrate. Most actually prefer to go as an inanimate object—a Mayan pyramid or the Empire State Bldg. It's not like you can go out on St. Patrick's Day in a green frog suit anymore."

Akimine has designed a cape made of recycled typewriter ribbon, a shirt made from a volleyball net, hats and shifts of thickly painted fiberglass, and the all-American baseball gown.

That's not to mention her matching "Zen" outfits: For him, a stick. For her, a rock. "Zen fashions make you look like nothing, even if you haven't achieved it yet," she quotes from her tongue-in-chic fashion show.

Akimine brings this show to clubs and cabarets. It's entertainment as well as advertising. When people do buy her work, often they don't intend to wear it. "They'll use it as a sculpture and hang it in the living room." Prices start at $250.

A few years ago Akimine couldn't enter sculpture or textile competitions because her art fell somewhere in between. Thanks to broadening definitions of art, today she qualifies for both—"I've actually won some sculpture competitions."

Once in a while, though, she pays a price for her originality. "I used to live in a derelict district, and one night someone broke into my station wagon. They didn't take anything else, but they stole the baseball mitts off my gown."

Jones, Tork and Dolenz: Still monkeying around after all these years

In recent months certain members of the record business have questioned just how effective music video exposure really is.

Warner Bros. and Columbia Records, for example, announced that their respective supergroups, Van Halen and Journey, would not be doing any music videos to support their current releases. The record companies' contention was video exposure was not needed to promote such big-selling names.

But what if a group's name has rarely been heard since the late '60s?

The Monkees—remember them?—currently touring in the Chunky-sponsored "Anniversary Tour," produced by David Fishof Productions, New York, owe much of their reborn popularity to the exposure they got on MTV Music Television.

From February to April, MTV became Monkee TV, playing reruns of the '60s NBC-TV show "The Monkees" two to three times a day. During "Pleasant Valley Sunday Weekend" 22 hours of the half-hour sitcom were aired.

Ironically, long before anyone had to Marketing takes to the highroad

By Marie Spadoni

Stars, stripes and staying home will be the 1986 tourism anthem in North America.

Several factors will contribute to the momentum of 1986 tourism and continued prosperity for the future, but the key is a strong marketing program, industry sources say.

For fiscal year 1985, state ad budgets totaled about $82.8 million, an increase of about 11.8% from the previous year, according to the U.S. Travel Data Center in Washington. In 1985, 558.4 million trips were taken in the U.S., about 30.2 million more than the previous year.

"The amount of marketing pressure placed on the industry has grown at a geometric rate," says Tom Davidson, of York, Me.-based Davidson-Peterson Associates, a research company that specializes in travel. "Increased competition has resulted in an increase in marketing effectiveness." As the market matures, there has been an influx of marketing-savvy people to the industry and a continual increase in ad budgets.

Snowballing ad budgets began when New York state in 1979 doubled its budget to $10 million in one year, says Douglas Frechtling, director of the U.S. Travel Data Center.

"From that point, it was a competition domino effect, as states decided they had to promote and use tourism, rather than manufacturing, as an economic development strategy."

The industry just now is beginning to reap the rewards of a shift in marketing strategy. In 1985, tourism-derived revenue for the U.S. was up about 7% from the previous year to $269 billion, with $12 billion coming from foreign visitors, according to the U.S. Travel Data Center.

Virtually gone are the lackluster chamber of commerce-type tourism promotions that detailed a state's historic and cultural sites. In their place is tourism marketing that is "the packaging of products," says Alan Fredericks, editor of Travel Weekly, a New York-based in-

Main attraction not only show in New York state

By Lisa Phillips

The eyes of the nation turned to New York for its Fourth of July celebration this year, while New York state and neighboring states turned their eyes on the 39 million visitors expected to visit Miss Liberty during 1986, hoping the travelers will spend some time and money with them.

In 1985, 17.2 million tourists visited New York City. This summer, the New York State Department of Commerce expects an additional 22 million visitors to show up for the Statue of Liberty's 100th birthday celebration and 6 million more were expected on the Fourth of July weekend alone.

And the party isn't over yet. Although summer and the Fourth of July weekend are peak travel periods, Miss Liberty's true anniversary isn't until Oct. 28, the date of official dedication in 1886. Liberty-related festivities, ceremonies, exhibits and attractions will continue statewide through November.

In 1985, an estimated 50 million tourists traveled through New York state, spending about $14.4 billion, according to Bern Rotman, spokesman for the state's tourism development division. Those figures represent only a slight increase from 1984 tourism numbers, he says.

But thanks to the two years of hype and hoopla focused on the Statue of Liberty, New York state officials are braced for a banner tourism year in 1986. The state expects a 5% to 10% increase in tourist traffic this summer, says Linda Fisher, deputy commissioner of tourism development.

Last September, the tourism division began planning a special promotional campaign to capitalize on Miss Liberty's 100th birthday, says Ron Moss, tourism commissioner for the New York Department of Commerce.

Keeping the tourists in New York state once they've arrived isn't being left to chance. In mid-May, print ads in major metropolitan newspapers, including the Boston Globe and Philadelphia Inquirer, began offering free booklets called Liberty Passports, which contain 200 coupons worth more than $2,200 in discounts for hotel rooms, restaurants and attractions around the state.

By mid-July, all 850,000 Liberty Passports printed will be shipped from the Commerce Department to individuals, travel agencies and bulk distributors, Mr. Rotman says.

A rise in New York's tourism likely will mean an increase in tourism traffic for the entire region, but New York is gearing up to keep as much spending within its borders as possible.

"Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Canada—all are aiming their guns at New York state. They all have new campaigns," Mr. Moss said at a May press conference unveiling the state's special summer campaign, themed "New York State of Mind." The $3 million effort is intended to lure visitors upstate.

SSC&B:Lintas USA, New York, which last September won a new $1.5 million business development account for the state, was commissioned to create the special summer promotion. The agency hit on the "New York State of Mind" song, featuring entertainer and New York native Billy Joel's music and vocals.

Liberty Weekend has put New York state tourism directors in a happy state of mind.

The two tv spots show quick cuts of New York state tourist attractions, including Boldt Castle in the Thousand Islands, Niagara Falls, horse racing at Saratoga and the Statue of Liberty.

Both tv spots—one 60 and one 30-second—broke June 2 in 23 northeast U.S. markets, plus the Canadian provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

At the same time, New York began running the spots in the Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco markets. The campaign originally was scheduled to end July 1, but it may be extended, Mr. Rotman says.

Tv spots featuring the long-running "I Love New York" campaign, via Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, have been retired for the summer, Mr. Rotman says. New spots for fall and winter tourism will break after Labor Day. Meanwhile, the "I Love New York" theme is running only in print ads.

New York's neighbors aren't sitting quietly by, waiting for a surfeit of tourists to cross their borders.

Massachusetts, the largest tourism destination in New England, increased its 1986 tourism budget, including pr, collateral and staff salaries, to $9.3 million from $7.6 million in fiscal 1984, according to Jonathan Hyde, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Department of Commerce & Development. In 1983, Massachusetts committed only $2.1 million to tourism promotion, he says.

Three 30-second tv spots began running at the end of May in northeastern markets, as well as in Toronto and Los Angeles for the first time. Each spot focuses on a separate part of the state, from cities to seashore to countryside. And in the state of Paul Revere, Bunker Hill and the Minuteman, "We market history heavily," Mr. Hyde says.

The state's slogan, "The spirit of Massachusetts is the spirit of America," created by Ingalls Advertising, Boston, reflects that slant. The slogan is beginning its third year and still going strong, backed by a $3.8 million spring-summer media buy.

Massachusetts wasn't trying to lure visitors from the Statue of Liberty celebration, Mr. Hyde says. Several trends came together to raise the state's hopes of garnering more visitors.

"The current psychology is that if you'd planned and canceled a trip to Europe, you're more inclined to take a big trip just to get away," Mr. Hyde says.

New Jersey also is hoping to cash in on those get-away travelers. In 1986, the state extended its campaign into Washington, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, Ohio and northeastern New York, according to Victoria Schmidt, director of the state's tourism bureau in Trenton, N.J.

New Jersey is expecting a 10% increase in tourists this summer, but that is coincidental to the Liberty Centennial celebration, Ms. Schmidt says.

While the state doesn't have exact figures for total tourist traffic, last year 30 million people visited Atlantic City, and 10 million went to the Meadowlands Arena. Increased media spending accounted for the largest jump in the bureau's over-all budget, which was $6.5 million this year, up from $5.5 million in 1985. AA dustry trade publication.

Tourism marketing previously relied on the private sector, but public agencies have increased their activity. "There has been an acceleration of involvement at all levels in marketing tourism products in order to bring in revenues," he says.

A national trend in advertising is emerging, Mr. Fredericks says. "It's not a direct result of external circumstances, just a continuation of an ongoing trend."

In 1986, however, external factors are influencing tourism.

For example, British Columbia and the Pacific Northwest are top-heavy with travelers—and cruise liners—drawn to Expo '86 in Vancouver; two years of pre-Liberty Weekend celebration in New York stimulated a keen interest in Americana, and airline fare wars rage on as a continuing result of deregulation. But perhaps the most frequently talked about subject is international terrorism.

"It's hysterical, what's happening right now," says Anastasia Kostoff-Mann, president of Los Angeles-based M[illegible] Allan Travel and chairwoman of the Travel and Tourism Research Assn., Salt Lake City. "And a lot of people don't realize the rebound effect on our economy is damaging."

While a portion of public concern over international travel is sensational, tourists' attitudes are not likely to change overnight. "I think terrorism abroad will abate as a problem, but I don't see a resurgence in travel abroad, particularly in Europe, because of the dollar," Mr. Frechtling says.

Travel Weekly's Mr. Fredericks agrees, saying Europe will take a couple of seasons to return as a desirable tourism destination.

Consequently, massive international advertising and marketing efforts are being made. "Advertising is their only hope now," Ms. Kostoff-Mann says. "If the media is going to attack with airtime, the industry has to attack in the same way."

The international airline and hospitality industries have been hit hardest, while cruise lines have the advantage of putting their ships in other ports, she says. "The hysteria created by the media can be calmed by a good and well-directed marketing campaign."

Although consumers look at international terrorism as the primary reason for an upswing in North American tourism, observers recognize it as only one of many factors in an industry that has become solid because of continued growth and expertise in marketing strategy.

"Tourism research is more sophisticated, as well as the recognition of how much tourism benefits an economy," Mr. Fredericks says. "There has been a realization of the rippling effect of tourism dollars within an economy." AA

GOT A COMET BY THE TAIL

By Richard Edel

The ads say "Feel the warmth of Mexico," but many Americans are giving it the cold shoulder instead. In a year when North American destinations are popular, one would expect Mexico's cities and resorts to be swarming with vacationers. But 1986 is expected to follow the 1985 pattern, when travel to Mexico dropped. In 1985, the most recent figures available, travel from the U.S. to Mexico declined nearly 16% from a 1983 peak of more than 4 million persons, according to the U.S. Travel & Tourism Administration in Washington.

If there is a silver lining in this gloomy statistic, it is Mexico's resort business. In 1985, after a long-term pattern of nearly explosive growth, the resort industry maintained an even level from the previous year, even while travel to historic, archeological and colonial attractions was down. Consequently, Mexico continues to develop its vast resources of sun and sand as avidly as it sank new oil wells in the 1970s.

"Mexico has always been an important product for travel companies, and it always will be," says Alan Fredericks, associate publisher and editor of Travel Weekly, a New York-based trade publication. "Unfortunately, unlike Hawaii, Alaska, Bermuda, Canada and other [North American] destinations, you can't turn away from the negatives in Europe and look at an entirely positive situation for Mexico this year," he says.

Tourists tend to equate newspaper headlines with general conditions at their destinations. "People hear 'terrorism-Europe,' 'crime-New York,' 'earthquake-Mexico,' " and they refuse to go there, even though the problems may only be localized, Mr. Fredericks says. "It's very difficult to overcome these impressions with facts."

The facts: Mexico is faced with slumping markets for oil and manufacturing, its two leading industries, and is intensifying its efforts to promote tourism, the third largest sector at about $2 billion a year, says a spokesman for Mexico's secretary of tourism. Tourism also is critically important as a source of employment, he says.

But Mexico's strategy in developing tourism has changed dramatically in recent years. Escorted tours of cultural or historic sites are giving way to fun in the sun vacations at resort communities on the west and east coasts and travel experts say this represents a key shift in Mexico's tourism economy.

"Mexican travel in the past was more of a cultural vacation," Mr. Fredericks says. "To a greater degree today it's more of a resort sell with resort areas now accounting for a great deal of the tourism."

Richard Edel is a frequent contributor to Special Report.

In 1980, for example, airport arrivals at interior cities outnumbered those at beach destinations by 3 to 1. The ratio declined to slightly more than 2 to 1 in 1985, according to the Secretary of Tourism in Mexico City.

"I'm bullish on the outlook for Mexico travel, particularly as we go into the 1986-87 winter season," says Tim Warnock, vp-Mexico products for Denver-based First Tours, a unit of Carlson Cos., Minneapolis, a hotel, restaurant and travel corporation.

Mexico's tourism promotion is turning to the fun in the sun approach.

"From our standpoint we see a definite increase to resort destinations," Mr. Warnock says. First Tours' business to Mexico's resorts increased 25% in 1985, and Mr. Warnock projects another 15% to 20% increase in 1986. "But we don't know whether the increase is cyclical or a long-term trend."

But a spokesman for another Carlson unit, Minneapolis-based Cartan Tours, says Cartan is canceling several of its midseason Mexico tours because of lack of interest and shifting tour packages to Canada and Hawaii.

The Cartan tours were primarily to colonial and archeological points of interest, catering to a generally older clientele, Mr. Warnock says. This market has been sensitive to news reports of the September earthquake and to reports of danger south of the border.

"Television news was graphic in its portrayal of the earthquake disaster," he says. "This led to misperceptions about the extent of the damage." The city damage was confined to an area about the size of New York's Central Park, newspaper correspondents say.

The earthquake, registering 7.8 on the Richter scale, devastated a densely populated section of Mexico City, resulting in thousands of deaths and $1 billion in damage.

News reports of the disaster undeniably had a significant impact on Mexican tourism, coming as they did only months before the peak winter season, says Fernando Jarces-Soto, ad manager for Mexicana Airlines, Los Angeles.

For example, tourism to Mexico City was 2.1 million persons in 1985, down 16% from 1984, according to Mexico's secretary of tourism. Travel to Ixtapa, a resort area 200 miles southwest of Mexico City that also was damaged in the quake, was 311,000 in 1985, down 9% from the previous year.

"People in the United States live in such a stable, civilized society that anything unusual happening outside their borders scares the hell out of them," Jarces-Soto says. "The truth is that chaos is the natural state of things around the world."

Although 1985 tourism was down, he says air travel to resort areas, especially Cancun, continues to be strong.

For a decade, Mexico has been investing heavily in the construction of beach resort areas through Fonatur, a government agency. Since 1974, Mexico has added 83,465 hotel rooms, mainly in the five planned resorts of Cancun, Ixtapa Zihuatanejo, Loreto, Cabo San Lucas and Guaymas, a spokesman for the secretary of tourism says. The cost, according to the spokesman, was 204,221 million pesos, equivalent to about $2.4 billion, based on average exchange rates for the 10-year period.

Fonatur lays the groundwork by installing water and sanitary sewer lines, roads and other pieces of the resort infrastructure. Private developers follow with hotel developments, such as one recently announced between New York-based Hilton International, a subsidiary of Trans World Airlines, and Protexa Group, an industrial company based in Monterrey.

The two companies are planning a 434-room beachfront resort in Cancun to open in 1988. It could be the first of several resort and city developments for the partnership, a Hilton spokesman says.

Such developments are small but important pieces of a growing success story for Mexican tourism. Cancun, for example, was a sparsely populated, sandy island 20 years ago when Mexico began developing it as a tourism resource.

In 1975, Cancun had 1,322 hotel rooms, an occupancy rate of 51% and 100,000 visitors, mostly Mexican nationals. In 1985, Cancun has 6,591 rooms, an occupancy rate of 72%, and hosted 500,000 foreign guests and 230,000 nationals in 1985, up 2% from 1984.

A similar growth pattern is being experienced by several resort areas along Mexico's Pacific coast.

However, Pacific coast resorts will be hurt in the summer of 1986 because several cruise lines are diverting vessels from tours along Mexico's coast to tours of Alaska and Canada, says Jack Beuttell, vp-marketing for Sitmar Cruises, Los Angeles. Sitmar, Holland America and Princess cruises all are diverting ships, he says.

"Quite honestly, there's more demand for Alaska this summer. It's a question of seasonality and I suppose Expo '86 has a lot to do with it. We'll continue to support Mexico for nine months out of the year."

As Mexico's resort communities become more successful, marketers find ways to incorporate them into package deals, says Dolores Avalos, director-advertising for Westin Hotels & Resorts, Mexico City. Westin is working jointly with several airlines, including Mexicana, American Airlines and Aero-Mexico, and with tour wholesalers to create resort packages at reasonable prices, she says.

The advertising theme, "Think Mexico this summer . . . you get the best places at the best value," is breaking in key markets, including New York, Seattle and Houston, Ms. Avalos says. Westin also anticipates a boost in tour travel after last month's World Cup soccer games, held in Mexico City.

The Mexican government continues backing tourism with its "Feel the warmth" campaign, created by Dancer Fitzgerald Sample, New York. Introduced in April, 1985, in the U.S. and Canada with an annual budget of $12 million to $15 million, the campaign airs on network tv from mid-December to mid-April, Mexico's peak tourism season, and on spot tv the rest of the year.

About a third of the budget is divided between print media and newspapers. Mexico also has a $1 million annual budget for five western European countries and Japan.

Jim Hunter, senior vp-management supervisor at DFS, says the campaign is people oriented.

"We feel that most travel advertising doesn't show tourists relating to the people in the country they're visiting," he says. "This campaign features the two greatest assets of Mexico—the warmth of the people and the warmth of the sun."

Mr. Hunter says the Mexican government is attuned to the relationship between the country's image and the repercussions on tourism.

"The government has taken a very positive stance on tourism from the president [Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado] on down," he says. "Let's face it, with the price of oil going down, they need all the foreign currency through tourism that they can get." ■

Thanks, Apple.
Late Monday night, May 19, 1986, we learned that Apple Computer was moving its advertising account from Chiat/Day to BBDO.
That marks the end of the roller coaster adventure our two companies have shared for nearly seven years. Together, we introduced a new technology to the world, founded a new industry in America and changed forever the way business talks to business.
Now we'd like to take this moment to say thanks, Apple.
Thanks for letting us make a little history.
Thanks for demanding our best, and then more than our best.
Thanks most of all for actually using our best, year after challenging year.
You've done for us what 1776 did for Uncle Dane Steinbach, what Hathaway did for Ogilvy & Mather, what McDonald's did for Needham, Harper & Steers.
So thanks, Apple.
It's been a great ride.
Chiat/Day

We thought this ad was simply a class act, following a history of good, sometimes great creative newspaper advertising by Chiat/Day, Los Angeles, for Apple Computer. The ad was written by Lee Clow, president, executive creative director, and Steve Hayden, senior vp and creative director.

L.A. hit by Lipton's citrus rain

Lipton Fruit Tea bows in a tv :30 and a :15 entitled "Let it pour," which features a shower of thousands of lemons and limes. The spots open with a young couple under a beach umbrella at poolside. Suddenly, a sprinkling "rainfall" of fruit begins, then a torrential downpour as the chorus sings, "Let it pour!" and the couple runs for cover under a colorful cabana. The spot was filmed at a Los Angeles pool after a series of experiments in the New York studio of director Andy Jenkins. He decided to photograph the fruit shower at 96 frames a second to give the Thomas J. Lipton Inc. spot a slow-motion, "live-action cartoon feel" without making the actor and actress' movements look unreal. Instead of using actual fruits, he used plastic lemons and limes. Crew members regulated the flow of the fruits via sheets stretched across the pool and the cabana. Creative credits at MCA Advertising, New York: Harvey Gabor, creative director, and Dick Wotring, producer. Production credits at Jenkins Covington Newman Rath, New York, besides Mr. Jenkins: Frank Nugent, producer.

U.S. Postal Service, Washington, post-produced a :30 in which a new set of presidential stamps was introduced, displayed one per frame to create a layered effect as historic footage was shown in the background. Ira Schweitzer and Art Dome of Image Mix, New York, handled the editing with Will Wright, senior producer, Young & Rubicam.

David Lerner Associates, a New York investment company, has done an animated tv and cable :30 in which the company comes to the assistance of an average investor, depicted as bewildered as he heads down the road of investment decisions. An upcoming print campaign also will mirror the tv cartoon approach. Creative credits:

Music credits at Roy Eaton Music, Roosevelt Island, N.Y.: Roy Eaton, producer, and Wally Strickland, composer/arranger.

Pontiac Dealers Advertising Assn. of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut used a hard-rock, synthesizer music score for its "The Pontiac push is on" campaign. Creative team at David Deutsch Associates, New York: Donald Deutsch and Rich Kirschenbaum, producers. Production credits: Richard Lavsky and Tamara Kline, composers/arrangers, the Music House, also New York.

Bloomingdale's, New York, finished two music video-like tv :30s entitled "Countdown to summer fashion" and "Countdown to summer furniture," both shot at an elegant downtown Manhattan duplex loft. Claude Mogin, a well known fashion and beauty photographer who formed his own production house a year ago, directed the :30s. Creative credits: Bruce Allen, producer, and Doug Bartow, art director, of Grey Advertising, with John Jay, Bloomingdale's creative director. Production team: Mr. Mogin, director, and Declan Quinn, director of photography, both Claude Mogin Productions, with Bob Lampel, producer, BLTV, also New York. Both shops had worked together for Bloomie's on an earlier music video-like project.

place, nobody had ever done it before—and mail-order practitioners are a conservative bunch.

In the second place, you have to pay a premium for every first-class business reply card mailed back to you. And what good are a bunch of "No's"?

What good indeed? Today, we all know that using a Yes/No option usually generates enough additional "Yes" responses to pay for the "No's"—and then some. But nobody knew it then.

That may have been the beginning of database development, which of course the Digest more or less invented years before it became a buzzword. I say "may have been" because I don't know what the Digest did with its No's back in those dear, dead pre-sweepstakes days.

If it was like most other mailers, however, it probably didn't do much with 'em; more's the pity. But that's another story for another column.

What can you do with No's? Before answering that one, let me ask you another. Is a No really a No? Or is it a Yes in disguise? Let's examine this more closely.

What do you do if you really and truly have no use for the product or service described in the mailing you've just opened—if, for example, you're a practicing Catholic and the mailing is for birth control pills?

You scan the headline and throw it away—which, as we know, is what most junk mail recipients do. If the envelope cornercard and teaser copy telegraph that the contents hold absolutely no interest for you, you may even throw it away unopened.

But suppose that the mailing is about something you may be interested in. Suppose, for example, that you are an accountant and the mailing is about a new tax service. (To be continued.)# an inbound facility pay from $14,000 to $75,000 with an average of $37,078. In facilities that handle both inbound and outbound calls, managers earn from $8,000 to $81,000 with an average of $37,036.

For managers, salary represents 82% to 89% of total compensation.

Telemarketing supervisors in outbound centers earn $10,000 to $60,000, averaging $20,461. In inbound facilities, they earn $10,500 to $40,000, averaging $20,244. Those working in combined facilities earn $10,500 to $50,000, averaging $23,646.

For supervisors, salary is about 90% of total compensation.

Telephone sales representatives in outbound facilities make from $3.50 to $33 an hour, averaging $8.41. In inbound centers, they earn from $4 to $16.83 per hour, averaging $7.34. And in combined centers, they earn from $3.55 to $28 per hour, averaging $8.78.

Those salaries represent 81% to 92% of total compensation.

Additional compensation beyond salary comes from profit sharing, guaranteed bonuses, nonguaranteed bonuses, incentive plans and commissions.

Profit-sharing plans and nonguaranteed bonuses are the two most prevalent forms of added compensation in all companies for managers and directors, while supervisors are most likely to have incentive plans and nonguaranteed bonuses.#

New network would chase 'MNF' if ABC bails out

Fox seeking grid lock

By ROBERT RAISSMAN

Fox Broadcasting Co. says it will try to fill a third night in its fledgling fourth tv network with "Monday Night Football" in 1987 if it can avoid setting off a bidding war.

Speculation persists that ABC-TV will not bid to renew "MNF" unless there is a substantial rollback in rights fees. ABC lost a reported $40 million on "MNF" in 1985 and is expected to lose millions more this year.

The National Football League's five-year, $2.1 billion broadcast contract with the three tv networks expires at the end of the 1986 season.

"We look at 'Monday Night Football' as a programing element that could be very beneficial to Fox," said FBC president Jamie Kellner. "However, the only way it would come to us is if ABC decided from a programing standpoint it was damaging, which it is, to their prime time schedule and they would rather go with series programs."

Under new owner Capital Cities Communications, New York, ABC Sports has been following a strategy that remains committed to sports only if it is competitive with other programing as a profit generator.

In the past few months, ABC Sports has failed to renew its contract with the College Football Assn. (ABC has broadcast college football for 23 years). A deal might yet be made, however, or ABC could try to raid CBS' current lineup of Big 10 and Pac 10 games.

ABC also has let it be known that it may not pick up "Monday Night Baseball" after the 1989 season. CBS exec vp Neal Pilson reportedly told Major League Baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth during last week's All-Star Game that CBS would be interested if ABC drops the games.

Stephen Solomon, Capital Cities/ABC senior vp-sports planning, said all ABC's moves were predicated on bringing a "marketplace reality to the sports business." He said ABC has actually added to its sports programing. "We added the Belmont [one of the Triple Crown thoroughbred horse races] and college bas-

Simmons, Scarborough split

Both companies planning '87 ratings studies

By WILLIAM F. GLOEDE

NEW YORK—Simmons-Scarborough Syndicated Research Associates, the supplier of syndicated research used in virtually all national newspaper advertising buys, is no more.

Simmons Market Research Bureau, owned by JWT Group, said it has terminated the partnership with Scarborough Research Corp. that created Simmons-Scarborough Syndicated Research Associates in 1984.

The companies came together in response to pleas from the newspaper industry for a single, comprehensive syndicated study of newspaper audiences in the top 50 markets. It conducted the 1985 Newspaper Ratings Study now in use at 104 major advertising agencies.

SMRB said in a letter mailed July 18 to subscribers to the 1985 study that it plans to conduct its own newspaper ratings study independently of Scarborough later this year for publication in June, 1987.

SMRB president Frank Stanton said the partnership had been ended as of July 17. But Harold Israel, president of Scarborough, said the partnership "as it stands now, is still in effect," and he questioned whether SMRB had the authority to unilaterally terminate the arrangement.

The falling out between the two research suppliers apparently stems from the differing business philosophies of SMRB and Scarborough and the differing personalities of Messrs. Stanton and Israel, sources in the research business said. "I guess that people who know these folks are not surprised," said one source.

Mr. Israel has been seeking new investors in his company and has Tobacco critics start battle for ad restrictions

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—Cigaret advertising critics in Congress built momentum last week for a showdown with the tobacco and advertising industries on Aug. 1.

But a decision to keep Surgeon General Everett Koop from attending last week's anti-tobacco hearing before the House health and environment subcommittee may give some encouragement to advertisers and tobacco marketers when they get their day in the sun.

Last Friday's hearing, devoted to opponents of tobacco advertising, produced little new in testimony from the American Medical Assn., Captain Kangaroo and other witnesses.

The committee is considering whether to recommend restrictions on the $2 billion tobacco marketing industry.

Only five of the committee's 25 members attended the opening hearing, which heard opponents of tobacco ads present their case.

Committee chairman Henry Waxman (D., Cal.) is committed to pressing for some restrictions. Whether his committee will recommend an outright ban, a limitation on imagery or the elimination of the tax deductibility of tobacco ad expenditures may not be known until 1987.

For the first time, the issue of tobacco advertising percolated to the top levels of President Reagan's senior advisers last week. At the urging of White House chief of staff Donald Regan, the Office of Management & Budget blocked plans for Mr. Koop to testify at Friday's hearing. His prepared remarks supported a tobacco ad ban.

Mr. Koop, who had asked to speak for the Reagan Administration, is expected to testify Aug. 1 when the hearings resume. But the White House may send along other spokespersons to argue against an ad ban on legal grounds. An administration spokesman last week went to some lengths to explain that OMB director James Miller III opposed a tobacco ad ban when serving as chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

The principal argument advertisers plan to use next week—that the First Amendment proscribes a ban of truthful advertising for a legal product—was disputed at last week's hearing by the American Medical Assn., which cited the recent Supreme Court decision upholding a ban on casino ads in Puerto Rico (AA, June 16).

There was little new in the testimony of the anti-tobacco forces. The AMA and others claimed the

McNeil challenges Bristol-Myers 3
Johnson & Johnson's McNeil Consumer Products Co. challenged Bristol-Myers Co. in court last week over a tv spot for B-M's Nuprin pain reliever that claims two Nuprin tablets are stronger than J&J's Extra Strength Tylenol.

A jolt for Jartran 4
A court decision upholding a record false-advertising judgment against the Jartran truck-rental company may raise the stakes for marketers engaged in comparative campaigns, ad industry lawyers said last week. But some legal authorities believe the case is so unusual—and the violations so blatant—that the $40 million damage award won by U-Haul International will not have a chilling effect on advertisers that exercise appropriate controls on ad copy.

K-C slims down Huggies 69
Kimberly-Clark Corp. has responded to Procter & Gamble's "thin" challenge in the $2.8 billion U.S. disposable-diaper market, introducing a thin, superabsorbent Huggies diaper into Memphis and Kansas City.

GGK lands a star 52
GGK, one of the most creative European agency groups, is expanding its international operations and has launched a global hunt for creative talent. The agency's first coup came earlier this month when it lured Washington Olivetto, Brazil's top creative director, away from Duailibi, Petit, Zaragoza Propaganda. Mr. Olivetto, an award-winning, internationally known creative talent, will end his 13-year tenure at DPZ to direct GGK's Sao Paulo office.

Nuclear furor in U.K. 53
British Nuclear Fuels, operators of the U.K. government's nuclear energy program, is using its first tv and print campaign to issue 9 million invitations to visit its nuclear fuel complex. At the same time, an antinuclear tv spot by the environmental group Greenpeace was deemed political by the Independent Broadcast Authority and was banned.

Conflict bedevils B&S in Chicago

By JULIE FRANZ

Divesting Backer & Spielvogel's Chicago office is one of several options Saatchi & Saatchi is considering to satisfy a Quaker Oats-General Mills conflict among three of its agencies, according to sources.

The conflicting accounts are Backer's $75 million in billings from Quaker and the combined $150 million in General Mills billings at Ted Bates Worldwide subsidiary Campbell-Mithun, Minneapolis, and DFS Dorland Worldwide, New York. All three agencies are part of the Saatchi & Saatchi network.

But B&S president Carl Spielvogel says he has no intention of resigning the Quaker accounts or

Pepsi may export 7UP's U.S. campaign

'Marriage made in heaven': Beeby

By GARY LEVIN

The $246 million sale of Seven-Up Co.'s international operations to PepsiCo may result in the adaptation of Seven-Up's domestic ad campaign to non-U.S. markets. It also will hasten the expansion of the 7UP brands to new countries, including China, Japan and new markets in Africa and Mexico.

Robert Beeby, president of PepsiCo International, told Advertising Age that the purchase of all non-U.S. brand rights as well as two Canadian bottling plants from Philip Morris Cos. was a "marriage made in heaven" and the prime reason PepsiCo sought the entire Seven-Up beverage business (AA, Jan. 27, et seq.).

The Federal Trade Commission earlier decided to try and stop, on antitrust grounds, Purchase, N.Y.-based PepsiCo's proposed $380 million acquisition of Seven-Up Co. PM then canceled that deal rather than fight the FTC.

The international acquisition, which does not require U.S. approval, gives PepsiCo an immediate 17.8% boost in international sales.

"It was our destiny, and that's why we made a preemptive strike to get it before it went [back] on the market," Mr. Beeby said.

Mr. Beeby also said the company is giving a "careful look" to international expansion of Citrus 7, a 10%-juice-added soft drink now in midwestern and western U.S. test markets (AA, March 3, et seq.).

While stating that he may adapt Leo Burnett USA's "Feels so good comin' down" domestic campaign in overseas markets, Mr. Beeby added that he's "not too impressed" by the same agency's current international work. Burnett won Seven-Up's international business in 1983, but only last year picked up the $45 million domestic account from N W Ayer, New York (AA, June 15, '85).

Although Mr. Beeby said he has

Future looks bright, green for Americans

They're feeling more hopeful, affluent

By LEO J. SHAPIRO and DWIGHT BOHMBACH

Consumers ended the first half of 1986 feeling much more festive and hopeful than most economists did, our Advertising Age National Poll finds. Economists were sounding doubtful about the fiscal future, but consumers were even more upbeat in the second quarter than at the beginning of the year.

Economists worried about a stubborn unemployment rate, despite 1.1 million new jobs added in the first half of 1986. However, our nationwide poll of 1,352 adults found consumers less concerned about recession/unemployment in each successive month of the second quarter.

Economists fretted over consumers' increasingly heavy debt load—now 19% of disposable income, the biggest installment bite since 1979.

But if consumers have been losing any sleep about debt loads, they didn't show it in June. Two out of three households (65%) called this "a good time to make major purchases." One in three (30%, the highest per cent since measurement began in 1975) had a major purchase in mind to take advantage of current prices.

Also, 37% were ready to borrow or use credit for major purchases, the highest level since April, 1986.

Consumer purchases of major goods have been on and off lately. Most Americans have the means and the patience to wait out the market until they see prices they can afford and a favorable deal.

However, when you compare our second-quarter data for consumers under age 40 and those over 40, it's obvious that there is a powerful potential demand for additional credit and major goods, especially among younger households (see chart).

Cars and housing

One in five households was considering borrowing for a car during June, up five points from May.

One in eight (12%) was ready to borrow for housing in both months. Nevertheless, new-home sales fell sharply in April and May. Mortgage interest rates were up, mortgage approvals slow and the average price for a new home had climbed to $116,100—18% higher than a year ago.

Considering all those negative forces, the very fact that so many families persist in planning to buy housing shows how strong the demand remains. While the per cent planning for housing dipped month to month to 15% during the second quarter, the over-all quarterly average was still three points higher than in the first quarter.

Other major goods

Planning to buy major goods during the coming year increased between the first and second quarters in six out of nine major-goods categories: 17% of households reported they may buy housing; 19%, a used car; 26%, furniture; 15%, major appliances; 14%, carpeting, and 43%, hotel accommodations.

Planning to buy color tv and air travel was unchanged from the previous quarter. Planning to buy a new car ticked down a point.

A key factor in consumers' increased inclination to borrow and to plan major puchases during second-quarter 1986, was a general hunch that prices of housing and automobiles, as well as financing rates, would go up in the next six months.

Two out of three consumers were expecting new-car prices to rise (66%), compared with 62% in the first quarter. Six in ten expected housing prices to go up, compared with 58% the quarter before. Expectations of higher interest rates in the future rose each month in the quarter.

Causes for confidence

A general ground swell of confidence in the nation and themselves seems to be sustaining consumers' plans for major purchases.

Last year, we found quarter-to-quarter declines in the per cent of Americans believing "things are getting better for the country," to 39% by the end of 1985. In first-quarter 1986, this ticked up again to 40% and in the second quarter to 41%.

Money in the pocket helps: During second-quarter 1986, an average 47% of households had disposable cash left over at the end of the month, compared with only 41% in the first quarter.

Consumers feel more secure about the economy now, too. At the end of 1985, only 38% of Americans expected the economy to improve in the year ahead. Since then, this has jumped upward nine points to 47%.

Base equal to 1,352 telephone interviews, national polls, April/May/June 1986.

A feeling that inflation is generally under control is a major contributor to this. At the end of 1985, 59% of Americans expected lower inflation in months ahead; this climbed to 66% by second-quarter 1986.

During June, we found 39% of consumers confident that their family will keep up with or ahead of inflation during the year to come. This is the highest level of confidence since last August.

Job and income security also is a key factor. Eight in ten households (77%) reported no layoffs or cuts in hours or pay during both first and second-quarter 1986.

The per cent expecting no job problems in coming months (67%) was three points higher in the second quarter.

The per cent of households reporting increased income this past year (57%) also climbed three points between first and second quarters, while the per cent expecting still higher income in the coming year (54%) rose four points.

People are generally feeling affluent. Three in four households (74%) are at least as well off now as last year at this time; 43% say they are "better off." More (59%) expect to be better off a year from now.

Despite growth in consumer indebtedness, substantially more Americans were finding it "easier to get by and pay bills than a year ago" during the second quarter (40%) than in the first quarter (33%).

The highest per cent (53%) of households we've seen since the presidential election in November 1984, expect to find it even easier to pay bills and get by a year from now.#

a Chalet, a Walgreen's and a Woolworth's close by.

Surround yourself with interesting neighbors. A newspaper editor and a world-class tv commercial producer-director across the street. A stockbroker, too. A lawyer-physician who runs an emergency room doctors' service out of his home. A fantastically ambitious and eminently capable young couple next door operating a day-care facility for 3-to-5-year-olds. Down the street, a slum from which a BMW-driving young priest is rescuing his mother. An advertising person or two, an orthodontist, a photographer, some lawyers, a glee-club director, an organist, a home economist. Just plain folks like you and me.

Arm yourself with a glass of wine or a martini (before dinner or during the day; after dinner, a Remy Martin is in order), a Macanudo and a wife whom you love very much (or, depending on circumstances, a husband whom you love very much, in which case be sure to substitute a Marlboro for the Macanudo).

Then nestle your rear end comfortably on the top step or the second-from-the-top and watch the world go by.

Most strollers or runners are friendly—they'll throw a "Hi" or "How're you doing?" at you as they pass by. Or they'll stop to chat.

You'll see, maybe touch, certainly spend time with the people to whom you refer as "out there" when you're busy making ads or writing strategies. Those "out theres" are right here, in all sizes and shapes and colors and states of monetary liquidity.

Maybe you're spending time with them right now, as I am. Certainly your ads must be better for that.

In summer, too, when the weathermen are telling you that it's lower near the lake, you see all kinds of bodies in various stages of undress flocking toward the park and beaches. Eye-boggling! Mind-bending!

You can read on the stoop (yes, it's still in style) or you can do the New York Times puzzles. You can daydream and plot and fill your camera with wonders. You can exchange gossip with your neighbors, and you can join them in the frustrating game of trying to quell a runaway car alarm.

Never, never, never a dull moment.

More than anything else, you can find peace within yourself, a peace that comes of relaxation (car alarms notwithstanding), a peace nourished by warm encounters with people passing your stoop whom you may never see again but whom you know you know.

There's just nothing like a window on the world right from your own stoop. Beats taking Valium every Sunday night.

So if you're ever in the neighborhood anytime from spring through fall, and if you're interested in the fine art of stoop-sitting, look for the bearded, bald, old geezer with a cigar in one hand and a glass in the other.

It's never too early to start planning your own retirement.#

Liquor Marketing

Spirits marketers lighten up in lean times

By Ed Fitch

Americans may be eating enough fruit to make Carmen Miranda's head spin; it's a perfect compromise between their indigenous sweet tooth and health-oriented social pressures. After what seemed to be a national fascination with the seven deadly sins—particular emphasis on sloth and gluttony—Americans are swapping sweets for sweat almost calorie for calorie.

As the fitness boom hit its stride, soft drinks surpassed water as the national beverage in 1983. Consumption of fruit juices jumped 5% from 1984 to 1985, according to New York-based Impact, a liquor industry newsletter. Distillers have joined the race, pursuing sweeter, lower calorie alternatives and promoting mixed concoctions of their traditional brands that would make a shot-and-a-beer man swoon.

The only other option is to lose customers, something that has happened for four years in a row—and 1986 figures should perpetuate the trend. Distilled spirit consumption has slid from 164.6 million cases in 1981 to 153.9 million cases in 1985, according to Jobson's Liquor Handbook, 1986, New York.

No one sees the writing on the wall more clearly than the people on the other side of the polished mahogany. Mirroring the industry's 1.6% drop last year, "per capita consumption definitely is down—around 1% per year for us," says Bob King, bar manager of Hillary's, located in Chicago's posh Water Tower Place, and de facto beverage manager, Levy Organization, which owns 20 Chicago-area bars and restaurants.

Data from Impact makes Hillary's 1% decline seem rather small. The industry newsletter reports distilled spirit shipments fell to 72 million 9-liter cases in 1985, down 2.7% from 1984.

Mr. King attributes the continued decline not only to changing times, but a lack of time. The Bob King, bar manager of Hillary's in Chicago, warns that consumers' tastes change. "Look at disco music; from all the rage to gone in a couple of years."

"The distillers are like auto manufacturers; they have a car for every taste and those tastes are primarily plebian," says Joe Danno, owner of Bucket O Suds.

Marketers lighten up

biggest consumers of liquor products are ages 18 to 45, particularly those age 23 to 35, he says.

"In the last five years this core age group has fallen into the health and fitness crazes, purchased houses, experienced greater job market pressures; basically their time for consumption is down."

When they do drink, it's largely products or drinks that weren't on the market 10 years ago. "There has been a definite shift away from the hard-line categories like brown goods, drinks on the rocks," says Mr. King, Hillary's resident bartender/MBA. "These types of drinks are taking a beating."

Numbers back up his notion. Total whisky consumption continued its plunge, down 5.4% in 1985, according to Liquor Handbook, while nonwhisky products nosed up 1.5%.

Across town and 500 yuppies away, the story is the same at the Bucket O Suds. "In general, people don't like the taste of whisky. That's what's motivating the cocktail trade and all the new mixes of products they're coming out with now," says Joe Danno, who entered the business after Prohibition 53 years ago, and has been a wholesaler, retailer and bar owner.

A whisky historian who contends he fired the first shot and beer chaser, Mr. Danno stocks some 1,000 different distilled spirits in an age when only about 600 brands are being marketed. "There are two things I can't understand. The quality of people's taste today, and the quality of the product the distillers are producing.

"The distillers are like auto manufacturers; they have a car for every taste and those tastes are primarily plebian," Mr. Danno says.

Consumers don't ask for quality because no one carries it anymore, he says. "They should bring a quality product to the people and let them decide for themselves. The brands are clones of clones. If you walk into a liquor store, you see the same five or six brands; 1,000 out of 1,000 bars carry the Seagram's line."

The scotch segment, which posted the best performance in the whisky category with a 3% decline last year, according to Liquor Handbook, is doing comparatively well because it maintains quality standards, Mr. Danno says. "Scotch gives you something for your money."

The premium and call business is doing well across category boundaries, Hillary's Mr. King says, because these products meet taste requirements and deliver an acceptable image-per-dollar balance.

Distillers have succeeded in meeting consumer demands for more taste intensive products through liqueurs, schnapps and fruit-based products, Mr. King says.

"Liqueurs and juice mixers—drinks like the Fuzzy Navel—are really on the rise. People love these because they can come into a bar, have several, not look like a fool and leave in basically the same shape as they came in," he says.

The industry has tried to improve its shape both at home and on premise by catapulting these kinds of products into the market with almost wild abandon. According to Liquor Handbook, 115 of the 147 products introduced in 1985 were brandies, cognacs, cordials, liqueurs, prepared cocktails or spirit-based coolers. Impact reports the specialties category was the only major spirit group to gain in 1985, up 5.2% to 33 million cases.

Mr. King cautions distillers about reading too much into these brands' sales success, saying consumers' palates are finicky beasts.

"Look at disco music; from all the rage to gone in a couple of years."

The new products will be just as cyclical and probably as short lived, he says. "Instead of concentrating on all the new fad products, distillers should redirect their interest to the traditional categories that got them where they are."

A select group of consumers—especially women, the target of most of the new lighter drinks—is renewing interest in traditional categories, Mr. Danno says. Catering to women's tastes for all products would be a smart move, he says. "The macho thing is gone; a lot of men want the lighter taste. The idea is to enjoy the taste and flavor."

Mr. King also sees a swing in the cycles, saying big tasting cocktails are on the rise. "Some of the things that were first to fade away are coming back."

The industry as a whole should look forward to better days, he says. "Classically, the industry has gone through 15-year cycles—first it was the McCarthy era, then the effects of the 1968 social rebellion."

Inherent generational rebellion also should boost distilled spirit sales, Mr. King says. Children entering the drinking market will begin looking for an alternative to their parents' primary choices of wine and beer. "We drank beer in college, and a generation ago they drank bourbon," he says. "I think it will swing back, but it will take awhile."

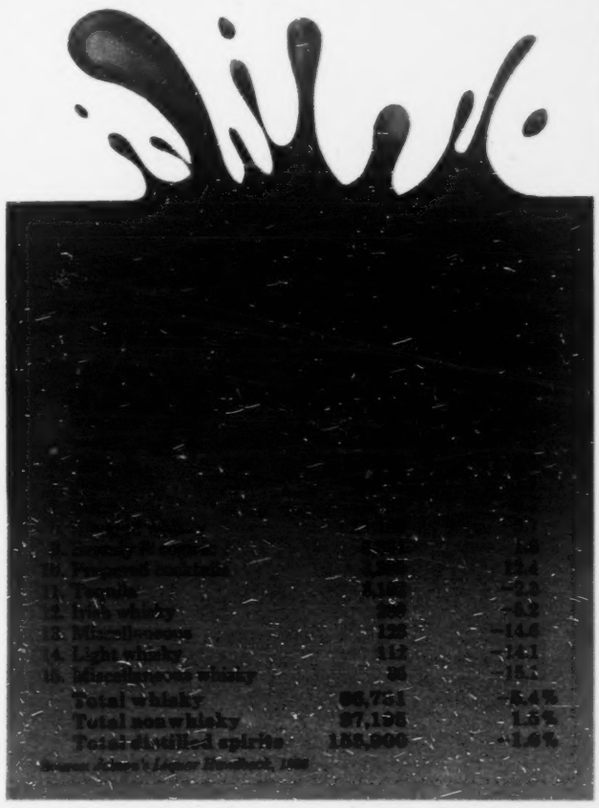
The beer and wine generation also may start trading mugs for highball glasses with greater frequency. "As they become more affluent, they're going to go to more dinner parties and you don't throw a cooler full of beer out at a dinner party," Mr. King says.

This generation is so cost-benefit oriented, and cocktails always have delivered the most bang for the buck, he says.

Mr. King, like Mr. Danno, clamors for a return to quality. "Distillers should concentrate on putting back the elan and image in classic products. They should be ready to step into the void if beer and wine are bounced from tv. I'd focus on the needs of 30-year-olds, who will hit their peak earning power in five years."

They also may be returning to some of those good old vices like sloth and gluttony. The number of joggers has run downhill since 1980.

Although most observers say the liquor industry has contracted permanently, if distillers expand their quality offerings they may not lap the health trend but they probably will close the distance. ■



Industry is sweet on flavored schnapps

By Patricia Winters

Just a few years ago executives at some major distillers probably would have snickered if they had been told their only product introductions in 1986 would be a variety of schnapps.

The liquor, with its name and roots planted deeply in northern Germany heritage, did not exactly have mass market potential. The strong, syrupy drink was consumed mainly by workmen and students who chased shots of it with beer and farmers who quaffed the stuff on cold winter days.

Besides that, Hiram Walker was the longtime leader in the category with its 50-year-old peppermint schnapps, a product that had not been challenged seriously in the market.

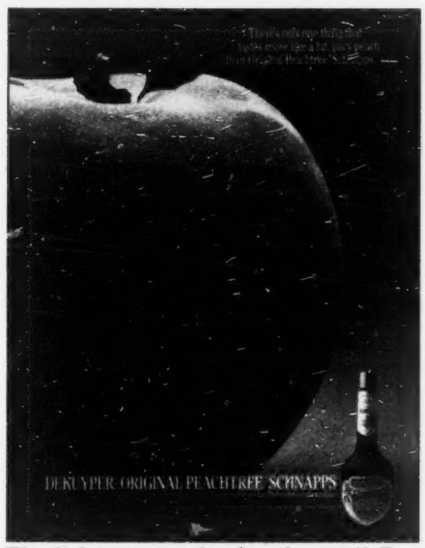
But in the past year, nearly every major national distiller and a number of regional marketers have jumped into or expanded their presence in the flavored schnapps category. An Advertising Age poll of 10 major distillers showed that of the 45 products they introduced from June, 1985, to June, 1986, 31 were some variety of schnapps.

Fueled by 1985's legendary success of New York-based National Distillers Products Co.'s DeKuyper Original Peachtree schnapps, flavored schnapps have become the darlings of the downward sliding distilled spirits industry.

The DeKuyper line—particularly Peachtree—lifted the industry out of the pits. Its case depletions climbed from 1.55 million in 1984 to about 3.01 million in 1985, up some 94%, according to New York-based Impact. This performance catapulted the line from the 21st best selling brand in 1984 to No. 9 in 1985, and gave it 15% of the cordial category and 1.7% of the distilled spirits business.

Not surprisingly, National suddenly has a lot of competition. Other companies banging heads with National's DeKuyper line include Hiram Walker, Seagram Distillers' Leroux line, Seagram's 375 Spirits' Dr. McGillicuddy's, Glenmore Distilleries' Mr. Boston line, Heublein's Arrow line, Schenley Industries' Nouvelle line and James B. Beam Distilling's Baron Von Scheuters, among others.

The drinks stalk the right trend at the right time. Offering less alcohol—about 40 proof to 48 proof—the potential for mixability and a full, fruity flavor, they appeal to the important and hard-to-target under-35 age group. In addition, flavored schnapps has brought women into the category and to distilled spirits, and marketers now say the category appeals to as many women as men.



The industry was in the pits until DeKuyper's Peachtree schnapps gave it a boost.

New users have more than doubled the category's volume from 2.1 million cases in 1983 to 5 million cases in 1985, according to New York-based Market Watch, an industry publication. Current industry estimates place case depletions at 5.5 million annually—and growing.

"We are the No. 1 schnapps line in the country, surpassing Hiram Walker in 1985," Todd Middleton, National's vp-marketing, says of DeKuyper. "And our competitors have not taken it lightly. They are throwing out a lot of flavors and hoping one sticks. If it doesn't, they replace one with another."

Even those involved warn the market won't support all the brands. Observers say the winners of the inevitable shakeout will be those with strong distribution capabilities, ad promotion budgets and rich, full flavors. Early market entry is also a plus.

"If you were a company just coming out with a schnapps line, you've missed the boat," says Meredith Galassi, marketing manager for Farmington, Conn.-based Heublein's Arrow cordial line. "The distributors don't even want to talk to you. They're schnappsed-out. The industry has virtually covered the flavor [spectrum]."

Ms. Galassi and others, however, are hardly tolling the category's death knell. Industry players estimate the market will grow this year anywhere from Mr. Middleton's conservative estimate of about 5% to Ms. Galassi's optimistic figure of 100% to 150%. They also see opportunities in segments of the country that have not yet caught on to the schnapps explosion, most notably major metropolitan areas.

"We've not reached the saturation point anywhere," Mr. Middleton says. "There's still a lot of opportunity—the metropolitan areas are only part of it. There's huge opportunity in the South, for example."

By all accounts, the Midwest instigated the schnapps revolution. The habit of belting down a bit of peppermint schnapps was passed down through generations of grain belt farmers.

In fall, 1982, Lousiville, Ky.-based Glenmore introduced Mr. Boston's Apple schnapps, the nation's first fruit-flavored schnapps. But Glenmore's pioneering effort had its drawbacks.

"We were the first," says James H. McKee, senior brand manager, Mr. Boston line. "We didn't know what we had. We lost the initial momentum."

National picked up where Glenmore left off, and less than a year after Mr. Boston's Apple hit the market, National rolled out its DeKuyper Apple Barrel. Despite little promotion and no consumer advertising, sales took off.

But it was not until DeKuyper's Peachtree flavor hit retail in late 1984 that distillers began to stand up and take notice. Peachtree began racking up sales immediately. By the end of 1985, case depletions totaled 1.3 million, making it the biggest selling success story in the distilled spirits industry.

Part of that success, Mr.

Ad-sales relationship not always cordial

If there's an argument to be made for advertising's effectiveness, it's the case of the DeKuyper line's case depletions. National Distillers Products Co. boosted national ad spending for the line 66.7% from 1984 to 1985, reaching $2.5 million, according to Impact, New York. At the same time, it moved almost 94% more cases: Cause and effect.

Agency executives should calm themselves, however. The only other distilled spirit in the top 25 to post a double-digit gain was E&J Brandy, which boosted case depletions 12.9% to almost 1.8 million in 1985. It reduced its ad budget 90% to $100,000 in 1985. Cause and effect?

DeKuyper's success hinges on more than ad dollars. But media weight has helped it tell its story—and a good one it is.

National's prominence gives it a definite advantage, observers say. Promotions, in-store displays and ads via BBDO, New York, prominently play up the DeKuyper name and identify it as "America's #1 Cordial Line." DeKuyper's six schnapps flavors are backed in 1986 by a healthy $5 million ad budget.

For years, Hiram Walker was the leading ad spender in the schnapps category, budgeting between $2.6 million and $3.2 million for its peppermint schnapps, says Bill Buesching, vp, director-marketing projects at Detroit-based Hiram Walker. According to Impact, the big drop came in 1985 when national ad spending plunged from $2.6 million in 1984 to $1.5 million, below 1980 spending levels.

Hiram Walker cordials posted a 7.4% gain in case depletions from 1984 to 1985.

"We'll be competitive [with DeKuyper this year], but we won't necessarily match them dollar for dollar," Mr. Buesching says. "We do things our own way."

Its ad budget will reflect a push for its peach-flavored product, a break from its traditional multiproduct approach. In August the company will break a new national consumer print and outdoor campaign, handled by McCaffrey & McCall, New York, and focusing on its Jubilee Peach flavor. The peppermint schnapps print campaign also will continue.

Also scheduled to break advertising soon—via Doyle Dane Bernbach, New York—is New York-based Seagram Distilling's LeRoux cordials. The line's ad spending fell below $50,000 in 1985 from a high of $2.2 million in 1981, according to Impact. Its 1984 to 1985 ad spending plunge of 96.4% was the most severe among top cordial and liqueur brands.

While LeRoux's schnapps line has had little ad support, Tony Bongiovanni, LeRoux senior product manager, says this year the company will introduce breakthrough advertising for its new flavors.

LeRoux recently rolled out five new flavored schnapps and will introduce two more in the fall, he says. LeRoux peppermint schnapps, which dates to Prohibition, is the sixth best selling schnapps in the U.S.

Louisville, Ky.-based Glenmore Distilleries is re-examining its advertising, anticipating breaking new campaigns this fall for its Mr. Boston line. Of all the major schnapps lines, Mr. Boston has been the most aggressive with image advertising. While most schnapps advertise flavor, Glenmore's ads focus on drinkers.

One round of advertising last year was themed a "Baby Boomers Guide to Nutcracker Schnapps." The ads, which appeared in publications like National Lampoon and Rolling Stone, gave consumers tips on what to wear, talk about and eat with Nutcracker schnapps.

Via Bloom Advertising, New York, Glenmore is promoting its newest flavor, Mr. Boston's Boss-Berry, in trade ads and on-premise with a takeoff on Bruce Springsteen's popularity. Ads headlined "It's the Boss!" show the bottle wearing Mr. Springsteen's trademark red neckerchief and are tagged "poured in the U.S.A."

Farmington, Conn.-based Heublein is focusing all its ad efforts in the schnapps category on its new Peaches 'N Cream liqueur. Ads, via Leber Katz Partners, New York, show a peach slice dripping with cream.

The Arrow line, which has 15 flavors and the fourth largest schnapps brand in Arrow peppermint, also cut national ad spending dramatically from 1984 to 1985. The 75% decline brought the line's expenditures down to $300,000, according to Impact.

As DeKuyper's sales increases parallel boosts in ad spending, more schnapps marketers might look to greater ad expenditures as the cause behind the effect.

Middleton says, was because of new technology that gave National the ability to cull a particularly rich, full peach flavor. But equally as important was timing. Just as the company started shaking peaches from the tree, the nation's new drinkers began looking for lower proof but fuller tasting drinks.

"The focus today is on flavor," says Bill Buesching, Detroit-based Hiram Walker's vp, director-marketing projects. "That's what it's all about—it's a reflection of life style. Consumers today want something that tastes good the first time."

DeKuyper received an unexpected windfall when it discovered drinkers in New York and the Midwest were a step ahead in creating new flavors. The Fuzzy Navel, a mix of peach schnapps and orange juice, "spread like wildfire," Mr. Middleton says.

Rather than throw its dollars at advertising, National capitalized on the drink in press releases and on premises with Fuzzy Navel Nights. Later, National began running ads tagged "it's love at first sip."

That has been the sip that launched thousands of sales. Market Watch's September, 1985, ranking of the top 10 schnapps brands listed four DeKuyper products: Peachtree in first place, followed by Apple Barrel in third, Peppermint in fifth and Mountain Strawberry in ninth. The company, he says, will continue to bring out a new flavor every six months or so.

Hiram Walker lost the momentum its peppermint schnapps had established by not bringing out new flavors fast enough; it didn't add its first flavored entry until spring, 1985. The company now has 15 flavors and is working to use its name to overtake some brands.

"There's not another logo in the business that has the consumer response and name for quality and value," Mr. Buesching says. "We are to schnapps what Campbell's is to soup."

Sales of the company's peppermint schnapps grew about 12% in 1985 and it remains No. 2. Even percentages like this don't convince everyone—even some who have hopped onto the schnapps trend—of the category's long-term potential.

Although James B. Beam Distilling Co., Chicago, created Baron Von Scheuters to have a presence in the segment, Lane Barnett, vp, director-advertising and marketing, says he is skeptical about flavored schnapps' staying power.

"It's driven by a group that is constantly experimenting with new flavors and products. They go on to what's new and hot, and leave behind what's not."

The same can be said for the marketers. "We expect that in another couple of years there will be only a few major brands competing," says Patricia Wiley, director-new product development at National. "So many people are throwing together products just to ride the wave of interest without putting in any quality."

The quality must go in, she says, before the company's name is added.

Mixed up products shake boundaries

By Pat McGeehan

It could be the ultimate case of the pot calling the kettle black. Several distillers launched premixed cocktails in the past two years, but, almost to a person, executives of those companies want to disassociate their products from the rest.

"I personally don't like to call it a premixed cocktail," says Mark Mather, New York-based Kobrand Corp.'s new product manager-spirits of Beefeater Gin & Tonic. "Premixed cocktails are dusty, dirty, too strong, too weak," he says, describing public perceptions. "People grab 'em and drink 'em on their way home from work. We are trying to position Beefeater Gin & Tonic as a premium, ready-made product," explaining the Beefeater name's prominence on the label and the glass container.

Lane Barnett, vp, director-advertising and marketing for Chicago-based James B. Beam Distilling Co., defines the company's Zzzinger's line not as a premixed cocktail, but as a "low-alcohol refreshment product."

Either way—low-alcohol refreshment product or premium, ready-made beverage—Beam's and Kobrand's new products fit the basic mold of premixed cocktails, a combination of distilled spirits and just about anything.

But, as Beam's Mr. Barnett says, "The defining lines are becoming very fuzzy. It all relates to trying to change popular perceptions of what a premixed cocktail is."

Beam combines its best-selling Jim Beam bourbon with cola, ginger ale, lemon-lime soda and lemonade, stressing the portability and quick-chilling aspects of its six-packs of 12-oz. cans.

Ancient Age Distilling Co. adds cola to its namesake bourbon in 1-liter plastic bottles. Medley Distilling Co., Louisville, Ky., sells its five-item rum and vodka-based Skol Quickies line in 375-ml. cans. Federal Distillers, Cambridge, Mass., mixes vodka with lemonade and watermelon flavoring under its Tango label.

As Ferdie Falk, owner of Roslyn, N.Y.-based Ancient Age, says, the new products just add to the confusion in a category that once was simple to identify. "I'm not sure the damned things can even be classified yet."

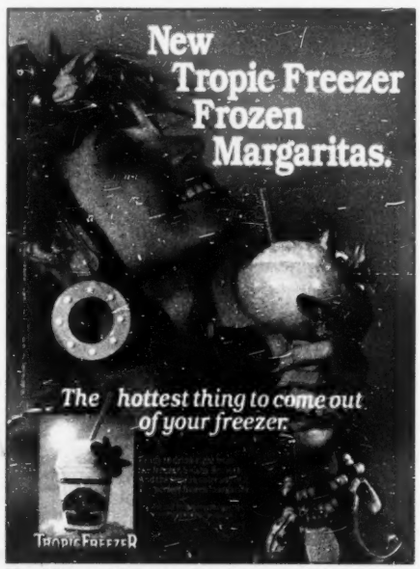
Some critics contend the products—particularly the canned goods—are an attempt to equate distilled spirits and soft drinks. Mr. Barnett says the packaging is merely an attempt to promote convenience.

"When you're out fishing, you don't want to lug around a huge bottle of bourbon and a mixer," he says. "We certainly have no intention of comparing the products to soft drinks."

Far from imitating soft drinks, the packaging of one of the category's newest entries resembles that of yogurt or ice cream. This spring Farmington, Conn.-based Heublein introduced a line of freeze-and-serve cocktails, called Tropic Freezers, packaged in 200-ml. plastic cups that are sold frozen or thawed, individually or in four-packs. The line includes a margarita and strawberry margarita and peach and strawberry daiquiris.

John Glover, Heublein's director-new product marketing, is one of the few marketing executives willing to accept his products' membership in the stigmatized category. "We fit, obviously, into the premixed cocktail category, but we're expanding the boundaries," he says.

Heublein, however, is trying to isolate Tropic Freezers in retail outlets. The company offers retailers 6-cu.-ft. storage freezers and permanent free-standing floor displays.



Heublein achieves an icy separation between categories with its Tropic Freezer line.

"The uniqueness of [the freezer offer and floor display] has gotten us a lot of attention," says Dave McDonough, Heublein's vp-product development. "It helps separate us from any other category, period."

Heublein wanted to stay away from traditional premixed cocktails, he says, because they don't turn over fast and, therefore, are placed poorly at retail. "They end up being in areas that are not high-traffic."

Kobrand also seeks its own space for Beefeater & Tonic, offering retailers a free-standing display that resembles a giant version of the product, Mr. Mather says. "It was developed for the purpose of keeping it away from other prepared cocktails and giving it its own identity as a premium product."

Companies want to avoid having their products lumped in with traditional premixed cocktails because they view the category as one whose time never really came but certainly is gone. Sales of premixed cocktails increased last year for the first time since 1980, primarily because of the introduction of Zzzingers, industry observers say. Beam moved 400,000 cases of Zzzingers from its May, 1985, introduction to year's end; the company expects to deplete 600,000 cases in 1986.

Premixed cocktail consumption rose from a little less than 3 million cases in 1984 to about 3.2 million last year, according to Jobson's Liquor Handbook, 1986, a New York-based industry publication. Jobson's projects 1986 consumption will remain stable or gain slightly because of Tropic Freezers' launch.

Most industry executives acknowledge specialty products, such as Tropic Freezers and Zzzingers, are the category's best hope for growth. But some say the new offshoots may boost sales of more traditional premixed cocktails.

"I see the new products and forms as welcome additions to the category," says Constance Williams, Heublein's marketing director-prepared drinks and scotch. The pioneer and perennial kingpin of premixed cocktails, Heublein commands more than 55% of the category between its Heublein and The Club brands.

"Our intent is to take the hot new flavors and concentrate on them," she says, adding that Heublein keeps an eye on on-premise trends by interviewing bartenders and customers in markets known for setting trends.

Ms. Williams says the company is focusing its efforts this summer on two new flavors, Seabreeze—Smirnoff vodka and cranberry juice—and a Gold Margarita made with Jose Cuervo Especial tequila.

"Higher-proof products have been the guts of Heublein's business," says Benjamin Corrado, a Pompano Beach, Fla.-based industry consultant. "But I think they can work both sides of the street. Why not?"

Dallas-based Schenley Industries, Heublein's primary competitor with an estimated 20% market share, appears to place similar faith in the future of premixed cocktails. The company recently introduced a wine cooler, a line of low-proof flavored schnapps and a Fuzzy Navel and grouped them along with its Cocktails for Two line under a new banner, Lite Libations.

Schenley is updating its cocktails line to keep up with the times, says Gary Martin, Schenley's vp-marketing.

"We did a lot of analyzing of the spirits business," says Richard Chapman, brand manager for Schenley. "We're seeing major changes among consumers, especially women. They want lower proof, sweeter taste and they're trading up."

Louisville-based Glenmore Distilleries Co. takes a dimmer view of the category's propects. "Indications are that it is still declining," says James McKee, senior brand manager, who oversees Glenmore's Mr. Boston line. "The dew is off the thing.

"The real pluses in this category are the specialty products," he says, pointing to Zzzingers as an example. "But I don't think there is much benefit to the traditional premixed cocktails."

Mr. Boston's market share has slipped "a point or so" from the 8% it claimed two years ago, Mr. McKee says. "That's a function, too, of the fact that we have not supported the line with massive advertising and promotion. For now, we're going to concentrate on the mixing trend with our schnapps."

Like its competitors, Schenley has not devoted many dollars to advertising its premixed cocktails. In previous years, the company placed ads in consumer magazines, but last year used no measured media, according to Leading National Advertisers. Schenley will promote its premixed line with a tv campaign this summer for Cocktails for Two wine cooler, the first time the Cocktails for Two name will appear on the tube.

Heublein is spending about $500,000 for Tropic Freezer ads, created by DYR, New York, and placed in People and Sports Illustrated in its three initial markets—Chicago, Connecticut and Florida; late summer will see the product in California and Texas. After virtually no media support for about a year, a 1987 ad campaign is being prepared for the Heublein and Club brands, Ms. Williams says.

Outdoor boards, handled by Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, Chicago, represent Beam's Zzzingers' first consumer push. Retailers are welcoming the ad support, saying it is necessary when several wine coolers are being backed with annual budgets of $20 million or more.

Harold Binstein, president of Gold Standard, a Chicago-based retailer, says Zzzingers haven't been too successful in his stores, which puzzles him. "As popular as bourbon is in Chicago, I thought it would be a natural."

Kobrand, which introduced its Beefeater & Tonic at a boat show in England, has used boating events and publications to introduce the product in the U.S. through New York-based AC&R-created ads.

Unlike the cash and carry nature of most of the newer premixed brands, the product's 200-ml. glass container conjures up more traditional images of liquor products.

"We anticipate in-home consumption," Mr. Mather says. "That's part of the reason for positioning it as a 'great gin and tonic' and not just a portable one. What we're trying to do is to elevate the status of the premixed cocktail."

Breaking the bottle mold

close to the bottle, carries the headline "Absolut attraction." Another ad, headlined "Absolut summit," ran during last year's East-West summit. "The 'Absolut blank' works forever," Mr. Costello says.

"Absolut Warhol" and an Andy Warhol rendering of the bottle was Carillon president and chief executive officer Michel Roux's idea. "We were hesitant because it broke the photography format we had established, but he was right," he says. "The thinking is not to deviate from the sense of the campaign, but to keep it fresh."

Another way the agency accomplishes this is to play with page shapes and ad positioning. A recent ad shows an Absolut bottle wrapped in chains and tagged "Absolut security." The following right-hand page, labeled "Absolut larceny," shows the broken chains lying at the spot where the bottle had been.

TBWA employs tactics like this because distillers are not simply battling each other for readers' attention. It may be a small task to rise above other liquor ads, Mr. Costello says, "but it is never easy to stand out in the clutter of tv, print, newspapers, wherever."

Bigger budgets aren't the answer, he says, but consistency and continuity are. "Marketers must latch onto an idea, put it in the chest, lock it up with a key and say they'll run with it until hell freezes over. It always is possible to stimulate within an existing campaign."

When things aren't going well, which they aren't for many brands, ads should be evaluated equally with variables like distribution and pricing.

The industry's over-all poor performance makes breaking the bottle mold a requirement. But many factors preclude companies from doing this. "There is still an ultraconservative approach because this is a privilege business and no one wants to rock the boat," Mr. Kavanagh says.

Consumers and government and special interest watchdogs are not the only captains in that boat. Schieffelin's campaign for its Glenmorangie scotch initially was not well received by suppliers because it was not the "old boy's club style of selling scotch," he says. "Although we have been fortunate in that most of our suppliers have been willing to try far-out things. It's important to show suppliers that even a brand with a small budget can shake people up."

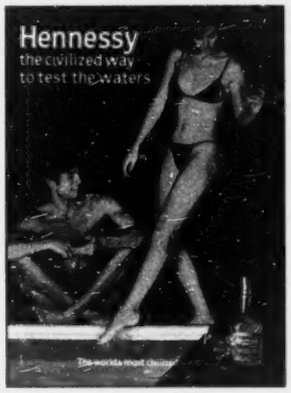
Shake up, down and sideways is what the Hennessy campaign has done to the industry and the market. One of the industry's sweetest taboos, sexuality, has been the blatant backbone of the approach.

The ad has produced major gains in awareness and generated a lot of mail, Mr. Kavanagh says, "a lot of it positive and some very negative. But we have added 180,000 cases since the advertising broke."

This sales increase and the campaign's saucy nature led one of Hennessy's competitors to petition the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States to impose a sanction on the campaign and protect the industry's sacred reputation. "The result was a unanimous decision that while the ads went toward the edge of acceptability, they did not step over that edge," he says.

"We can never go as far as Calvin Klein. No one would ever try," Mr. Kavanagh says. "We are much too regulated an industry. But any method of communication that meets the sales objective should be considered, be it based in humor, sex or a straight forward sell."

SSC&B's Mr. Wilde toasts that suggestion. "The booze people are too rooted in tradition. They need to start the process from where the consumers are, not from where they are."



The traditional bottle-and-glass ad and boy-meets-girl genre take on new shapes and forms in the hands of some distillers and their agencies.

Numbers don't tell the whole truth in ad spending

By Ed Fitch

In media, numbers talk. The tale liquor industry numbers tell magazine publishers is one of woe.

The 1985 American Magazine Conference was rife with foreboding. At the time, Lynn Mapes, vp-associate publisher, Reader's Digest, reported publishers saw space sales of liquor products deteriorating as distillers traded magazine-size sheets of paper for eight and 30 sheet outdoor boards (AA, Oct. 7). Telltale numbers back Mr. Mapes' supposition.

The top 10 1985 distilled spirits magazine advertisers trimmed their spending in the medium 6.8% to $180 million from 1984's level of $193.2 million, according to Impact, a New York-based industry newsletter. It's no surprise publishers' spirits were low.

But numbers don't tell the whole story. Impact reports Dewar's, the industry's advertising kingpin, cut $400,000 from its total 1985 expenditures to $11.6 million. However, Gary Martin, vp-marketing, Schenley Industries, Dallas, reports the brand's budget is higher than ever. "We have no intention of decreasing Dewar's ad spending."

The dollars listed by Impact do not accurately reflect Dewar's activity, he says. "When people talk about ad expenditures, they look at measured media sources." Such media forms as local and regional magazines and newspaper run of press are not included in these analyses, Mr. Martin says.

National ad expenditures for liquor marketing, a regional activity, would not spot subtle shifts in media spending mandated by short-term programs. "If you are looking to build awareness in Milwaukee, for example, you don't place an ad in a national magazine," he says. "We have made no conscious long-term shifts to other media forms, and we're not moving away from print."

Many recently introduced distilled spirits are specialties, which typically have more geographically limited franchises than traditional category brands. The ad budget for Fletcher & Oakes, Chicago-based James B. Beam Distilling Co.'s new spirit-based spritzer, wouldn't set any spending records. "But if you took what we're spending on a local level and projected it out on a national basis it would be very substantial," says Lane Barnett, Beam's vp, director-marketing and advertising.

Schieffelin & Co.'s Hennessy, the industry's 13th biggest advertiser, was one of only 13 of the top 25 advertised brands to have its budget increased in 1985, according to Impact. J. Penn Kavanagh, the New York-based company's chairman, chief executive officer and president, says more distillers are expressing frustration with the print medium, however. "It has become more a vehicle to maintain awareness rather than a dynamic vehicle to shape image.

"What frustrates them is it takes a very long time to change attitudes through print advertising," he says. And changing consumer attitudes is front and center on most distillers' craniums these days.

Although he reiterates Schenley's unwavering commitment to advertising, Mr. Martin says the continuing industry downturn has caused some marketers to question advertising's value in creating sales.

Little correlation exists between sales and ad awareness, says Don Wilde, vp, SSC&B: Lintas Worldwide, New York. "The problem is the testing services aren't reliable in determining the exact relation between ad awareness and product purchases. And awareness is not the goal, but increasing sales is."

Advertising and marketing are likely areas to trim some fat when times are lean, Mr. Barnett says. Although Beam plans to maintain its 1986 budget for its namesake brand at the same level as 1985, "if things soften up we can make short-term modifications in advertising toward the end of the year without having a major effect on our brand," he says.

Many companies are increasing promotional activity to meet immediate marketing objectives, Mr. Kavanagh says. "But promotions have become sort of a dynamic Band-Aid."

Not much thought is put into motivating consumers with promotions, he says. "An awful lot of the extensive retail display activity is to bribe the retailer into picking up another three cases of the product."

Visible promotions also have become essential to generate wholesaler interest. "With the ranks of distributors shrinking, companies have to do more to gain their attention," Mr. Ka-

My ad manager stinks!

Yes, he gets my ads written in time to meet closing dates (barely!).
Sure, he sees to all the "details" that are part of getting ads placed properly.

BUT...

I ask for an ad that lets the public know I will beat or match the best prices in the Screenprinted Sportswear Industry.
He gives me a phrase like "competitively priced".

I want him to tell folks about our excellent record with time-critical deliveries.
His copy reads "Fast service".

I want him to assure people that no one, no where prints t-shirts better.
All he can come up with is "fine quality".

I tell him he's dull...
He tells me I don't know squat about advertising.

YOU BE THE JUDGE...

Call me at 1-800-241-1052 or write me and tell me if I'm the one who is crazy or if I should fire the smart-ass college kid!
By the way, let me send you our free color catalog at the same time.

Where America goes for Promotional Clothes

The people who distill and market package goods should study package goods approaches. The situation is similar, he says, "because in the package goods industry a number of people are producing the same product and striving to break through the ad clutter and sameness of the brands."

If Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. can take a lighthearted approach to life and death issues by using Peanuts characters, Mr. Wilde says, liquor marketers can loosen up a bit. "The reason is simple: The buying generation was raised on things like Snoopy."

He also cites International Business Machines' use of Charlie Chaplin's "Little Tramp," which plays off this group's love of movies. "They were raised on tv, movies, standup comics, cartoons," Mr. Wilde says. Approaches based on these facets —along with celebrity endorsements, fitness appeals and straight product sell—should be thrown into the conceptual hopper, he says.

The need to upgrade ads is stronger than ever, Schenley's Mr. Martin says, because of the decline of the middle class of spirits. "It will evolve to a point where the only two types of brands remaining will be premiums and popular price."

Premium shoppers, he says, are buying image. This means taking chances with that image to create impact. Of the about 600 liquor brands, some 300 are advertised, Schieffelin's Mr. Kavanagh says.

"Society has been rousing distillers from their sleep with all the regulations, liability, lighter drinks and organizations like MADD [Mothers Against Drunk Driving]," Mr. Wilde says. "If the world has changed that much, they have to change their advertising."

Everyone is reluctant to change, he says, "except when they are forced to do it. That scenario is at hand: Change or die."

vanagh says.

Wholesaler consolidation has contributed to heightened promotional activity, but distilled spirits marketers always have held promotions in high regard, says Patricia Wiley, director-new product development, National Distillers, New York. "Both media and promotional budgets are going up. Distillers are no more frustrated with print advertising than previously."

Striking a balance between promotion and advertising is the key, Mr. Barnett says. "You have to pull as well as push. The problem with point-of-purchase is it reaches people who already are predisposed to the product."

Mr. Kavanagh links any increases in outdoor spending to pressure from the distribution chain. "The wholesaler loves outdoor because he sees it when he drives through town and feels it supports him more than an ad in The New Yorker." From a distiller's perspective, he says, outdoor is a consumer reminder, not an image shaper.

Because promotions suffer the same syndrome, Mr. Wilde says, print will remain the medium of choice despite distiller dissatisfaction. "If any of these brands are going to survive, they have to have a recognizable image and that means putting dollars into print."

It appears Reader's Digest's Mr. Mapes and his national publication colleagues are not losing pages to outdoor companies, but to their local and regional brethren. As a whole, distillers still stand shoulder to shoulder, bottle to bottle behind print advertising.

"People who downplay print's effectiveness are making excuses for poor advertising," Mr. Martin says. "Good advertising sells; bad advertising does not."

Liquor advertising hit parade

In addition to the campaigns mentioned in the accompanying story, agency sources cited the following trend-setting work.

Richard Costello, president, TBWA Advertising, New York:

"Going back about 10 or 15 years, a couple of brands did interesting things. Chivas Regal and Johnnie Walker Black come to mind.

"Dewar's has done solid and continuous work. They also have run two separate campaigns [the Dewar's profiles and the highlander approach], which broke industry rules.

"The new Glenlivet ad is terrific. Seagram had been doing some very stodgy advertising for the most part. This new ad [with the bottle protected by an armed contraption that would make an Iron Maiden blush] is interesting and visually unusual."

Don Wilde, exec vp, SSC&B:Lintas Worldwide, New York:

"Rumple Minze is a strong example of a product addressing the issues. It's risky, adventuresome and I remember it.

"Studies show that 80% of those who read an ad can't remember the product 12 minutes after they see the ad. So this is progress."

Ad for U.K. nuclear plant includes invitation to site

By LAUREL WENTZ

LONDON—British Nuclear Fuels, operator of the U.K. government's nuclear energy program, is using its first tv and print campaign to issue 9 million invitations to visit its nuclear fuel complex.

At the same time, an anti-nuclear tv spot by the environmental group Greenpeace was deemed political by the Independent Broadcast Authority and was banned.

In the BNF spot, via Young & Rubicam, an invitation is peeled across the screen as a helicopter zooms to the Sellafield nuclear plant and lands on a welcome mat bearing a phone number to call for information. In the print ad, an invitation to visit Sellafield is partially glued to a spread showing the lush U.K. countryside where the plant is located. The invitation covers the part of the photo that shows the plant, but the copy at the bottom of the spread says, "Thousands of people have already seen what's behind this invitation."

Bob Cartwright, BNF publicity manager, said the timing of the $3 million campaign so soon after the Chernobyl nuclear accident in the Soviet Union was coincidental.

The script for the Greenpeace spot said: "If you'd visited Chernobyl on April 25 you would have seen a nice, clean nuclear plant. If you lived within 100 miles on April 26, you would have been evacuated. What's the point of a visit to Sellafield?"#

GreyCom looks to Europe, Asia

By JULIE SKUR HILL

GreyCom, the public relations arm of New York-based Grey Advertising, hopes to have 12 full-service offices in Europe and Southeast Asia operating by yearend.

GreyCom International was created in April, and Harriet Mouchly-Weiss was appointed president. She was previously chairman of the international division of Ruder Finn & Rotman. The new division of GreyCom now employs 15 fulltime staff members.

The goal is to develop "the same type of network the five leaders have," Ms. Mouchly-Weiss said, referring to the networks of Burson-Marsteller, Hill & Knowlton, Carl Byoir & Associates, Ruder Finn & Rotman and Daniel J. Edelman Inc. In addition to its New York office, GreyCom now has affiliates in Washington, Chicago and Los Angeles.

GreyCom has two international clients, the governments of Jamaica and Malaysia. The New York office handles the two accounts. She said GreyCom "is pitching for other international business," but declined to identify potential clients.

"We're assuming that many of the Grey Advertising clients will be interested in using us worldwide since they already use us in the U.S.," Ms. Mouchly-Weiss said.

Some products marketed by Procter & Gamble that are now handled by GreyCom in the U.S. would be potential business worldwide, she said.

Expansion will come through joint ventures and acquisitions, with a few nonequity affiliations, Ms. Mouchly-Weiss said. She added that GreyCom is working on deals with two pr shops, but she declined to name them.

GreyCom's first European targets are the U.K., France, Belgium and Sweden. "We hope to have our European set of offices in place no later than early fall," Ms. Mouchly-Weiss said.

In the Far East, GreyCom is looking at Indonesia, Hong Kong and Japan for offices. Ms. Mouchly-Weiss added that GreyCom is also interested in China, but "I wouldn't say it's on my priority list for this week."

GreyCom wants to staff the offices with local people "who understand pr on an international platform and have an understanding of American firms," she said. "Cross-cultural fertilization and understanding is essential for us and our clients."

For multimarket clients, GreyCom will fashion a program for local needs, Ms. Mouchly-Weiss said. "It's more than interpreting a press release. We'll take a problem, and we'll give it local interpretations."#

Fleet St.

Today for about $30 million. Mr. Shah remained as chairman and ceo of Today's publishing company, News (U.K.), and kept control of 51% of the paper.

New plans call for Today to beef up editorial and production staffs and attempt to win back advertisers disillusioned by early editions. Color reproduction and layout have been improved and a managing director has been hired to take over the day-to-day running of the tabloid from Mr. Shah.

Terry Cassidy, the new managing director, is the former publisher of a Lonhro newspaper in Scotland. Plans also call for scrapping the independent distribution system Mr. Shah established for Today in favor of the unionized wholesalers used by most other U.K. newspapers.

To build circulation, Today is serializing "A Matter of Honour," the latest novel by Jeffrey Archer, one of the U.K.'s best selling novelists and deputy chairman of the U.K.'s Conservative party.

"The first hurdle is that many clients still remember the bad old days when our color wasn't very good," said Mark Pritchett, Today's advertising director. "To convince them that we can handle color we are beginning to print special advertising newspapers full of ads."

On two Saturdays in July, Today produced a 32-page promotional prototype consisting entirely of ads, to be sent to prospective advertisers and ad agencies, he said.

Mr. Murdoch, meanwhile, succeeded in whisking his four newspapers overnight to a new printing plant and continuing to print and distribute them despite militant picketing by his former labor force. But staff morale at the four titles has plummeted and news staffers are harassed by pickets. Also, Mr. Murdoch's reporters are shunned by the Labor party and other news sources and many libraries refuse to stock the newspapers in sympathy with the strikers.

Mr. Murdoch's company, News International, has indicated interest in reopening negotiations with the print unions. That came despite the unions' rejection last month of what Mr. Murdoch said was his final offer, involving $75 million in compensation and the gift of the former News International printing plant to the unions, to start their own newspaper.

"Murdoch's cash flow has improved dramatically, although he had to spend a bit on barbed wire and trucks," said Mr. Terrington. "He must be making $90 million to $100 million [in reduced payroll] and advertising has been healthy."

But pressure on Mr. Murdoch is increasing. Attrition among the editorial staff has reached near-panic proportions. So far, 34 journalists from Mr. Murdoch's Times and Sunday Times have been poached by Andreas Whittam Smith, editor of the Independent, a new upmarket national daily broadsheet scheduled to be launched Oct. 7.

Other journalists have left or been fired because they disagreed with Mr. Murdoch's decision to outflank the print unions by moving to the new plant in Wapping, three miles east of Fleet Street, where U.K. newspapers are traditionally printed. In addition, Mr. Murdoch narrowly avoided a strike by journalists at the Sun by handing out 10% pay hikes.#

How the Top 50 agency 'brands' line up

Ad Age list peels away shops' subsidiary units

CHICAGO—An advertiser wants to assign business to one of the top 10 agencies but doesn't want to get involved with the subsidiaries that handle public relations, direct response, Yellow Pages, medical journals or sales promotion, to name a few. At that point, can he tell which are the top 10 agencies?

It isn't easy.

The search is complicated because billings scorecards traditionally lump together the agency's subsidiary revenues in arriving at total company revenue.

And then there are the agency mergers and megamergers that further conceal the outline of the so-called "brand name" agency, or the basic agency unit that remains after its support elements are peeled away.

"In accepting the challenge to prepare a list of the Top 10 agencies by 'brand name' calculations, we decided to antagonize not just those in and around the Top 10, but to go all out and apply this 'unbundling' process to a Top 50 list," said Fred Danzig, ADVERTISING AGE editor.

The process of extracting pure brand name numbers proved to be as complicated as it will be controversial, since some agencies may occasionally consider their regional subsidiaries to be offices, and others look upon subsidiaries as totally separate entities. To be consistent, the Brand Name Agency list excludes all units that are subsidiaries, but includes branch offices.

"A lot of apples and oranges get into the picture, and it has taken months of checking and rechecking to arrive at what can be considered a respectable list of this sort," observed Craig Endicott, who edits AA profile issues and supervised the brand name unbundling project.

To arrive at the Brand Name Agency total, agencies reporting their subsidiaries as part of their totals in the ADVERTISING AGE Agency Income Report published March 27, 1986, were asked to break out billings from their subsidiaries or assist AD AGE staffers in estimating the various components to arrive at a brand total minus subsidiaries. In select cases, estimates were made by AA.

As an example of what unbundling does, in the new calculation, Young & Rubicam, the No. 1 agency in combined U.S. billings ($2.27 billion for 1985) in the March Agency Income Report, yields that spot on the Brand Name Agency list to J. Walter Thompson Co. JWT ranked fifth in U.S. billings ($1.65 billion) in the traditional calculations. Unbundled, Y&R drops to No. 7 ($1.1 billion) on the Brand Name Agency list. The accompanying chart shows that 11 agencies were excluded from the Y&R composite.

Leo Burnett Co. surges to No. 2 on the new list, up from No. 8 in the March report. The new list also introduces Omnicom's DDB/Needham Worldwide, fresh from the Doyle Dane Bernbach-Needham Harper merger, and ranks it No. 3 ($1.27 billion). Ogilvy & Mather, extracted from the No. 2-ranked Ogilvy Group in the March report, ranks No. 4 on the Brand Name list. Foote, Cone & Belding moves up to No. 5 on the new list, from No. 6.

The first column entry on the Brand Name list, titled "Brand name agency rank," is a ranking of the billings composite of the "included" entries shown in the adjoining chart.

The March, 1986, Agency Income Report is the source of the second column entry. The rankings also are for the parent agency, which may or may not be the same name or composition in this chart as in the March report. The parent essentially represents all the units comprising both the "included" and "excluded" entries in the adjoining chart.

In most cases, the Brand Name Agency rank is the streamlined version of the agency's composition that provided its ranking in the March report.

Billings from acquisitions made since the March report and carried as offices rather than subsidiaries also have been added into the Brand Name Agency rank. An example of the latter is the merger of Leber Katz Partners Advertising into the New York office of Foote, Cone & Belding Communications. Figures used to determine rankings in both columns were 1985 U.S. billings totals.

Among housekeeping matters, a dash is placed next to DDB/Needham Worldwide, Campbell-Ewald and Lowe Marschalk in column two because they did not exist under these names in the March report.

In the same column, Ally & Gargano/MCA Advertising's No. 45 ranking in the March report is solely for MCA Advertising, and not the merger of the two that has occurred since the March report. Bernard Hodes Advertising, a subsidiary of DDB International, was not reported on separately in the March report in which its totals were folded into those of parent, DDB.

The third column entries bear the current names of the agencies. If the agency name differs from the name of the agency group to which it belongs, that agency group name is provided in the fourth column.

Ogilvy bets on scanners

Sees growth in shelf wars

By STEWART ALTER

NEW YORK—With media spending losing ground to sales promotion dollars, the Ogilvy Group is about to make a major move into supermarket shelf-space management consulting, redefining the "full service agency" concept.

This expansion appears to be a significant alternative to agency growth via megamerger. Ogilvy apparently is saying that growth will come from the marketing and distribution process. Merging agency billings, Ogilvy seems to believe, results in a greater combined market share of media spending which is flat or shrinking (see story, Page 65).

While many ad agencies, including Ogilvy & Mather, have sales promotion units, the Ogilvy approach reportedly will be the first to deal with the in-store fight for shelf space. It also is in sync with a growing trend among advertisers to emphasize tracking of store sales to measure advertising and marketing effectiveness.

While Saatchi & Saatchi Co. has created consulting and research links to the agency business with its acquisitions, Ogilvy's move differs in that it extends its marketing expertise and interests in an integrated communications and marketing package.

Ogilvy, in the current issue of its house publication, revealed it is "on-line with a shelf-space management system in New York to learn how it can help our clients." The emphasis in that article on scanning and "on-line" tests clearly indicates it expects to blend some kind of computer software-related service activity with its marketing expertise.

Ogilvy declined comment last week. But it has been making its rationale public, both in its agency magazine and in a speech delivered earlier at the American Mar-

Omnicom not hurting despite account losses

By STEWART ALTER

Account gains have helped the three agencies planning to form Omnicom Group hold combined net revenue losses to only 2.2% since their intent to merge was disclosed last spring.

But two of the agencies, Doyle Dane Bernbach Group and Needham Harper Worldwide, have lost major contributors to their profits.

These and other inside details about BBDO International, DDB and Needham emerge in a joint prospectus issued last week detailing financial aspects of the combination that will create the No. 2 agency group, behind Saatchi & Saatchi Co., with combined billings of about $5 billion. Needham shareholders will meet Aug. 12, and BBDO and DDB shareholders Aug. 28, to vote on the proposed combine.

While much of the interest following the April 27 merger announcement has focused on account losses, it appears that BBDO's gain of Apple Computer and Needham's Michelob win, with combined revenues of $15.5 million, roughly offset the $16.7 million in lost revenues, excluding the planned spinoff and sale of Needham's Los Angeles office with about $100 million in billings.

BBDO's loss of Stroh Brewery and Quaker Oats represented $4.3 million, or 1.3% of its 1985 revenues, and $1.1 million, or 2.8% of its 1985 pretax income.

DDB was hit much harder. Its IBM Corp. and RJR Nabisco losses amounted to $8.7 million, or 4% of its revenues, but contributed $2.5 million, or 18.9% of 1985 profits.

Needham, whose 1985 net income exceeded DDB's, although its revenues were only 56% of DDB's, suffered slightly from the accounts it lost: Procter & Gamble (the former G.D. Searle & Co. brands), Sandoz Nutrition Corp., Tri-Honda Dealers and McDonald's Corp.'s Phoenix area franchisees. These clients generated revenues of $3.7 million, or 3.1% of Needham's 1985 revenues, and $241,000, or 2.1%, of its 1985 pretax income.

Needham's loss of the $41 million Xerox Corp. account before the merger was announced was not mentioned in the prospectus.

Also, Needham's Los Angeles office, handling accounts including

Campbell return to BK may be tough on JWT

By BRIAN MORAN

J. Jeffrey Campbell's sudden resumption of day-to-day operating duties at Burger King Corp. has J. Walter Thompson USA braced for another wrenching twist in its tempestuous relationship with the troubled chain.

Jay Darling, following his sudden resignation as BK's president, revealed in an interview with ADVERTISING AGE last week that JWT had faced dismissal on the $200 million account. He said he put JWT on notice 10 months ago that it had one year to come up with its "absolute best" or lose BK as a client.

After last winter's dismal "Herb" promotion and an aborted spring ad effort for Chicken Tenders, JWT unveiled "Burger King town," its new, often critically acclaimed campaign (AA, May 26).

"There was no doubt that I was willing to pull the trigger if [JWT] didn't deliver, but they impressed me a lot," said Mr. Darling, who relinquished control to Mr. Campbell July 18 to become a BK franchisee.

The former president said he had to walk a tightrope during most of his high-pressured, eight-month tenure, as he sheltered the agency from irate BK franchisees who saw their sales fall while rival McDonald's feasted on its blockbuster McD.L.T. introduction.

"I felt I did a very good job of protecting the agency that I believed in," Mr. Darling said.

Yet despite initial favorable re-

ABC Entertainment goes with Grey, Fattel

The tune-in and general promotion account had been pulled from McCaffrey & McCall, New York (AA, June 21), which retains the ABC Sports assignment. In 1985, ABC slashed print expenditures 40% while tripling its radio buys.

Fiber-based diet aids, like Schering Corp.'s Fibre Trim, are helping expand the $115 million appetite suppresant category as consumers use the naturally based product for dual purposes. Ogilvy & Mather, New York, is Fibre Trim's agency.

Natural fiber fills bill for diet aids, laxatives growth

By PATRICIA WINTERS and LAURIE FREEMAN

Fiber, the ingredient that last year helped boost sales in the ready-to-eat cereal market, now is rescuing two other categories from the doldrums—diet aids and laxatives.

Manufacturer sales in the $115 million appetite-suppressant segment, which dropped 10% in 1985, have grown 19% during the first six months of '86, and sales could top $175 million by yearend. The $125 million laxative category (in manufacturer dollars) is expected, meanwhile, to see 10% dollar growth after several years of showing no increases.

Analysts attribute gains in both categories to numerous new natural-fiber products. New-product introductions are expected to make diet aids one of the big growth categories on tv this year, as marketers follow Schering-Plough Inc.'s lead in investing $25 million to launch Fibre Trim.

The health and fitness trend is driving fiber's popularity, as consumers turn away from chemical additives and seek natural alternatives. Publicity about National Cancer Institute recommendations for a low-fat, high-fiber diet also have helped spark sales.

While consumers seem to be gobbling up fiber cereals because they are "good" diet additives, fiber laxatives and diet aids may be seeing growth simply because they are "not bad." The active ingredient in most nonprescription appetitite suppressants—phenylpropanolamine (ppa)—has generated some bad publicity in recent years.

Fibre Trim's introduction has sparked new competition from New York-based Thompson Medical's Fiber Full and other generic and private-label fiber products. Morris Plains, N.J.-based Warner-Lambert, also eyeing the category, is testing LiquiSlim fiber diet-

ADWATCH

Ad awareness suffering from summertime blues

By JULIE FRANZ

In the heat of summer, when most people are outdoors ignoring tv, radio and other media, advertising recall wilted as measured by June's adWatch survey of top-of-mind awareness.

"None" was among the most frequent responses when consumers were asked to name the first ad that came to mind of all seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days.

Brands in eight of the 25 categories for which adWatch measures consumer awareness of advertising lost ground last month (see chart, Page 59). No brand in any category significantly increased its share of first mentions.

Of the eight categories where a brand or brands registered statistically significant losses in consumer ad awareness, seven showed increases in the number of consumers who drew a blank when asked to name the first advertising that came to mind in various categories.

Two categories that saw the largest increases in the number of consumers who could recall no advertising were bread (up 7.1 percentage points to 48.1% of respondents) and cameras (up 5.2 points to 36.9%).

In soft drinks, where Coca-Cola and Pepsi continue to wage their battle to produce the most eye-catching and memorable ads, the number of no responses remained steady at 14%.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb. Ad awareness is measured by asking a nationally projected sample of consumers to name the advertising that first comes to mind—over-all and in a variety of product categories—from among all advertising seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days.

In June, 1,000 consumers were polled by telephone. Under adWatch methodology, an increase or decrease of 2.8 percentage points is considered statistically significant and attributable to more than sample variation.

June's 10 best recalled ads (without respondents being asked for a specific product category) were, in descending order: Coca-Cola, Pepsi-Cola, Miller/Miller Lite, Budweiser/Bud Light, Ford, McDonald's, Burger King, Jell-O, Toyota and AT&T. Even in answer to this question, where any tv, radio or print advertisement could be mentioned, more than 47% of those queried said no single ad immediately came to mind.

May's biggest gainer, Lever Bros. Surf detergent, slipped slightly last month in the detergent category to 3.3% of first mentions, tying the product for second with Lever's All. Surf is moving into national distribution.

Surf had been in ninth position in April when 1.8% of consumers surveyed named its advertising first. Its score peaked at 4.1% in May.

The following are last month's three best recalled advertisers for the remaining adWatch categories:

- Airlines: United (14.7% of first mentions); American (12.7%); TWA (9%). Eastern dropped three percentage points to move to fourth place from second in May.
- Apparel: Levi Strauss (8.7%); J.C. Penney (4.4%); Sears (4.4%).
- Beer: Budweiser (15.1%); Coors (11.3%); Miller (9.9%).
- Breakfast foods: Kellogg (7.3%); Wheaties (5.6%); Cheerios (4.4%). Cheerios' share of first mentions dropped 2.9 points, coinciding with a decrease in its media schedule, causing the brand to slip to third place from first place in May.
- Bread: Wonder (14.1%, down 2.9 points); Sunbeam (3.7%); Rainbo (2.5%).
- Cameras: Kodak (22.2%, down 3 points); Canon (14.1%); Polaroid (6.2%).
- Cars & trucks: Ford (22.2%); Chevrolet (13.6%); Toyota (7.5%).
- Coffee: Maxwell House (22.9%); Folger's (19.6%); Sanka (5.5%).
- Computers: Apple (23.9%); IBM (19.2%); other (6.2%). In a category normally packed with a variety of models from the big brands, "other" was the third most often mentioned brand in June, while Apple's share of first mentions dropped 4.6%. Commodore was fourth with 3.6% of first mentions.
- Cosmetics: Maybelline (5.6%); Avon (3%); L'Oreal 2.7%. L'Oreal zoomed to second position from the 12th spot in May on the strength of new print ads.
- Credit cards: VISA (29%); MasterCard (22.2%); American Express (14.1%). Both VISA and MasterCard fell slightly more than 3 points last month.
- Home electronics: General

Adding sections to capture readers, advertisers

By Gary Levin

Pick up the Sunday newspaper this week, and you're likely to get some exercise.

It's not that there's a barbell hidden inside. Rather, it's what newspaper analyst John Morton, of Washington's Lynch, Jones & Ryan, calls an "abundance of success," in the face of agency executives' dire predictions for newspapers as a national advertising medium.

Major metropolitan Sunday editions, and many weekday issues, are heftier than ever, filled with an ever-growing array of sections, free-standing inserts, magazine tabloids and coupons. The trend toward "sectionalization" is not new, but has accelerated dramatically in recent years.

The added weight also comes from increases in local advertising (up 4.1% in the first quarter of this year compared with the year-earlier period, according to the Newspaper Advertising Bureau, New York), which enables papers to add to and promote their Sunday editions almost like a network promotes its prime-time lineup, by "narrowcasting" sections. It's no longer simply news, sports, business and life-style sections, but also home, arts, science, fashion, auto and an array of suburban or zoned editorial news sections.

Because many of these sections offer geographically zoned ad opportunities, newspaper executives say they've been able to lure smaller, local advertisers and new categories with lower out-of-pocket costs. They also have attracted specialty advertisers—local furniture outlets with the home section, for example, or corporate image ads with weekly business tabloids—seeking to reach a well-defined, targeted audience more inclined to buy their products.

"Newspapers are traditionally a mass medium, but we think there's a class audience built into that mass," says Robert Hobson, marketing services director for Knight-Ridder Newspapers' Wichita (Kan.) Eagle-Beacon.

The danger of adding sections, Mr. Morton says, is the chance that readership of individual sections is reduced as consumers are drawn not only to competing media, but other sections as well.

"Some Sunday newspapers are so big they're getting to be formidable things to pick up and drag in the house," he says.

They will get even more formidable, according to the latest 1986 projections from Robert Coen, senior vp-director of forecasting for McCann-Erickson, New York. Mr. Coen says total newspaper national ad revenues should rise 4.5% this year, to $3.5 billion, while the NAB puts total newspaper ad dollars at $27.2 billion, up 8% from 1985.

Part of that increase should come from increased zoned advertising opportunities, which boost a daily's total linage figures. The Chicago Tribune, for example, since 1984 has offered eight weekly sections zoned to as many as nine regions of the metropolitan area.

"We've given [advertisers] a second vehicle, a complementary relationship. They'll buy a full-run ad in one section and two zones in another," says retail ad manager Dennis Grant. "The proliferation of zones has broadened the base of advertisers" to include more restaurants, theaters, hotels and amusement parks.

To open up opportunities for smaller advertisers, Hearst Corp.'s San Francisco Examiner in May launched "Epicure," an expanded food section zoned seven ways.

Other papers, however, have backed away from zoning. Times Mirror Co.'s Denver Post, which offered 13 zones in 1984, has none now. Post advertising director Steve Morris says the chain-dominated retail industry has led many to demand broader, less targeted coverage. He says although linage has dropped as a result, dollar volume has grown 15% over the past two years.

Many papers, however, need zoned editions to compete effectively with suburban papers, which "have enjoyed almost exclusive loyalty of local retailers," the Tribune's Mr. Grant says. "Newspapers cannot just live off the top 10 stores. They've got to get a broader base."

This emphasis on retail advertising—which accounts for 53% of total newspaper ad revenues, according to the NAB—comes at the expense of larger national advertisers. Big-name tobacco and liquor marketers have been stymied in their attempts to win favorable treatment from daily newspapers notwithstanding the premium prices they pay.

Despite the apparent potential of "narrowcast" sections such as home, food and science to attract them, these full-page advertisers say they have problems guaranteeing positions in sections.

"I've always taken the position that national advertisers should have the same shot at franchise positions as retail advertisers, particularly because of the higher costs we pay," says Robert Houghtlin, vp-media director on the Philip Morris account at Leo Burnett USA, Chicago.

Concedes Jerome Tilis, president and publisher of the Detroit Free Press, "The truth is that advertisers can't even be guaranteed a section, much less [one] juxtaposed with the same type of reading matter in all the papers they buy."

Industry executives say they're working on the problem. But by favoring retail accounts and charging "exorbitant" national rates, according to Richard Kostyra, exec vp-U.S. director of media services at J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, they further dissuade national advertisers. Newspapers command only 8% to 9% of all national ad dollars and 11.6% of total national consumer ad dollars, according to NAB.

Evening national and local ad rates haven't yet happened, and as Mr. Kostyra says, "I think single papers attempting to do something like that is very much like blowing in the wind. It requires an en masse move by media to readjust rates."

The industry's much-heralded 1984 adoption of the standard advertising unit system—now in use by 99% of the nation's newspapers—seems to have had little influence on national advertising.

"The move from newspapers is going to accelerate," Mr. Kostyra predicts. "I suggest that newspapers now are considered by national advertisers only for couponing or where specific [retail] locations are required, such as auto dealers."

Mr. Kostyra and other agency executives say rate differentials favoring retailers aren't the only issue turning national accounts away from metro dailies. "I can buy radio and tv in a given market for the cost of a four-color page," he says.

While newspaper marketers privately defend the national-local rate differential, saying they only reflect what the market will bear, some papers are experimenting with ways to close the gap. The Eagle-Beacon, for example, last February announced it would charge the same for national and local ads with a minimum three-time frequency, in a bid to increase Wichita's stature as a test market. But no ads sold on that basis have appeared.

"It's in their economic interest to reduce the differential, but until everybody's concerned enough to suffer short-term consequences, it won't happen," Mr. Morton says.

But newspapers are wooing national advertisers with other strategies, often including selling space against specific features. Mr. Morris at the Denver Post says he's just begun offering ad space on comics pages and near the well-read Ann Landers column. The Post also is promoting a small-space ad in stock tables for companies to publicize earnings or management changes directly beneath their stock quote.

On a national basis, Merrill Lynch has placed "hanging ads" above stock listings, and Philip Morris buys space for its Marlboro brand near Monday sports scores.

"It's an effective place to reach males," Mr. Houghtlin says. "In a sense we're using newspapers and stadium signs to replace the tv sports sponsorships we had in the '60s."

But scattered efforts to price and sell individual sections based on their ability to reach a particular target audience have met with little enthusiasm.

"There's not a long list of newspapers that have a fashion section that might appeal to a brand like Virginia Slims," Mr. Houghtlin says.

"Each paper is different enough from another that it's very difficult for national advertisers to look for enough sections to hit the target reader. Because of that, national advertisers end up in the same situation they've been in: They use newspapers for a high level of coverage in any market . . . to announce something or distribute [coupons]."

Instead, the agency executives suggest newspapers adopt a more aggressive pricing attitude, perhaps setting up a separate, discounted rate for package goods advertisers, who in recent years have shunned newspapers.

Are customers checking out food sections?

Newspapers press toward the future

When network tv's audience shares began declining in the late 1970s, a few newspaper publishers' eyes lit up. If this keeps up, they chortled, they could wind up recapturing some of the ad dollars tv stole in the '50s and '60s.

The hopes of these few publishers are now the dreams of many and have taken shape as the newspaper industry's "Future of Advertising" project. The project, based on the work of 11 task forces made up of top industry executives, is intended to develop ideas and policies to help the newspaper business compete in the 1990s and beyond.

Under the over-all stewardship of Harold Andersen, president of the Omaha (Neb.) World Herald, and the board of directors of the Newspaper Advertising Bureau, New York, the year-old project is looking at virtually every aspect of the way newspapers do business with their advertisers. Among the areas being considered by the task forces are:

• Readership and circulation. This committee, chaired by Reg Murphy, president and publisher of the Baltimore Sun, is about to publish a manual written by Burl Osborn, editor of the Dallas Morning News, called "Readers: How to Gain and Maintain Them." The manual, intended for use by publishers and senior newspaper executives, will focus on readership strategy, research, market definition, positioning, packaging, distribution, advertising and pricing.

• Reproduction. Headed by Walter Mattson, president of the New York Times, this committee already has achieved its first goal: The publication of the "Guide to Quality Newspaper Reproduction," a 55-page book designed to help agencies, advertisers and newspapers prepare materials that will yield the highest quality reproduction. This task force also is looking at establishing a quality evaluation service for newspapers under the auspices of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. It's also working with Gannett Co. staffers on the design of a production quality checklist that will help newspapers achieve the best quality production from existing equipment.

• Standardization. Headed by Joe D. Smith, publisher of the Alexandria (La.) Daily Town Talk, this group also has achieved one of its major goals: The development and implementation of a standard invoice for advertising. Since its unveiling at the ANPA's April meeting in San Francisco, the invoice has been endorsed by the Institute of Newspaper Financial Executives and seems headed toward acceptance throughout the industry. The task force also is monitoring this fall's expected startup of AD/SAT, the computerized system for single-point quality transmission of newspaper advertising materials. In the long term, this task force is working on standard contracts, a standard format for tv guides, and extending the standard advertising unit system to classified pages.

• Pricing and positioning. Headed by Jerome Tilis, president and publisher of the Detroit Free Press, this task force is charged with looking at how newspapers, as an industry, price themselves and how they run advertising. The committee already has asked a representative sampling of newspaper publishers, ad directors and editors to evaluate 12 new advertising positions, ranging from island display to the sponsored page concept, that are contained in an experimental newspaper produced by the Hartford (Conn.) Courant. This group also is charged with finding the answer to persistent complaints from national advertisers, which believe they are discriminated against through the local-national rate differential.

Other task forces are looking at how the newspaper business can better promote itself; how it can attract and hold better salespeople; what can be done to make classified advertising more useful to a larger number of advertisers, and what can be done to standardize retail readership research reports.

The "Future of Advertising" project represents the largest effort at self-criticism and self-improvement ever undertaken by the newspaper industry. In the view of many both inside and outside the newspaper business, it just might work.

Underdogs score with sports packages

By Leslie Gilbert

In the nation's most competitive newspaper towns, the primary battlefield often is the playing field.

Sports holds fast as the second most-read section in most major daily newspapers. Papers that are No. 2 in their markets frequently try to capitalize on their readers' passion for sports with expanded and often expensive coverage.

For newspapers as well as their advertisers, sports sections can deliver a loyal audience, one whose passion for detail sometimes is shocking. "We print pages and pages of stats every day, and the readers really pay attention to them," says Michael Marks, promotion director at the Tribune Co.'s New York Daily News. "Readers will call us if there is a misprint on even the most obscure statistic."

But even this attractive audience needs courting. Newspapers must entice readers and keep them coming back for more. It's especially tough for the underdog.

"You can't put out a paper in this town without an awe-inspiring sports section," says Peter Drumsta, former sports editor for News Corp.'s Boston Herald. Boston fans take their sports seriously, and the Boston Globe is considered by many to publish the best sports section in the country. How can a No. 2 paper hope to compete?

Free-lance writer Leslie Gilbert is a former assistant editor with the National Hockey League's Goal magazine.

"We try to offer every single thing that we can to everyone interested in sports within the limitations of time, space and dollars," Mr. Drumsta says.

> "Sports is really the heart of our readership."
> Dave Smith
> Dallas Morning News

What sounds like a scattershot approach is actually more targeted and enhanced in two weekly magazine-format pullout sections.

"Sports Friday," created to compete with the Globe's coverage of participant sports, contains extensive coverage of weekend and recreational activities. The section includes a weekend tv schedule and a Jim Baker column devoted to sports broadcasting.

The highlight of the Herald's other magazine, "Sports Monday," is the "Sportrait," an off-the-field personality profile of a Boston athlete. "We might go to [Celtic] Robert Parish's home and interview him there—find out what he does in his spare time, what he likes to eat, what his favorite movies are," Mr. Drumsta says. "This Hollywoodish kind of editorial gets Mrs. Sports Fan interested in reading the sports section."

If sports sections were flowers, and the Herald's coverage a gigantic hothouse bouquet—with something for everyone—the New York Times used long-stemmed roses to woo its 1,625,649 Sunday readers. It didn't work.

A twice-a-year, glossy color supplement to the Times Sunday magazine section was terminated after just two 1985 installments, in January and June. The Times editorial and ad departments both cite lack of timeliness as the magazine's downfall; the staff was working with a six-month editorial lead time. With no way to predict who the news makers would be so far in advance of the seasons, the Times was forced to fall back on the perennial big names: Martina Navratilova, Eric Dickerson, Wayne Gretzky.

the news," Mr. Kupcinet says. "But sometimes things pop up on tv before I can break them. Even [Walter] Winchell would never have been as big as he was if tv had been around in his day."

Like other columnists today, Mr. Kupcinet says he verifies all items before they see print. "Columnists used to be lax; now they're more professional," he says.

Nevertheless, like many of his colleagues, Mr. Kupcinet has been sued a number of times, but says he's never lost. A typical lawsuit was one in which a husband sued him in a divorce case, claiming a newspaper item contributed to the marital breakup.

But some of reporters' best scoops never make it onto page. "You hear an incredible amount of great stuff, but you can't print it," says Jeannie Williams, Washington-based People Page editor for USA Today's "Life" section.

"We rarely will take a story if there's an unnamed source .... Readers are more sophisticated since Watergate. They want truth," she says.

USA Today, the nation's third largest newspaper with a circulation of 1,168,222, devotes an entire daily page to people reporting. "There's a never-ending fascination for famous people," Ms. Williams says. "My page is supposed to be a fun read."

Because of the paper's widespread readership, only celebrities who are household names qualify for USA Today coverage. Pursuing personalities who are "cultural points of reference" has led to the recent addition of book excerpts on the People Page. Ms. Williams also says she "feeds off" tv's morning shows and Telerep-syndicated "Entertainment Tonight," which, in turn, feed off her.

Items about tv personalities, meanwhile, are a mainstay for Ms. Williams. "Tv is one of the few vehicles that ties people together," she says.

But according to Herb Caen, of the San Francisco Chronicle, who this year celebrates 50 years as a daily columnist, the salient ingredient in a successful personality column is jumping quickly from item to item so no one gets bored. "It's the Winchell theory," he says. "I give them a one-liner, a joke, something to talk about at lunch.

"Once you become a habit, you're in, and I've been around so long, I'm part of people's breakfast habits." He says he plans to continue his first-person column "until I fall face and the writing top-notch—including Nora Ephron, Alistair Cooke and Mordecai Richler on its author list—the magazine could not offer fresh subject matter and it did not sell to advertisers.

But in a continuing effort to lift its section out of the doldrums that seem to plague it, the Times has bolstered this year's lineup with a series of pullout sections that supplement its "SportsMonday" roundup. "The pullouts are the product of a mutual desire of the advertising and editorial departments to develop a vehicle for special treatment of sporting events," says Joe Vecchione, sports editor. Subjects include the Super Bowl, professional basketball and hockey's All-Star Games, Major League Baseball's season opener, the Breeders' Cup, U.S. Open tennis and U.S. Open golf.

"The editorial is primarily service material for the readers—who to watch, what to watch, a preview of the field of competitors," Mr. Vecchione says. In the case of the U.S. Open in golf and tennis, both of which are held in the New York area this year, local interest material also might be used.

Five pullouts already have appeared this year, and according to Erich Linker, vp-advertising, response has been good. "We want to do more with sports packages," Mr. Linker says. "The fact that we run the section nationally gives us a selling advantage when we approach major advertisers who don't necessarily use newspapers but are interested in sports packages. The pullout sections let us offer them a 10-event package."

down into the typewriter with my nose into the 'I' key."

The changes in celebrity people columns have been paralleled in society columns, which today are less interested in what kind of finger sandwiches Mrs. Gotrocks served for tea than they are in how much money she raised for local charities. Jody Jacobs, who recently retired from 14 years of covering high society for the Los Angeles Times to write a novel about high society, says about half her stories pertained to fund raising.

"These people are the real movers today," Ms. Jacobs says. "Women are raising millions of dollars for good causes."

Even upscale Los Angeles department stores have gotten in on society's latest act, Ms. Jacobs says. "There's a trend toward holding big fund-raising parties in stores," she says.

For these retailers as well as other advertisers, society pages offer prime access to the female consumer, says Pat Fierro, ad director of Robinson's department stores in Los Angeles. Robinson's runs all its Los Angeles Times ads in the "View" section, where it has been joined by other local department stores, Ms. Fierro says.

The Los Angeles Times, which features Hollywood news every day, refuses to give short shrift to society news. No fewer than four society writers were on the staff before Ms. Jacobs retired—"more than the New York Times," boasts Jean Sharley Taylor, associate Los Angeles Times editor, whose "View" section covers the social scene.

Pat Steeger, who for 13 years has written "Social Scene" for the San Francisco Chronicle, says society columns often function as guides on what to buy, where to go and what to eat.

"This is the time in some ways of living vicariously," she says. "People want to go places they know these people are frequenting. These are the people who supposedly have all the money

A computer marketer calculates the advantages of 4-color newspaper ads.
Our industry has learned important lessons about the value of dramatic, attention-getting advertising. And if you ask me, the impact and productivity of full color newspaper ads will bring great rewards to the computer marketers that exploit those strengths.
One newspaper's strengths stand out in particular. The Record, covering northern New Jersey just west of New York City, delivers to well educated, high income consumers — in a market that has a high concentration of retail computer outlets and commercial computer dealers. In fact, more than 24% of the adults in Bergen/Passaic counties own or shopped for a personal computer in the last year.
And The Record reaches this market with a very low cost per thousand for full color ads.
You can't beat The Record's color quality, or the award-winning editorial environment. That's the kind of advantage that adds drama and impact to your message.
With the continued intense competition in the computer industry, we need all the advantages we can get. Let's contact The Record's national sales manager, Chuck Hayes, at 201-646-4257 and ask him to put together a package that will really hit our target audience where they live!

largest circulation in the New York area at 1,275,268, thinks of its entire sports section as a package.

Statistics and horse racing charts make up a large portion of the sports section. But according to sports editor Vic Ziegel, the editorial focus is on "the big stories that people want to read. If there's a big event in New York, we'll be all over it."

The latest addition to the mix is Howard Cosell, who writes a twice-a-week column.

"Howard Cosell gets fans excited," Mr. Ziegel says. "People want to know what's on his mind." Mr. Cosell is also a highly visible personality, and his Daily News debut in April was heralded by tv and radio spots.

But both Mr. Ziegel and promotion director Michael Marks agree that one fine columnist does not a sports section make. Mr. Marks cites the case of Dick Young, an outspoken columnist who left the Daily News in February, 1982, to join the staff of its major competitor, the New York Post—with little effect on the sales of either paper.

"We have advertisers, like Goodyear Tire, who run 52 weeks a year because of who we are," Mr. Marks says. "They are buying the audience we deliver, and we get those numbers with a sports package that is salable to the consumer. Columnists are only part of the package."

The Dallas Morning News might not agree. Part of its sports section rehabilitation included luring columnist Blackie Sherrod from the rival Times Herald and then promoting the move. Executive sports editor Dave Smith says bringing Mr. Sherrod over to the Morning News in January, 1985, added credibility to the section.

"The things that cause an increase in readership are quality and consistency," Mr. Smith says. "The reader has to know what to expect from his sports section."

In 1981, the Morning News had just passed its competitor, the Times Herald, in circulation. The Morning News led the race by about 41,000 copies daily and 25,000 on Sunday.

At that time, the Morning News realized sports would be a prime battleground for the papers. "Five years ago," says Harold Gaar, vp-marketing, "we were perceived as the No. 2 sports paper in Dallas. Research showed us that, in Dallas, sports is the most popular reader interest item."

To that end, the paper made an extended commitment to sports and to promoting that commitment. This included adding 10 sports staffers and doubling the section size overnight. "It was a hell of a commitment," Mr. Smith says. "People at other papers said, 'That can't last. You'll be cutting back again soon.' That was five years ago and we've added since then."

The commitment also includes the Morning News appearing as a strong advertising presence at sporting events and what Mr. Gaar calls "adopting a logical approach to serving your market."

When Mr. Smith moved to the Morning News in 1981, after an eight-year tenure as sports editor at the Boston Globe and two years trying to revive the sports section of the now-defunct Washington Star, he left the section alone for six months while he learned about the Dallas market.

Football is a predictable passion in Dallas. "A market research study we commissioned told us that we could call our paper 'The Dallas Cowboy News' and it would be very successful," Mr. Smith says.

Reflecting that passion, the Morning News' "Football '85" preview section ran 88 broadsheet pages—probably the largest special sports section in the country—encompassing professional, college and high school teams, with spotlights on Dallas athletes, predictions for the season, an overview of tv coverage and series of large full-color portraits. The special section ran on a Thursday, normally a slow sports day, and was folded into the regular sports slot.

Mr. Smith's experience at the Globe and with a special "Cowboy Extra" pullout in Dallas leads him to believe that tabloid pullouts are generally undesirable. "In both cases, the advertisers didn't want in on the special tabloid sections," he says. "They wanted to advertise in the sports section." He believes the section should appear as one cohesive unit.

"We run special features during the week—high schools on Tuesday, colleges on Wednesday, and so on—but they are always part of the whole sports section. My feeling is, we have to do everything every day," Mr. Smith says.

Bill Dwyer, sports editor of the Los Angeles Times, says, "Dave Smith is perhaps the only sports editor in the country who can come into a situation and really make a difference." Dan McGrath, executive sports editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, agrees. "I think he has shown the newspaper industry that sports does sell newspapers."

Today, the Morning News' circulation lead over the Times Herald has grown to about 145,000 daily and 174,000 on Sunday.

Sports has played a major role in the paper's success, Mr. Smith says. "I think if you talk to some of the premier newspaper editors in the country, any of them would tell you that, as much as some of them hate to say it, sports is the key.

"Readers will turn to the A section first," he says, "but sports is really the heart of our readership."

ADVERTISING AGE asked sports editors of the nation's 25 largest newspapers to rank the "three best over-all sports sections" among U.S. dailies. Despite common complaints that the task was impossible—Newsday's Richard Sandler said, "My sense is that in the top 10 there isn't a lot of difference"—the opinion poll revealed a clear consensus.

Of 68 total votes (one editor declined to participate, one could not be reached and one voted for only two papers), only 13 papers were mentioned. Papers were assigned three points for a first-place vote, two for second and one for third.

The Los Angeles Times received the most points (36) and the most mentions (16). Editors generally praised the Los Angeles Times for its comprehensiveness and its treatment of special issues. Several remain impressed by the Times Mirror Co. paper's coverage of the 1984 Summer Olympics.

Affiliated Publications' Boston Globe's writing was mentioned often as its most valuable asset. "The Boston Globe has some terrific writers who write with authority," said Dave Robinson of the Detroit Free Press. "Its beat writers know what they're talking about."

Many editors seemed envious of the space A.H. Belo Corp.'s Morning News devotes to sports. Lee Gordon of the Cleveland Plain Dealer called it "perhaps the most comprehensive section in the country," adding that it offers "solid writing, all the facts and statistics, and good use of graphics and photos."

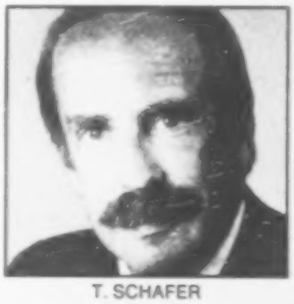
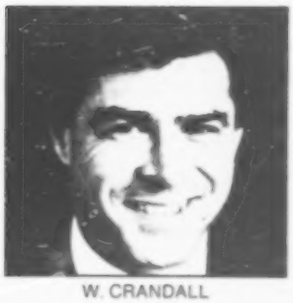
Although the proposed merger with Saatchi & Saatchi has cost Ted Bates Worldwide nearly 10% of its billings, the Saatchis say they won't renegotiate the purchase price. If you were buying Bates, would you renegotiate the price?



T. SCHAFER

Tom Schafer, senior partner-account management, Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago: It is my understanding that all negotiations of this nature are based on future earnings potential for ultimate return on stockholder investment. Other important considerations are vitality of the organization, strength of management, client security and conflicts. With this in mind, the upfront price would not be renegotiable. However, there could be other means of returning stockholder investment.



W. CRANDALL

William Crandall, senior vp-general manager, Earle Palmer Brown Cos., Newark, N.J.: If I had agreed upfront to accept a 10% loss in client billing, what choice would I have but to close the deal? Anything else would confirm all that clients have been saying recently about the disloyal, self-serving nature of ad agencies and their chief executives. I would close the deal just to distinguish my agency from the U.S. competition. At Bates, they call it a USP (unique selling proposition).

C. SCHNEIDER

Cy Schneider, chairman, Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt/Pacific, Los Angeles: No. I've lived through a couple of these. In my experience, I've learned that in merger situations both parties take calculated risks on the consequences of the merger. Educated guesses on the reactions of clients must be made. Sometimes there are surprises no one could have predicted. It's part of the risk that goes with the game.

W. BORTREE

William Bortree, exec vp, Kane, Bortree & Associates, New York: Absolutely. They are damaged merchandise. I thought it was a generous deal to begin with. Now it looks like it's turning out to be foolhardy.

S. MORELOCK

Stephen Morelock, president, Saunders, Lubinski & White, Dallas: No. They (the Saatchis) had to anticipate those possibilities when they made the deal. I don't know what they thought they might lose or what the risks were, but as businessmen it was their responsibility to assess those risks beforehand. Everyone shook hands, knowing what the risks were. The losses may be greater than expected—but now everybody has to live with the decision. Can you imagine going back on a deal like that in Texas?

Detergent leaders seesaw

By LAURIE FREEMAN

Liquid Tide's reign as the leading liquid detergent has turned out to be short-lived.

Lever Bros.' Wisk heavy-duty liquid laundry detergent proved its staying power as the No. 1 liquid detergent in the $1 billion liquid segment, pushing Procter & Gamble's Liquid Tide back to second place.

In the latest two-month A.C. Nielsen Co. reporting period, ended May 23, Wisk's market share totaled 7.6%, compared with Liquid Tide's 6.1%.

Liquid Tide earlier had held a 7% share to Wisk's 6.8% (AA, May 19). Composite shares for the January-to-May period show Wisk with a 7.2% share, Liquid Tide with 6.3%.

Detergent industry sources believe the composite shares give a more accurate reading of how well the products are performing in the very competitive category.

"Depending on the amount of promotional spending and trade allowances, the two brands yo-yo almost every month," said a midwestern detergent buyer.

In the $3 billion category, long characterized by heavy promotional spending, the Liquid Tide-Wisk battle continues to set new spending standards. Industry sources say both Cincinnati-based P&G and New York-based Lever are backing their respective liquids with more than $30 million each in continuing advertising and promotional efforts.

"Both companies know they can buy market share if they continue to spend like crazy like they have been, but no one is making money at that peak spending level," said one industry insider.

Sources close to Lever say the latest flip-flop in share position is a result of the company's Barbara Mandrell sweepstakes for Wisk, in which winners received an all-expenses-paid trip to Hollywood to see the country singer in concert. Lever also has been putting 25¢-off Wisk coupons in Sunday free-standing newspaper supplements.

"Lever has adopted a marketing philosophy similar to P&G's for Liquid Tide, that market share is important and they're willing to take a short-term earnings hit for as long as needed to maintain progress," said Jay Freedman, household products analyst with Kidder, Peabody in New York. "Wisk is a significant part of Lever's profits in the U.S., and as much as they'd like to be even more profitable, they're willing to spend coupon-to-coupon and trade allowance-to-trade allowance [with P&G] to maintain Wisk's position."

BBDO, New York, handles Wisk; Saatchi & Saatchi Compton, New York, is the agency of record for Tide.#

Pitch for Shout adds twist

By LAURIE FREEMAN

It's no coincidence that the toddler shown in S.C. Johnson & Son's new campaign for Shout prewash is wearing overalls from OshKosh B'Gosh.

A recently signed agreement between Racine, Wis.-based Johnson and Oshkosh, Wis.-based OshKosh B'Gosh calls for Johnson to use models dressed in OshKosh apparel in this and future campaigns.

But the apparel agreement isn't the only difference between this and past Shout advertising. Johnson believes this campaign—from Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago—finally breaks out of the product-demonstration mold traditionally seen by advertisers in the $190 million prewash soil-and-stain-remover category.

The 30-second tv spot—the first new creative produced for Shout in two years—couples the Isley Brothers' 1959 hit, "Shout," with the product's past theme line, "Want a tough stain out? Shout it out!"

But standard product-demonstration shots are interspersed with a fast-paced series of scenes showing a tap dancer, soccer players, cheerleaders and waitresses—all dressed in stain-free clothing.

"We've been looking for a way to express more than just the product benefit, more than the fact that it removes stains. We want Shout to be associated with keeping the family looking good," said Shout product manager Patrick O'Brien.

Johnson also hopes to set Shout advertising apart from the more traditional styles employed by competitors, such as Greenville, S.C.-based Texize (Spray 'n Wash) and Oakland, Cal.-based Clorox Co.'s Clorox Prewash.

Chrysler retiring Ricardo

Detroit—Chrysler Corp. is shifting Chrysler's brand image to sportiness and performance from sophistication, a strategy change that last week brought down the curtain on actor Ricardo Montalban's 13-year run as brand spokesman.

Chrysler brand advertising in the 1987 model year will focus on "the driving experience" of models such as the restyled LeBaron coupe.

The car gets a sportier look as Chrysler aims it at the midsize specialty segment now dominated by the Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme, Ford Thunderbird and Mercury Cougar.

Mr. Montalban appeared in ads for the upscale New Yorker, LeBaron and Fifth Avenue Chrysler models.

Mr. Montalban, whose praise for Chrysler's "fine Corinthian leather" became a "household cliche," was philosophic. In a statement, he said, "In a world where spokesmanship longevity of the kind I had with Chrysler is almost unheard of, I feel only a sense of gratitude."

Chrysler may use Mr. Montalban again in future ads, a Chrysler spokesman said.

But no contractual arrangements have been made, added a spokesman for Brokaw Co., the Los Angeles-based pr agency for Mr. Montalban.

Century 21 becomes publishing house

Home seller aims book at new buyers

By BRIAN LOWRY

IRVINE, CAL.—Century 21 International has created an advertising-driven magazine as a tool to increase repeat business. It also joins other companies in making its client base available to other advertisers.

The nation's largest real estate broker this month began distributing the 170-page Complete Home Guide to its broker network. More than 620,000 home buyers will get the magazine over the next 12 months—a group 20 times more likely than the norm to purchase certain household items, Century 21 officials say.

Century 21 conceived the magazine as a way to maintain a link between broker and client, since the return rate in the real estate industry is only about 20%.

"There's no reason why someone in the industry can't increase repeat business a full 10% from what it is through aggressive marketing," said Century 21 senior vp-advertising and marketing Bruce Oseland.

Controlled Publishing & Marketing, Santa Monica, which produces the guide, convinced the company to turn the publication into an advertising vehicle.

Because the publication reaches only home buyers through individual Century 21 brokers, the company considers it a direct-marketing tool, as opposed to competing with publications such as House Beautiful.

Century 21 will update the magazine three times during its first year to allow in new advertisers. While eschewing sales goals, Mr. Oseland noted even a 3% increase in repeat or referral business would "mean millions of dollars" in the $16 billion residential real estate market.

Advertisers in the category-exclusive publication, which contains various home improvement tips, include First Interstate Bancorp, MCI Communications, U-Haul International and Magic Chef.

B&w or color pages in Complete Home Guide are identically priced at $75,000. That rate includes a yearlong run in Complete Home Guide plus six appearances in the every-other-monthly 21, another magazine published by Century 21.

Century 21 based the ad rate on the propensity of home owners to buy.

Data cited in USA Today showed new owners spend more than $6,000 in refurbishing during the first year they own their homes. This represents a potential $3.6 billion market generated by Century 21 clients.

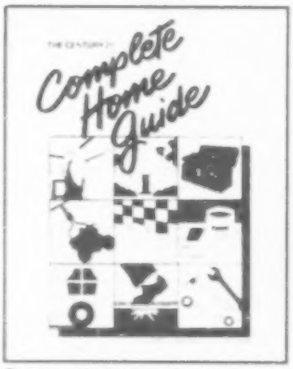
The program grew out of Century 21's Preferred Client Club, which currently mails 21 to 180,000 consumers.

The company hopes to bring that figure near 1 million by the end of next year.

Although other real estate companies send mailings to new clients, none has the client base for this sort of publication, Mr. Oseland contended. "The key figure is 620,000 [transactions]," he said. "It's not something a Red Carpet or Coldwell, Banker is going to want to duplicate."

The real estate market has been depressed recently due to uncertainty about President Reagan's tax reform package. Provisions in the legislation, if approved, would restrict home mortgage interest deductions to the house one lives in, excluding investment properties.

That kind of reform would dramatically limit home ownership for investment purposes, industry sources say.



Century 21 International, the nation's largest real estate broker, this month began distributing the 170-page Complete Home Guide to its broker network.

"The marketplace is really on hold until this thing passes," according to Mr. Oseland.

Anticipating that the tax package will pass before Labor Day, Century 21 will work up-to-date tax reform information into its annual Investor's Days, a weeklong series of seminars starting Oct. 6.

The event will get print, radio and network and spot tv support, via McCann-Erickson, New York.

Century 21 has an 11.4% share of the residential properties market, followed by Coldwell, Banker Real Estate Group, Los Angeles; ERA Real Estate, Shawnee Mission, Kan., and Red Carpet Corp. of America, Oklahoma City.

Sales promotion comes into its own

By PAUL L. EDWARDS

NEW YORK—Consumer sales promotion has grown steadily in the past 10 years, largely at the expense of traditional media advertising. Along the way, the definition of sales promotion has changed dramatically.

"Six or seven years ago, sales-promotion agencies were still collateral-driven," said Joseph Flanagan, president of Impact, the Chicago-based sales-promotion agency of Foote, Cone & Belding. "We were print-oriented, producing brochures and point-of-sale materials. Little strategic thinking went into what we did."

Today, sales promotion embraces a wide range of activities, many of them an integral part of a company's marketing plan. Frequent-flier programs have enabled airlines to build a base of loyal customers where none existed before. Sweepstakes and contests are a staple for some direct marketers. Rebates and financing plans sweeten the offer for car dealers. Magazines entice new readers with a seemingly limitless string of premiums. And for marketers of package goods, there is an unending flow of freestanding inserts, envelopes stuffed with coupons, game cards and contests.

Even the image of sales promotion has changed. Said Michael Wahl, president, Howard Marlboro Group, part of the Saatchi network since last year: "Sales promotion is no longer a bunch of checkered-suit guys selling colored fountain pens."

Understandably, advertising agencies are concerned that consumer-promotion spending will continue to grow, and it likely will. But just as likely, growth in consumer promotions will cut into trade-promotion spending, leaving media spending alone.

One reason is that large ad agencies are beginning to fight back, either by incorporating sales promotion in their ad programs or by buying sales-promotion agencies. Even more important, however, is the growing use of scanning equipment in retail stores.

The scanner enables manufacturers to get rapid feedback on the results of promotions directed at consumers. Redemption rates for coupons or sales volume can be obtained within days rather than the months it took before scanners. Trade promotions, usually taking the form of discounts to retailers or advertising allowances, are much more difficult to monitor and, for that reason, often result in abuses of the promotion.

Brown & Williamson Tobacco president Thomas Sandefur Jr., who had predicted promotion in the cigaret business might eventually outweigh advertising by a 4-to-1 ratio, more recently has taken a more conservative view.

"It probably won't go that high," he said in an interview with ADVERTISING AGE. "If you are marketing on a discounted basis, if all you do is go out and use stickers that say '$2 off,' you don't build any imagery and your brand becomes known as a discount brand. There's no long-term future in that."

If such a viewpoint holds, that would be welcome news for advertising agencies, which have seen their share of package-goods marketing budgets cut nearly 20% in the past five years.

Sales promotion has grown largely because of its ability to provide an immediate boost in sales. Manufacturers have learned to pump new life, albeit short-lived, into ailing brands by dropping coupons into the mail or an fsi. But some marketers charge, and sales-promotion executives concede, that too much promotion can erode brand loyalty.

In fact, Mr. Wahl said further cuts in advertising would be a serious mistake.

"It bothers me," said Mr. Wahl, "that in today's environment a brand manager can do a good job on sales promotion, but do nothing to build a brand.

"Sales promotion must work with media advertising. It should be used together, and good sales-promotion campaigns should work hand-in-hand with media."

Though Mr. Wahl is sincere and other sales-promotion executives share his view, ad agencies can hardly afford to sit back and relax.

Sales-promotion activity, for one thing, is hardly slowing down. And for another, sales-promotion tactics continue to improve and show many signs of beginning to build brand loyalty and not just short-term sales.

One of sales promotion's traditional techniques—the coupon—continues to grow unfettered by concerns its usefulness may be flagging.

Nearly 180 billion coupons were distributed last year, up 10% compared with 1984. In the past five years, coupon distribution is up 76%. And the number of companies distributing coupons has grown by 50% since 1980.

Yet the redemption rate for coupons is dropping. Over-all, only 3.6% of those coupons were redeemed last year, a 10% decline in redemption from 1981.

Undaunted, publishers of free-standing inserts continue to build their programs, as do packagers of cooperative coupon envelopes. This year, the four publishers of fsis will publish 108 issues. Though rates have declined significantly—from $7.25 to $6.25 per page per thousand distribution—total number of pages is way up.

"Over-all, the industry is doing about 10% to 15% better than last year," said Ken Bortner, president and ceo, Product Movers, New York.

Today, fsis account for nearly 60% of all coupons distributed.

"We have concerns about that at the agency," said Richard Hamilton, senior vp and media director, D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles. "When marketing dollars are diverted from advertising to promotion, what suffers in the long term is brand image."

Mr. Hamilton said that DMB&B is studying alternatives such as run-of-paper coupons and direct mail. Beyond that, he said, the agency also is looking at alternatives to coupon promotions, such as sweepstakes and price reductions to the trade. The agency, he said, is seeking a way to participate in the sales-promotion boom.

So are sales-promotion agencies. While the amount of money spent on promotion rivals that of advertising, very little of it passes through agencies. The vast majority of promotions are handled in-house.

Most package-goods couponing, and everything in fsis, is placed in-house; fsis grant no commissions to agencies. The opportunity, and the challenge, for agencies is to demonstrate that they can do the job more creatively and effectively.

PROMOTION'S RISING SHARE OF THE MARKETING DOLLAR

Consumer promotion spending by package-goods companies is on the rise, primarily at the expense of media advertising, as marketers embrace promotion techniques designed to build long-term sales as well as spot sales. Spending on promotion to the retail trade had held relatively steady. Figures below show per cent of total marketing dollars. Figures may not add to 100 due to rounding. Source: Donnelley Marketing.

Tv sports takes a dive

Even Super Bowl will 'deal'

By ROBERT RAISSMAN and LARRY G. COLLINS

NEW YORK—The next two weeks could be the most critical in the history of tv sports, and the prognosis is unequivocably grim for the networks.

While in recent weeks most attention has centered on the U.S. Football League's antitrust suit against the National Football League, network tv sports was developing into the best buyer's market ever. Cost-per-thousand rates for NFL games will be at least 10% to 15% below last year, and the networks are offering unprecedented amounts of multidaypart deals to advertisers, thus bringing down the price of prime time.

CBS is offering discounts on Super Bowl XXI if advertisers will take time in its September NFL games. If that won't do it, CBS will throw in college-basketball regular season and tournament games, and even its coveted National Basketball Assn. coverage—all at reduced prices—if advertisers will take pro and college football.

In order to move "Monday Night Football" in September, ABC is combining it with prime time and late night at 20% discounts. ABC also is offering "MNF" in combination with its Major League Baseball League Championship Series, with prices being cut drastically.

And NBC has sold its prime time programing at no price increase to advertisers willing to pay rate card prices for its NFL games. NBC's 1986-87 straight prime time rates increased 5% to 7%.

Most of those sales strategies have never before been offered in network sports.

The networks, facing the fourth consecutive year of soft sports sales and feeling extreme pressure from their new parent companies, are trying to sell all sports inventory upfront, eliminating the sports

Lotsa smoke, no fire

Ban tobacco ads? Marketers stay cool

By WILLIAM F. GLOEDE

There's a lot of smoke on Capitol Hill about banning tobacco advertising, but executives at the nation's largest tobacco companies are sitting back, lighting up and conducting business as usual.

They don't believe it'll happen.

And they're not in a panic over the fact that cigaret sales are sliding 1% to 2% per year, or over various moves to further curtail tobacco usage in the U.S.

"There are about 940 or 950 packages of cigarets sold in this country every second of every day around the clock. If it declines to 936, that's fine. If it declines to 932, that's fine, too," says J. Robert Ave, president and ceo of Loews Corp.'s Lorillard unit, the nation's fourth-largest cigaret maker.

Even though cigaret sales, by far the biggest sales segment in the tobacco industry, are sliding at the rate of between 1% and 2% per year, more than a quarter of all Americans use tobacco products. An estimated 50 million adults smoke cigarets, and only six companies fill nearly all the demand.

"Cigarets are a fantastic cash cow," says John C. Maxwell Jr., industry analyst for Furman Selz Dietz Mager & Birney, New York.

Mr. Maxwell proclaims the financial condition of the tobacco companies "fantastic," adding, "Philip Morris and Reynolds are throwing off almost $2.5 billion in [uncomitted] cash this year." He

He also noted that tobacco ads "sup-

Puritan changes oil

Will tout lowest saturated fat level

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Procter & Gamble, Cincinnati, today breaks an estimated $10 million health-oriented national campaign for a reformulated Puritan oil now that the term canola oil has been approved for marketing in the U.S.

New Puritan, reformulated with low erucic acid rapeseed oil, also known as canola, will replace the 20% soybean-oil and 80% corn-oil blend in Puritan in supermarkets this month, according to Don Tassone, a P&G spokeman. The first canola oil to be sold here, new Puritan will contain the lowest level of saturated fat on the market, he said.

Nabisco Brands, which markets Fleischmann's and Planter's oils, said there are no plans to introduce a canola-oil product here. It is not known whether rival Hunt-Wesson, Fullerton, Cal., will jump on the bandwagon if canola is successful.

The Grey Advertising campaign for new Puritan, which has 6% saturated fat, half of current Puritan's 12%, will continue to use Michael Learned, the Puritan spokeswoman, but will now stress even greater health benefits for the brand. One product claim notes

Fox signs up 79 affiliates for fourth net

By WAYNE WALLEY

LOS ANGELES—Fox Broadcasting Co. said last week it will start its fledgling tv network this fall with at least 79 independent tv stations as affiliates.

The affiliates, which have signed two-year agreements starting with the October premiere of "The Late Show starring Joan Rivers" and including FBC's limited prime time offerings in March, cover nearly 80% of the country.

Together with its six owned tv stations, which it acquired from Metromedia, Fox said it will have outlets in all of the top 20 tv markets. That includes Boston, where Fox said it expects to select an affiliate soon from among a number of interested independents.

This surprising support from group and independent station owners lends more credibility to Rupert Murdoch and 20th Century Fox chairman-ceo Barry Diller in their attempt to create a programming service to compete with the Big 3 networks.

When FBC outlined its plans for a fourth network earlier this year (AA, May 5), most observers expected Fox to attract only the lowest-rated independent stations. But David Johnson, FBC's senior vp-marketing, and David Hilton, vp-affiliate relations, said each of FBC's affiliates is "the best independent station available in each market."

In many markets, such as Detroit and San Francisco-Oakland, Fox snared the top rated independent station. In others, such as Seattle, it signed the second ranked indy in a market with four inde-

Cal. lottery may sanction shops

California State Lottery, Sacramento, is considering a provision that would bar agencies with ties to South Africa from pitching the $22 million-to-$24 million account, sources said. An aide to Assemblywoman Maxine Waters confirmed that the assemblywoman has suggested the commission prohibit agencies with South African offices from taking part in the review. The commission will solicit an opinion from Gov. George Deukmejian, who recently called for South African divestment in his gubernatorial campaign. "The governor and the commission have to be very sensitive on this issue," one source said. Such a provision could exclude several international agencies that have expressed an interest in the business, including Foote, Cone & Belding, JWT/West, McCann-Erickson and Young & Rubicam. Incumbent Rubin, Postaer & Associates, Los Angeles, wouldn't be affected. The

IRI adds package-goods scanning service

By SCOTT HUME

CHICAGO—Competition for market share among research companies tracking market share intensified last week as Information Resources Inc. announced its InfoScan package-goods scanning service (AA, July 28).

Basically a nationwide extension of its BehaviorScan service, widely used to track product test-marketing, InfoScan will track consumer purchasing of every product carrying a Universal Product Code in stores across the country as well as promotional activities (newspaper feature advertising, couponing, in-store merchandising and price reductions).

The data are correlated with individual purchasing patterns for 60,000 households and metered tv-viewing habits for 10,000 households.

As a result, said IRI president Gian Fulgoni, InfoScan provides information not only on what is being purchased, but also on who is doing the purchasing and on the advertising and promotions to which buyers have been exposed. That, he said, puts IRI ahead of rivals such as Dun & Bradstreet's A.C. Nielsen Co. and Time Inc.'s Selling Areas-Marketing Inc., which track product movement alone. Mr. Fulgoni said the market-tracking business which IRI is entering with InfoScan is a $300 million category.

Northbrook, Ill.-based A.C. Nielsen Co., which previously tracked product movement only through twice-monthly retailer audits, last year introduced its own UPC scanner-based tracking service called ScanTrack Plus. Mr. Fulgoni said that "when the patriarch [Nielsen] blessed scanners," IRI took it as an indication that its research method was "a breakthrough product" and that it was time to expand its BehaviorScan technology beyond the eight markets in which it has operated if IRI were to maintain its lead.

BehaviorScan accounts for 85% of the electronic test-marketing business, he said.

Initially, InfoScan will cover 820 stores in 31 markets, including 20 major metropolitan markets. By July, 1987, data will be collected in 1,300 stores in 41 markets, and in 2,080 stores in 53 markets by the end of 1987.

One sign of what Mr. Fulgoni said was strong and immediate interest in InfoScan from major marketers was the commitment of Cincinnati-based Procter & Gamble to be a charter subscriber. P&G is IRI's largest client, accounting for approximately $10 million of the research company's 1985 revenues of $75 million. Other charter subscribers include Cadbury Schweppes, Campbell Soup Co., Chesebrough-Pond's, Del Monte Corp., Dial Corp., General Foods, General Mills, Miles Labs, PepsiCo, RJR Nabisco, Scott Paper Co. and Richardson-Vicks.#

AA to include monthly creative insert in N.Y.

NEW YORK—New York Creativity, a publication serving the creative community here, will be introduced to this market as part of ADVERTISING AGE's Sept. 8 issue.

Billed as "The newspaper of the creative process," New York Creativity, or N.Y.C., will thereafter appear as a pullout section in copies of AA circulated in the New York City area every first Monday of the month. N.Y.C. will carry features and interviews with agency creatives, producers, commercial production house directors and editors, animators, creators of special effects, commercial music composers, musicians and producers, photographers and craftsmen engaged in printing and graphics design.

"Creativity is the heart of advertising and the process deserves the attention N.Y.C. will provide," said Rance Crain, president, Crain Communications Inc., and AA editor-in-chief. Louis De Marco, AA vp-publisher, announced that Charles Gabrielson and James P. Forkan will head the new venture as marketing director and editor, respectively. Mr. Forkan, AA senior editor-administration, has specialized in coverage of the tv and commercial music fields.

Mr. Gabrielson, who joined AA last year as marketing sales director, will have over-all responsibility for marketing and operating N.Y.C. He previously held advertising manager roles at Gannett Westchester-Rockland Newspapers and R.H. Macy's Bamberger's division. "N.Y.C. will be the first publication of its kind to bring together under one roof all the creative specialties—from concept to design to production," he said. Mr. Forkan, who will continue to write for AA, noted the new monthly will focus on "the unsung heroes of the creative process."#

Luring the young to Mad Ave.

By Lisa Rae Gossels

How can ad agencies continue to attract the caliber of young applicant so vital to our future? What do we have to offer entry-level talent, and how can we keep and motivate them?

I recently talked with career counselers at some 10 graduate and undergraduate universities, and spoke with recruiters at some 10 Manhattan ad agencies. Finally, I concentrated on the young people in our industry—80 of them, under the age of 30, by questionnaire.

Now before we can attract good, new talent to our industry, we've got to know where our competition is. I learned that very quickly by talking with some college career counselors. One counselor from a major university told me that 10 years ago about 5% to 7% of Columbia Business School's graduating class went on to careers in advertising. Now the number is at 2% to 3%. As he put it, "Advertising lags other fields in compensation. Students are also faced with a greater variety of career opportunities in marketing—the most prevalent being financial marketing." Madison Avenue no longer seems to have the monopoly on creativity. Nowadays on Wall Street, creative minds are a commodity.

What motivated our sample of people under 30 to give the ad biz a try? Here is a list of their expectations (above), ranked from high to low. Seventy-nine per cent of the respondents chose advertising because it was creative, and 15% chose it as a possible step to a sales job. These numbers tell us, in broad terms, that they see advertising as creative, exciting and fast-paced. It also offers the possibility for broad creative exposure.

Young people's expectations of their advertising jobs

☆☆☆ indicates expectations were met
☆☆ met somewhat
☆ poorly met
Numbers represent percentage of 80 respondents

Creative	79%	☆
Exciting	77	☆☆
Creative exposure	68	☆
O-T-J training	63	☆☆

Good salary	41	☆
Specific training	40	☆
General training	40	☆☆
Glamorous	31	☆
Step to brand mgmt.	21	☆☆
Step to sales	15	☆☆

On the other hand, only 41% of the respondents had high salary expectations going in—and 60% did not choose advertising based on its specific or general training programs. This tells me that our industry has a reputation among young people for underpaying and undertraining its employes.

Which expectations of young people are being met? Well—advertising is young, as expected. And in terms of initial perception, advertising gave young people the opportunity to work on the expected range of businesses.

But what of expectations met somewhat? It is in this group that we begin to see some discrepancies. Advertising, initially perceived as exciting, proves in reality to be somewhat less than exciting.

Okay—we can live with that.

But what about on-the-job and general training? Now these motivations weren't initially high, so if the expectations are met somewhat, this means that young people may be getting less training than they had hoped.

Once at the top of the career expectation list, creative ranks near the bottom in terms of industry realities. If young people's desires for creative exposure and self-expression are also not being met, how can we maintain their interest and enthusiasm?

What about young people's salary expectations? If they were low the first go around, they are even lower now.

This being the case, how can we expect to hold on to our

'Can do' vs. 'Can't fail'

By Charles G. Burck

The Challenger space shuttle catastrophe continues to yield lessons for managers everywhere. Prominent among these are that top executives cannot afford to be isolated from the people below, who are in better touch with what is going on, and cannot afford to set unrealistic goals.

Yet not even this conclusion goes to the heart of the trouble at NASA. The flaw—call it an institutional virtue gone wrong—can trip many companies with overweening ambitions. In its widely hailed report on the tragedy, the commission headed by former Secretary of State William P. Rogers criticized "NASA's legendary 'can do' attitude." The agency, Mr. Rogers and his colleagues admonished, can't do everything.

Sen. John Glenn went further. The can-do spirit, he noted, worked perfectly well in the old days, when it included a powerful commitment to safety. In Sen. Glenn's view, "can do" gave way over the years to "an arrogant 'can't fail' attitude." Managers assumed that no matter what risks they took, the shuttle would succeed.

"Can't fail" arrogance is common enough in corporations that have long been on a roll. For years Detroit routinely launched badly built cars because the auto manufacturers had always been able to sell whatever they made. By the time they realized that consumers were rebelling, well-crafted Japanese cars had captured a commanding share of the market.

Sometimes "can't fail" reflects desperation. All too often the new venture is so important to the corporate future that it must succeed. Evidence to the contrary is not received with pleasure by top management. Nor are the courageous people who dare present that evidence. NASA suffered from this dangerous imperative, having made unrealistic promises in order to win congressional support.

Good internal communications will not help if top management does not want to hear about impending disaster. For the people down in the organization, survival dictates a blind eye.

Setting realistic goals is not good enough either. Most of the great technological breakthroughs were "unrealistic" ideas made by determined, creative people. A company whose goals are invariably realistic soon sinks into lassitude: The range of undertakings viewed as realistic gradually narrows, and managers become risk-averse caretakers of corporate assets.

It would be easy to draw the wrong lesson from the Challenger tragedy by failing to distinguish between can-do and can't-fail. A dynamic organization has to take risks, and without a can-do spirit, it can't do much. That means that top executives have to know how to set "unrealistic" goals that work, and how to motivate people to go after them with fire in their bellies rather than fear in their bowels. The company has to be strong enough to absorb the cost of failure—and smart enough to listen when the people who know what is happening reach the limits of the can-do spirit.#

Welcome to Nightsoil Radio

By Bill Earls

Good morning, boys and girls. This is Sleazy Sam Sludge on Nightsoil Radio—the radio program that asks the burning question: "Who else is that on my pillow?"

This is the radio station your mother doesn't want you to listen to.

This is the radio station your teachers hate.

To hell with those people—what do they know, right?

On with the show. Tell you what. Lean over, slap your sleeping partner on the fanny and say, "Wake up, you lazy bum."

You don't have a sleeping partner?

Shame on you. You must be uggggg-lee.

Here's our favorite song for the morning, "Like a Virgin." We hope there's nobody like that out there, don't we?

Stamp out virgins. That's our motto.

Hey, you got one of them freaky teachers wants you to learn algebra and all that other junk? Tell you how to fix him. Get your girlfriend to wear something low cut, see—and when he's trying to look down her dress, you fill his pockets with glue.

Okay, it's call-in time again. You have five minutes to call in to SCUZ Radio—and tell me your favorite thing to do with whipped cream. Give me a break, though—don't even mention strawberry shortcake.

I hope you're going out to buy my latest book—"The 1,000 Dirtiest Things I Ever Said on the Air." It's in all the bookstores and it's crowding out Shakespeare, Dylan Thomas and all that other dumb stuff. This is good writing—things I said right on the radio. And got away with.

Remember the motto of Radio Sleaze—"If it ain't dirty, it ain't fun."

Hang on a sec while we play the theme music from "Porky's" for all you film buffs out there.

Hey, we got a winner in the whipped cream contest. It's Susie Gondawanda—and I can't even tell you what she said. Susie wins a Prince album, a mirror for her bedroom ceiling and tickets to whatever R-rated movie she can sneak into. Susie's a freshman at Central High in Goobertown, by the way.

And, hey, fellas—she carries her own whipped cream.

Oh, just a minute—it's Lord's Prayer time on Reverend Radio. The Supreme Court says that you can't have prayers in school—bunch of pinko old men. We'll show them. Let's all say the Lord's Prayer together right now—and see if they shut us down for that.

Thank God for the First Amendment.

Here's a letter from Wilbur Flunge of Wibbleville. He was just suspended from school for smoking in geometry class and thinks that if we call his principal, Nasty Norman, maybe he can get back in school.

"It was just a little cigaret," Wilbur writes. "I don't think I should have to stay home and not see the cafeteria food fight."

We agree, Wilbur, and you get the Amnesty Award from Sleazy Sam.

Okay, lovers of truth and justice, call Wibbleville High School and tell Nasty Norman that if he don't let Wilbur back in school, you'll slash his tires. And maybe his suit—with him in it.

Here's a request. You say your name is Mary? When was the first time you made love with the milkman, Mary? You don't have a milkman? So what? You're 11 years old—you should find a milkman, then.

Okay, just because you promised to find a milkman, here's the song you requested, Mary, "You Make Me Feel Like a

Low-price software flooding pc market

Sale increases expected this year

By CLEVELAND HORTON

Computer software marketers are joining makers of personal computers in a scramble toward lower prices. The result is new, sometimes stiff, competition at the low end of the software market.

The competitive climate also is drawing new attention to the challenge of marketing software, as manufacturers seek the appropriate price to spur sales, fight for shelf space and wrestle with the need of consumers for "hand-holding" after they make a purchase.

Even companies with highly successful, high-price products, such as Ashton-Tate with its dBase data management system, are jumping into the cut-price commodity sector of the market with stripped-down or simplified versions of their breadwinners.

Today, a full-feature pc software program for word processing, accounting, database management and other business tasks is as likely to carry a $69.95 price tag as the more traditional $695.

"Everyone is trying to get into the low end of the market," says Jan Lewis, president of Palo Alto (Cal.) Research Group, a high-tech market research company.

The growing number of cheap computers arriving from Taiwan, Korea and other Far Eastern countries is forcing individual and corporate computer purchasers to look at software in a new way. If a company spends $600 for a machine that duplicates the functions of IBM's $2,895 PC XT computer, would it spend $695 for Ashton-Tate's best-selling dBASE III-Plus?

Total sales of software to the "workplace" market will hit $4.7 billion this year, up from $3.8 billion last year and $2.7 billion in 1984, according to Future Computing, a Richardson, Tex.-based market research company. Despite the high-price market leaders, Future Computing estimates 60% of software packages, by unit sales, are priced at $200 or less.

Established market leaders such as Ashton-Tate and Lotus Development Corp. continue to dominate their segments of the software market with relatively high-price products. But newcomers often try to elbow in through the low end of the market.

"The fact that Ashton-Tate and Lotus are able to survive at that high price point is very rare in the industry," said Ms. Lewis.

For Lotus, the company's early success with its multifunctional 1-2-3 spreadsheet, assisted by an extravagant $2 million introductory ad budget, made the program a "must-buy" for companies. Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, Boston, handles, although Lotus now is not promoting 1-2-3.

Exploiting its position as a safe and proven standard for business, Lotus is able to fend off the low-price look-alikes from less established competitors such as Paperback Software, a Berkeley-based publisher founded by computer industry maverick Adam Osborne. Paperback Software promotes its VP-Plannner as a "keystroke for keystroke" replica of 1-2-3, with several additional features. Its VP-Planner carries a $99.95 suggested price tag, compared with 1-2-3's hefty $495.

Sales of VP-Planner hardly bolted out of the gate at its introduction last October, but recently have picked up. Paperback Software, which markets other software packages as well, recorded total sales of just more than $1 million last year, and a loss of $810,000. For the first quarter of this year, the company broke even on total revenues of $650,000, mostly derived from VP-Planner. By contrast, Lotus sold 630,000 copies of 1-2-3.

Paperback Software and VP-Planner are pitted against Mosaic Software, Cambridge, Mass., which markets another 1-2-3 look-alike named Twin. Mosaic originally priced its entry at $149 but recently cut the price to $99, breaking what some observers believe is the psychological sticking point for software customers.

The company says it has sold about 30,000 copies of Twin, using limited, in-house advertising.

Paperback Software takes a more aggressive approach to promotion. The company's ads, prepared in-house, appear frequently in the computer magazines and always include an order form.

Dallas, Tex.-based Dac Software in just 13 months succeeded in selling 130,000 copies of Dac-Easy Accounting, a $69.95 package competing primarily against companies charging considerably more for their accounting packages. For example, Chang Laboratories, San Jose, Cal., one of the top five accounting software program publishers, charges $500 for a package that provides fewer functions than Dac's software.

Like Paperback Software, Dac also includes order forms in its print ads. Formerly at Ogilvy & Mather, Houston, the account is now handled in-house.

MicroPro International recently "discovered" low-price software. The San Rafael-based company once dominated the word-processing market with WordStar, one of the first full-feature writing programs. Since its introduction in 1978, MicroPro has sold more than 2 million copies of WordStar.

Lower-price word processors such as PFS:Write, and easier-to-use programs such as MicroSoft's Word, knocked WordStar off the best-seller lists several years ago and MicroPro never fully recovered. After an abortive effort to diversify into other types of software, MicroPro decided to concentrate on its former strength. In October, 1984, MicroPro released WordStar 2000, priced above the original WordStar program. In May, 1985, the company introduced Easy, an easy-to-learn word processor with some but not all of the features and speed of WordStar, at a quarter of the price.

Priced at $99, Easy is both MicroPro's loss leader and entry-level product. It is designed for infrequent writers, although MicroPro assumes some Easy customers will graduate to its WordStar programs.

While MicroPro created completely new software for the low-price category, other software publishers will strip features from a successful (and usually more expensive) program and market it at drastically lower prices.

WordPerfect, Orem, Utah, ranked sixth among word-processor publishers last year with its $495 program of the same name,

Lotus Development Corp.'s 1-2-3 spreadsheet software continues to dominate its segment of the market with a relatively high-price product. But newcomer Dac Software has elbowed in at the low end of the electronic spreadsheet market.

Here's the Money-Saving Tip of the Week from the Grabbit brothers of Cliptown. They say to go into a supermarket, buy some of that cheap French bread and, while you're walking around, fold a couple of expensive sausages into the bread and then close the bag up. Cheap eating, they say. Thanks, guys. Don't come to my store.

Tell you what, it's getting pretty quiet here. While we play something gentle from Twisted Sister, why don't you call in and tell me the funniest thing you ever said while making love. No fair calling in if you're over 16—we don't want to tie up the phone lines.

Speaking of phones. The Weekly Take Care of Yourself Award goes to Reginald Snibblefirsch, who took a job as night janitor—just to call his senior class in Hong Kong from work. Good trick, Reggie.

Song time. Let's all sing together the theme song of Scuzbucket Radio:

"We're a bunch of sleazes/We say what we pleases/You can try to stop us/But no one can ever top us.

"We wallow in sex and slime/We do it all the time/We tell lots of bathroom jokes/Insult lots of folks/Fill the air with 'damns' and 'hells'/Cause what we're doing sells."

good people without paying them more? What can we do to attract good entry-level people?

1. FIND THEM. Let them know we exist. That means recruiting on more college campuses—not only for account executive positions, but media and creative as well.

2. SELL OURSELVES BETTER. Let young people know we offer a variety of career opportunities.

3. PAY THEM BETTER. If we want to attract the best young talent, we must offer competitive starting salaries. I suggest lowering the second and third pay increments to offset the initial loss.

4. TRAIN THEM. In all areas. General and specific. And where we don't have the manpower or resources, we should let applicants know we will finance some of their outside education.

But beyond that, what can be done to keep them in tow?

Keep them involved. Make them feel part of a greater whole.

If you make young people feel part of your company, they'll be less likely to leave.

If we want to compete for and hold on to the good people out there, we, the great communicators, must learn to communicate better—and share.#

Cigar sales still slumping

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

In 1985, the cigar industry continued its downward sales trend, a decline that has been continuing for more than two decades. In units, the large category fell 7.7%, small cigars were down 16% and little cigars were down 1.2%. Overall, the market share for the three types of cigars stayed pretty much stable.

On a dollar basis, sales also fell pretty much across the board. However, premium-price cigars continued to move up; a recent study shows that 53% of the ceos in the Fortune 500 companies smoke cigars.

Swisher continued its No. 1 position, but lost some share. Most of the other major companies maintained or increased share.

Again in the little-cigar category, Dutch Treats seems to be the only product to show some share increase.

About the only new products out there come from Swisher—Swisher Sweet Wood Tipped and the King Edward Wood Tipped products in regional markets.

Also, King Edward has a slim in test market.

Simmons Research data shows the younger generation (18 to 34) appears to be picking up as a cigar-smoking segment, while the older generation cigar smokers (over 65) seem to be the biggest consumer of all.

In the case of little cigars and cigarillos, again this appears to be concentrated in the young age bracket and over-65 in the high-income bracket.

A study by Mediamark Research shows that about 7% of the population smokes cigars, and college graduates appear to be the heavier smokers.#

Cigar market shares

Small cigars led the industry's continuing unit sales decline last year with a category loss of 16%. Large cigars fell 7.7% and little cigars dropped 1.2%. Market share for the three categories was generally unchanged. John H. Swisher & Sons clung to its No. 1 spot in the large and small category while losing .3% in share, and Dutch Treats recorded the only share increase in the little cigar category. Large and small cigars are combined in this table for industry reporting purposes. Source: John C. Maxwell.

Glad adds color to lock bags

By LISA E. PHILLIPS

Dow Chemical's Ziploc plastic bag still has the lock on the interlocking plastic bag market, but it may be facing its heftiest challenge this year from rival Glad plastic bags, now marketed by First Brands Corp., Danbury, Conn., which just purchased the business from Union Carbide.

Glad Lock bags, featuring a unique color-changing seal, broke a network tv campaign in early July following the final phase of its yearlong national expansion. The third in a series of 30-second tv commercials for the brand, titled "Kindergarten," via Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, broke July 21.

The ads, each featuring at least one child, stress the color-change feature of Glad's seal, comprising a blue line of adhesive on one side and a yellow line on the other. When pressed together, the adhesive turns green and "you know your bag is sealed," according to Glad's tv spot spokesman, actor Tom Bosley.

"Kids love it. It's fun and it gets across that we're the only bag with a color-changing seal," said Jeff Schnell, Glad Lock product manager at First Brands.

Mr. Schnell declined to disclose spending on the Glad Lock campaign, which will run for at least a year, he said. No other new creative is expected.

The product line changed hands with the completion of the purchase of the business by former Union Carbide executives, who formed First Brands. Danbury-based Union Carbide put the product line on the selling block last year as part of a successful defense against GAF Corp.'s takeover attempt.

Eveready and Energizer batteries were bought by Ralston Purina Co., and First Brands also bought the Simoniz, Prestone and STP automotive-product lines.

Ziploc, with a 65% share of the interlocking plastic bag market, last year had measured spending of $18 million for its food storage, freezer, microwave and sandwich bag lines, according to Leading National Advertisers.

Glad Lock illustrates the benefits of its bags in advertising by showing kids having an unfortunate accident with competitors' bags, such as strawberry jam leaking out of a bag.

While zip-closures have "made a significant impact" in the food storage bag market, said Mobil Oil spokesman Jim Amana, Mobil's Baggies brand twist-tie plastic bags are still the over-all market leader, with 35% of the market. Ziploc accounts for 20% of the over-all food storage bag market, and Glad trails with 18%, he said.

The company is satisfied with the performance of its twist-tie bag and has no plans to introduce its own interlocking system, Mr. Amana said.

Mobil's Baggies and Hefty brand storage bags were backed by $2.7 million in measured ad spending last year, via Ted Bates Advertising/New York.

Glad spent only $3.4 million in measured media to support its food storage, freezer and sandwich bags. The majority of the total $18.2 million measured spending for Glad last year backed its other plastic products, such as trash and garbage bags and microwave food wrap.#

Drug outlook bright: Kline

Nonprescription proliferation will continue

FAIRFIELD, N.J.—The nonprescription-drug industry will continue to experience steady growth during the next several years, fueled by acquisitions, the switch from prescription to nonprescription status for some drugs and the emergence of new applications for existing drugs.

That analysis, from Charles H. Kline & Co., here, is based both on this year's growth in the over-the-counter market and on some of the changes that have taken place recently in the drug industry.

Sales of nonprescription drugs are forecast to increase 7% this year, compared with last year's 5.9% increase.

The survey predicts otc growth will continue.

According to the Kline survey, the increasing popularity of cross-over products, medications that can be used for more than one condition, has had a tremendous impact on the drug industry.

One such cross-over product is fiber, which is now being used as a diet aid and a laxative.

Sales of diet aids such as Schering-Plough's Fibre-Trim and laxatives such as Merrell-Dow's Citrucel were helped substantially by consumer interest in fiber, the survey showed.

Additionally, calcium helped revive the antacid category in 1985, with Norcliff-Thayer's Tums posting a sales increase of 34%.

Calcium also created a new category of otcs, calcium supplements, which Kline estimates will post 8% unit growth annually through 1990.

> The increasing popularity of cross-over products, medications that can be used for more than one condition, has had a tremendous impact on the drug industry.

Another contributor to Kline's favorable prediction is the increase in sales for major drug companies after mergers and acquisitions. According to the study, Procter & Gamble's otc business increased 350% in 1985, following its acquisitions of Richardson-Vicks and Searle Consumer Products. P&G now ranks fifth among nonprescription-drug companies.

Kline also predicts that increased promotion of Warner-Lambert's Benadryl and A.H. Robins' Dimetapp, which were both switched to nonprescription status in 1985, will fuel growth in the cold and allergy markets in 1986.

Last year, according to the study, both products increased their market shares.

The increased popularity of cold relievers that contain ibuprofen is another factor that should help increase sales and spur growth in the otc industry.

Ibuprofen-based pain relievers are estimated to capture 15% of the pain-reliever market this year, up from 8% in 1985.

Marketing exclusivity of ibuprofen for American Home Products (Advil) and Bristol-Myers (Nuprin) ends in September, opening the way for other otc manufacturers to take advantage of this growing market.

Johnson & Johnson already has announced the launch of an ibuprofen-based product, and Upjohn, which is not bound by the market exclusivity, and American Home Products both launched new ibuprofen-based products earlier this month.

The complete survey is available from Charles H. Kline & Co., 330 Passaic Avenue, Fairfield, N.J. 07006-2099.#

Tuning in strong marketing signals

By Janice Steinberg

Radio stations are fighting harder than ever to stay on top of intensely competitive markets. As the going gets tough, the tough in every market are fine tuning formats, seeking new personalities and promoting community events. They also are turning to state-of-the-art marketing: Geodemographic and psychographic research are radio's newest, shiniest weapons.

"Psychographic research is the wave of the future. It's interesting, it's insightful, it will make managers think," says Robert R. Davis, manager-corporate research for Midwest Communications, Minneapolis, owner of WCCO (am), Minneapolis.

Janice Steinberg is a free-lance writer and former radio station promotion director.

Arbitron's geodemographic Target Aid, which pairs each Zip code in a market with one of 47 cluster groups, such as "average educated, married couples, children, homeowners," has 220 station subscribers. Access to the information costs $320. Each request for specific information is priced based on complexity and size.

"Stations are doing much more sophisticated breakdowns and it's influencing the way they build promotions," says Danny Flamberg, senior vp-communications at the Radio Advertising Bureau, New York. "They are crafting their promotions to appeal to the life styles, the attitudes, the language of the people who are listening."

"Radio's got to be bigger than life," says Cindy Spodek, director-marketing at KIOI (fm), San Francisco. "You've got to be warm and cuddly and loved by your audience, but you've also got to have that incredible ability to pull off what nobody else can do."

Last summer, KIOI conducted a promotion in conjunction with Safeway Food Stores, Oakland, Cal., in which 101 people won trips to Disneyland. The seven-week promotion, called Celebration Vacation Sweepstakes, cost the station about $50,000 for tv spots and entry blanks.

Safeway paid more than $150,000 for tv, newspaper and spots on other radio stations—which mentioned the sweepstakes but did not name KIOI—and received more than $200,000 in KIOI spot time. Safeway also featured KIOI in extensive point-of-sale advertising in area stores.

KIOI's ratings went from 3.3 in Arbitron spring, 1985, ratings for 12-plus listeners to 4.0 for the contest period, and Ms. Spodek says the Disneyland promotion will run again this summer.

> "With radio today you can't just run some tv spots or run some print ads or run a billboard."
> Lee Pocock
> KSL (am), Salt Lake City

The station also has done some imaginative low-cost promotions. A transplanted New Yorker, Ms. Spodek put on a New York "reunion" as a KIOI promotion in April, 1985, flying in Sabrett's hot dogs, cases of Yoo-Hoo beverage and Rheingold beer to a San Francisco bar. Although KIOI promoted the party only on the air—New York Mayor Ed Koch cut a promo—more than 800 people showed up.

"Word of mouth was phenomenal," Ms. Spodek says. "A listener called directory assistance and the operator noticed her heavy New York accent and asked if she was going to the KIOI party."

The station held a Chicago reunion in June, 1985, featuring Gino's pizza, White Castle hamburgers and an autographed Cubs baseball.

Total cost of both parties was $3,000. American Airlines flew in the food in trade for promotional considerations.

Also in the "bigger than life" category, this spring WNEW (fm), New York, gave away eight Porsches. At a total cost of $229,000 for the cars, director of advertising and promotion Rose Polidoro says she got a deal.

"It had the most incredible word of mouth buzz, it expanded the demographic in terms of hitting the hot button for a lifestyle prize, and it was on the air for three months," she says. Latest Arbitron ratings for spring, 1986, show WNEW went from a 3.7 rating to 3.9.

"Here was this promotion that awarded eight wonderful life style desirable prizes—incredible word of mouth—and it cost me one-fourth of what [a full-blown media campaign] would have cost. If I had put together a television schedule to compete with this, it would have been a phenomenal cost."

WNEW (fm) personality Dave Herman (in hat) shared smiles with six winners of Porsches and Bob Horowitz of Porsche Place (far left) after a three-month promotion at the New York station.

Although WNEW preferred Porsches, tv remains radio's most popular advertising medium. According to Broadcast Advertisers Reports, New York, stations ran $62.4 million of spot tv in 1985, representing 70% of all radio station advertising. The 1985 spending is up from $33.8 million in 1980.

Actual expenditures for tv may have gone up even more. Although the BAR figures include traded time, Danny Flamberg says stations are increasing buying rather than trading for tv time.

"Part of the increase in tv buys versus trades is the appreciation of the value of television as a reach medium for blanketing a market," Mr. Flamberg says. "Part is the greater availability of syndicated television commercials, which reduce the productive costs and give you higher production values than were ever available before." (See related story on Page S-4.)

Tv spots bring stations important residual benefits in markets influenced by ad agencies. Local media buyers, for example, may be sold by well-placed and well-produced tv spots, Mr. Flamberg says.

"You want women 18 to 34, so, like every other station in America, you try to get a local avail in 'Dynasty.' That's not targeting, that's a shotgun. But all the media buyers in town know you've bought it and you're getting incredible play and they're saying, 'Hey! KXRC is hot, they've got this new commercial, they've got this new image.' The value of that is so much greater than the number of eyeballs watching 'Dynasty.'"

Despite tv's benefits, stations are weighing the cost more carefully than ever, according to Erica Farber, vp-general manager of New York-based Interep Marketing Systems, which represents more than 1,000 stations.

"People are spending their money smarter," she says. "If they're going to use television, stations are taking a hard look. Can they really afford to buy television properly? They're looking at ways to dominate particular outside advertising vehicles, rather than doing a little of everything."

Outdoor is big, too. In Los Angeles, KNX (am) spends almost equal amounts on outdoor and tv. "Outdoor is a logical point-of-purchase medium for radio," says KNX director-advertising and promotion Fred Bergendorff. "People are in their cars, and they're only a fingertip away from the pushbuttons."

He says that by using a combination of outdoor and tv, the station's message is reinforced.

Los Angeles' KIIS-FM uses outdoor almost exclusively. Vp-station manager Lynn Anderson-Powell was unwilling to discuss whether KIIS is planning something new to win listeners from rival KPWR-FM. (See related story on Page S-6.)

In addition to traditional uses of tv and outdoor, radio marketers have discovered direct mail. Unidyne, a San Diego-based radio station promotional service, has done more than 200 direct mail campaigns in 115 markets in the past five years, according to Ernie Kovacs, sales manager.

When Unidyne's "Incredible Prize Catalog" arrives at every home in a station's market, promising a range of expensive goodies if listeners call within 15 minutes of hearing their entry number on WXYZ, people listen. David Spence, general manager of KVIL (am, fm), Dallas, credits the "Incredible Prize Catalog" with a three-point ratings gain. In addition to the prize catalog, Unidyne offers several other contests, including "The Check's in the Mail."

Similarly, adult contemporary WLVE (fm), Miami, sent a direct mail piece to more than 80,000 businesses, knowing that secretaries usually open the mail and turn on an office radio.

Another aspect of promotion many stations consider indispensable is community events. "With radio today you can't just run some tv spots or run some print ads or run a billboard. You just aren't going to get the attention," says Lee Pocock, director-promotion and creative services at KSL (am), the No. 1 station in Salt Lake City. "I believe you've constantly got to be out there, doing something."

Among KSL's 80 events a year are a radiothon that raised $120,000 for a children's hospital.

"Community involvement is probably the most important promotion any radio station can do. The bottom line is maintaining visibility in the community that we would like to have as our listening audience," says Jon Quick, director-marketing and promotions at WCCO. One of the station's most successful events is the Twin Cities Marathon. WCCO puts its call letters on the start and finish banners and t-shirts and also covers the race live from its mobile van.

"Being a vital part of the community is one of the things that has really helped our numbers grow," says Jim Marchyshyn, director-marketing and promotion at St. Louis' No. 2 station, KSHE (fm). KSHE does an annual "Coats for Kids" campaign and "the biggest blood drive in Missouri," he says.

Mr. Marchyshyn voiced an issue expressed at some of top stations around the country. Despite the industry's excitement about psychographics, "Research is good to a point, but you still have to know your market and go with a gut feeling," he says.

Midwest Communications' Mr. Davis has a lot of respect for gut feelings. "The best thing I can do as a researcher is to give managers enough information so that their gut is a little more finely honed."

Does the D.J. in Pittstown, USA tell your dealers how to advertise your product on the air?

ONLY EVERY DAY.

Your dealers let their local radio stations be their guide when they want to buy retail air time. Often, a station's D.J. sells the air time, tapes some canned music and does the voice-over from a form script that's altered to "fit" your dealers' needs. It's all designed to sell your product at the retail level — you hope!

Pontiac, Wrangler, Subaru, FTD, Toyota, Amoco, Cadillac, Suzuki, Honda, Kawasaki, GM Parts, VW and other major manufacturers don't just hope. They count on us to deliver THEIR MESSAGE — not some D.J.'s — to radio stations and their dealers in one neat package.

We're the KWIKEE® RADIO BROADCAST SYSTEM (KRBS™). And we can deliver YOUR MESSAGE, too.

Our base package includes: a soundsheet with up to eight minutes of sound for your music beds, jingles, pre-produced spots and/or donuts; three printed pages for your approved scripts, co-op information or whatever suits your needs; an identifying tab and distribution to our 4,500 subscribing stations. Those stations place your materials in the KRBS binder that we provide for them. Or you may choose distribution to 7,500 stations, or a mailing to match stations in your dealers' areas. Optional creative services are also available.

Worldwide ad spending growth

A survey of advertising industry experts around the world indicates that 1986 ad spending in most of Europe will be higher than initially anticipated, but lower in South Africa and parts of Latin America. Inflation has been factored out and currency devaluations are not included. Source: Advertising Age.

Private tv sparks jump in European ad budgets

An Advertising Age roundup

Foreign advertising expenditures are soaring higher than anyone predicted at the beginning of the year, due to new private tv channels in Europe.

At the same time, surging inflation is sending the ad industries in Latin America and South Africa into a tailspin, but not enough to offset advances in Europe.

Those forecasts emerged from Advertising Age's latest twice-a-year survey of ad industry executives worldwide.

The survey supports predictions by Robert Coen, senior vp-director of forecasting, McCann-Erickson, New York, who recently said ad spending outside the U.S. will be up 26.7% over 1985, compared to a 7.6% increase in the U.S. (AA, June 30).

Mr. Coen's figures were converted into dollars, and consequently are more bullish than Ad Age's, which are expressed in the local currency. "I would not be surprised if my figures were revised upward at the end of the year," he said. "I've factored in a conservative exchange rate."

The revised 1986 Ad Age forecast shows real (i.e., with inflation factored out) growth in the U.K., France, Spain and Germany nearly twice as high as anyone expected earlier this year. Forecasts for Brazil, Mexico and Italy have been revised downward. Australia and Japan remain unchanged.

EUROPE

The growing number of private tv channels is the single most important factor boosting 1986 advertising expenditure figures in Europe.

"With additional tv time in major markets like France, Italy, Belgium and Denmark, that's a hell of a lot of time," said Bill Tragos, TBWA's ceo.

TBWA, with 75% of its billings overseas, expects a double-digit increase this year over last, based in dollars, he said.

In Spain, softer oil prices, a weaker dollar and Spain's entry into the European Economic Community in January have led Spanish admen to speculate that ad expenditures will be up 22% by the end of the year—considerably higher than the previous 13% forecast made in February.

Ad spending in Spain grew 17% in real terms during the first six months of 1986 compared with the same period last year. Political ads for a recent election and for the NATO referendum "will make up 3% to 4% of the over-all increase," said Julian Bravo, director general, J. Walter Thompson S.A.

In France, predictions climbed from a 4% increase expected in February to 10%. The French Advertising Agency Assn. attributed the upswing to the growth of private tv channels after the ousting of the Socialist majority in March.

"The function creates the organ, or the more media we have, the more advertisers will buy the space," said Jacques Bordelais, president of Bordelais, Lemeunier & Leo Burnett.

In the U.K., estimates of ad-spending growth for the year doubled, from 3% predicted in February to 6% now. Expenditures in the first half of '86 climbed 9%, compared to a depressed 1985 first half. However, the British Advertising Assn. predicted a second-half slowing.

"Real incomes have been going up by around 6% in the country so far this year," said Mike Waterson, AA research director. "So consumers have had a lot more money to spend. At the same time, profits have been improving."

Germany expects a modest 3%-to-5% increase, despite a zero inflation rate. A 1% increase was previously predicted.

Italy was the only European country surveyed where growth predictions fell—from 8% to 5%.

Angelo Usai, president of McCann-Erickson Italiana, said, "I would say at midyear that we can expect growth in spending, though not the kind we saw during the boom," after Italy ended government ownership of tv and allowed ads in 1978.

"During the boom, there were years when real ad spending increased by 50%," said Vittorio Maglia, secretary-general of ASSAP, the Italian agency association. "But now we are a mature market."

LATIN AMERICA AND SOUTH AFRICA

Mexico's forecasts, like its economy, have taken a nosedive. Previously, agency executives anticipated a 13% increase over 1985 expenditures. Now, after months of a troubled economy and an 80% inflation rate, a 20% drop is expected.

Jaime Martinez, general director of Paulino Romero y Asociados, said the World Cup soccer tournament, held in Mexico in June, boosted ad expenditures, but not enough to push Mexico to last year's spending levels.

In Brazil, where the government introduced an anti-inflation plan in February, estimates were also revised downward, from 5% growth in February to no change from last year. After the inflation-fighting plan was enforced, ad spending came to a sudden halt. Media buying experienced a slow comeback in June because of declining media prices.

The price freeze boosted consumer spending, creating shortages of certain products such as cars, home appliances and tobacco. Marketers of the hard-to-find products have stopped advertising.

South Africa's political troubles are playing havoc with its economy and the ad industry. The country's forecast is the worst of the survey, with an estimated drop of 16% compared to last year.

JAPAN AND AUSTRALIA

In Japan, Dentsu, its largest agency, makes official predictions for the total Japanese industry once a year. Earlier this year, it estimated expenditures would increase by 4% in 1986, but the figure has not been updated and sources say it is now unrealistic.

Sources cite Dentsu's first-half performance; the agency said its real growth for January through June dropped 1%. "We are just praying that things will look up before the end of the year," said a Dentsu staffer.

"In Japan, the economy has been having some problems. It hasn't hit us yet, but we are anticipating it," said Jerry Roberts, ceo of DYR Inc.

Alfa Romeo shifts gears

By CLAIRE WILSON

Paris—Italian auto maker Alfa Romeo is giving its $15 million-to-$20 million European account to SSC&B:Lintas and local agencies in Italy, Spain and the U.K.

At the same time, the car marketer is changing its creative thrust to capture more of Europe's upscale automobile market.

The big loser in the agency switch is D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, which relinquished the Alfa account six months ago. During the review, Alfa used existing DMB&B ads. DMB&B formerly handled the account in Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Netherlands, Spain and Switzerland.

The account goes to Lintas in Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland.

In the U.K., the account goes to the Basel-based GGK network. Lintas has the Toyota account in the U.K.

The Italian budget represents about half of the European account, according to Claudio Masi, president of Milan-based MAC. His agency shares Alfa's Italian billings with Cremona, Italia/BBDO and ODG. Each Italian agency handles a different model, with Alfa Romeo controlling media planning and purchases.

CBC, in which DMB&B has a 10% stake, had the account in Italy for the last 15 years. Lintas has the Mercedes-Benz account in Italy.

Mr. Masi said dividing the account among four agencies in Italy is an experiment to "see who gets the best results and then pare it down to eventually two agencies."

In Spain, where Lintas has the account for Renault (which has a 33% market share), Alfa Romeo goes to Madrid shop NCA.

The old DMB&B strategy for Alfa Romeo involved corporate ads that showed the car maker's logo and revealed nothing about the performance of the car.

The new strategy, created by Lintas' Paris office and translated into different European languages, will break in October and will focus on Alfa's "sporting heritage," according to a Lintas source.

Alfa Romeo officials could not be reached for comment. The troubled Italian car maker, which manufactures only about 180,000 cars annually, has about a 1% market share in France, and even less in most markets, except Italy.

The company, owned and subsidized by the Italian government, is also talking with Ford Motor Co. about selling some Alfa units.

Alfa Romeo is interested in selling assets to Ford to solve Alfa's cash-flow problems, while Ford wants Alfa to develop special products for the U.S.#

Saatchi accord saves account

By DAGMAR MUSSEY and JULIE SKUR HILL

Ted Bates Worldwide and Saatchi & Saatchi last month narrowly saved about $40 million worth of business from German clients concerned about client conflicts arising from Saatchi's impending buyout of Bates.

Bates and Hamburg-based Scholz & Friends, 51% owned by Bates, took the unusual step of issuing "confidentiality agreements" to BMW, and possibly other clients, to assure that no information would be passed between Scholz and Saatchi.

The main conflict is between the Jaguar account, handled by Saatchi & Saatchi in the U.K., and Scholz' $22 million BMW account in Germany.

BMW, which traditionally uses smaller agencies, threatened to bolt Scholz & Friends, one of the hottest breakaway agencies in Europe, if the agency didn't maintain its independence from Saatchi.

When the auto marketer initially expressed its conflict concerns, agency co-founders Juergen Scholz and Michael Menzel attempted to buy themselves out of an 8-month-old agreement with Bates—either by buying 100% of the agency or 2%, giving them a majority (AA, July 7).

But the Bates-Scholz contract did not provide for a buyback, and Bates turned down the offer.

BMW then pushed the Hamburg agency for written confirmation that no BMW information be available to the Saatchi agencies.

Saatchi also handles a small account from coffee marketer Jacobs-Suchard in Germany, while Scholz handles Tchibo coffee. In addition, Saatchi handles Gallaher's Silk Cut cigarets in the U.K., while Scholz handles Reemtsma cigarets in Germany.

The Tchibo and Reemtsma accounts are worth about $10 million each.#

institutions in Japan have been relaxed, the effort apparently did not go far enough to boost ad spending. Also, the strength of the yen has socked such major exporters as Honda, Toyota and Nissan, forcing them to slow the growth of their ad budgets.

In Australia, a previous prediction of 2% remains on target, but 1987 looks bleak because of the weak Australian dollar.

"The coming 12 months are going to be pretty tough—there are strong signs that the economy is slowing," said Malcolm Spry, group managing director of Monahan Dayman Adams.#

All newspapers represented are subscribers to Media Records. REPORTING METHODOLOGY

Media Records continues to measure in image but due to the introduction of the SAU 6 column format Media Records has designed and developed a methodology with the approval of our subscribers, the INAME Measurements Committee, The ANPA NAB Working Committee, The AAAA Newspaper Committee, and other industry groups.

The approved methodology is titled The Media Records Conversion System (MRCS) and is based upon the printed page area of each product of the newspaper and is a five step approach as follows:

1. Measure Printed Page
   Width and Depth in inches
2. Determine Square Inches of Page
   Multiply Width by Depth Inches
3. Determine the Number of SAU Inches of Page
   Divide the Square Inches by 2.0625 (SAU inches)
4. Measure the Total Lines of the Page
   Multiply Column Depth Agate Lines by the Number of Columns on the Page
5. Determine the Factor for Converting Measured Lines to Reported SAU Inches
   Divide the Total Lines of Page by the Number of MRCS SAU Inches of the Page

Jerry for sale?

'Just talk,' he insists

Della Femina, Travisano & Partners boss Jerry Della Femina admits to talking with other agencies, but denies persistent reports that a deal is close.

By STEWART ALTER

NEW YORK—Is Della Femina, Travisano & Partners close to a sale?

Agency chairman Jerry Della Femina denied several reports that a sale is imminent, but acknowledged the agency has been involved in such conversations.

"I've spoken to five separate agencies in the last two and a half to three months," he said, but denied he was any more interested in making a deal now than before.

Mr. Della Femina maintained there was "more interest in us than ever before" in the aftermath of the megamerger activity this past spring. But he added that it was "all talk. What will come of this in my opinion is that I will get the gout because I've never had so many rich dinners in my life."

But sources maintain the conversations have been more serious than Mr. Della Femina has indicated and that he has not just been responding to overtures, but also actively seeking out buyers.

If so, that would be further confirmation of the growing interest in mid-size agency

CBS romance with Tisches is turning sour

Could trigger exec bailouts

By CRAIG REISS

NEW YORK—If Loews Corp.'s Laurence Tisch wins the unfolding boardroom battle for control of CBS Inc., CBS chairman Thomas Wyman and possibly Gene Jankowski, CBS/Broadcast Group president, are likely to bail out under the protection of their multi-million-dollar golden parachutes.

As Mr. Tisch inches closer to a possible takeover, the CBS board reportedly is casting about for a new "white knight" to prevent its former "white knight" from gaining control of the communications giant.

"The battle lines have been drawn," said a knowledgeable source after Mr. Tisch last week boosted stock holdings in CBS to 22.5%. "He has a moral commitment" to owning CBS as "a legacy for the [Tisch] children."

Mr. Tisch has four sons, including Andrew, president of Bulova Watch Co.; James, Loews vp-financial analysis; Daniel, managing director of Salomon Bros. risk arbitrage department, and Thomas, who manages the four sons' investment portfolio under the name F.I.F. (Four Lucky Fellows).

Mr. Tisch's brother, Preston Robert, who last week left Loews to become U.S. postmaster general (see accompanying story), has three children, including Jonathan, vp at Loews Hotels; Steve, a movie producer who

GM shop list growing

Importer would create new slot

By JESSE SNYDER

General Motors Corp., for the first time in its history, is ready to search for a minority agency to handle black and Hispanic advertising for each car division and corporate. GM also may create a separate division, with its own ad agency, to market vehicles imported from its Adam Opel West Germany subsidiary.

Robert O'Connell, vp-marketing and product planning staffs, in confirming these reports, told ADVERTISING AGE the efforts will be coordinated through Philip Guarascio, GM exec director for advertising services.

If GM does set up a separate Euro-import brand unit, these moves—plus its new Saturn Corp.—would add three additional ad agencies by 1987 to the GM stable. Each of the newcomers would be getting mostly new billings. Other than naming Vic Olesen & Partners to handle special western region advertising for Chevrolet, these new appointments would mark the first new major agency assignments from GM in about 35 years.

GM has been considering Opel-built, domestic-badged vehicles for both Oldsmobile and Buick for several years. Last fall, GM tried but failed to acquire a European auto maker to set up as another GM domestic division (AA, Nov. 4). But with the sales nosedive Buick has taken trying to stretch its marketing image to attract young, performance-oriented buyers, GM insiders are favoring a separate Opel-supplied division.

Undecided is whether such an operation would have a separate dealership network within a full-fledged division like Saturn will be or be a brand sold through many Buick and perhaps Oldsmobile dealers, much like the Merkur imports sold through Lincoln-Mercury.

An Opel option would fill in a growing gap in the upscale, sporty segment of GM's marketing lineup. Buick is already planning to return to courting its tradi-

Stroh and Heinz boost media clout

By RAY SERAFIN and JUDANN DAGNOLI

Stroh Brewery Co. and H.J. Heinz Co. last week became the latest advertisers to take steps toward maximizing their media-buying clout.

Detroit-based Stroh named Grey Advertising, New York, its agency of record on all national broadcast media and spot tv, for two separate assignments billing a total of $80 million to $90 million.

Pittsburgh-based Heinz assigned its $50 million network tv budget to Leo Burnett USA, Chicago. Network buying had been split between Burnett, Doyle Dane Bernbach, Ketchum Advertising and Ally & Gargano/MCA on a brand-by-brand basis.

Stroh decided against taking the media buying in-house, officials said, in large part because its budget alone would not have provided nearly the leverage in price nego-

Marketing to Hispanics

Piecing together fragmented research

By Eileen Norris

Numbers are vital in advertising, and the Hispanic population in the U.S. has grown so rapidly and to such huge proportions that advertisers are understandably eager to climb aboard a lucrative marketing bandwagon.

Unfortunately, there is a hitch connected to this glowing tale of growth and prosperity. While the masses exist—many say the estimates of Hispanics in the U.S. are woefully low because they don't take into account undocumented immigrants—a concern persists over just how much of the market Hispanic tv, radio and print actually deliver.

Eileen Norris wrote about print media in the February Special Report on Hispanic Marketing.

Multiple reasons exist for these doubts. For one, the Hispanic market is relatively young, so research has not yet caught up with the horde of immigrants. What numbers have come forward can't be trusted entirely, advertisers complain.

Most of them agree that the rating services for tv and radio aren't structured for Hispanic penetration, so the results are questionable.

The alternative doesn't set anyone's heart to dancing either: Hispanic research companies are thought to provide listening and viewing numbers on the high side.

All the concern about getting better figures from the rating services has one Hispanic ad agency executive privately admitting, "If we got more reliable figures it might hurt us because rates would be raised and then we'd really be in a predicament."

There's more. A recent shakeup of New York-based Spanish International Network, which reaches an estimated 4.2 million Hispanic households and attracts some $55 million in annual advertising revenue, hasn't helped matters. The Federal Communications Commission ordered

Expanding radio market battles research static

By Lynn Berling-Manuel

The U.S. Hispanic market is made up of a score of nationalities, but a common denominator of this diverse segment is the language itself—although it too is subject to its own nuances.

And one of the most effective ways of reaching the population, Hispanic marketing experts say, is Spanish-language radio. It gives a flexibility of programing, a reach within the market and around-the-clock access to its listeners that neither Spanish-language print media nor tv can compete with, its proponents say.

The number of Spanish-language stations in the U.S. has grown from 67 in 1975 to 168 in 1985, says Manny Ballestero, vp-national sales manager of New York-based Caballero Spanish Media, which represents 70 Spanish-language radio stations in the U.S.

"Spanish radio is the only medium that parallels the growth of the Spanish-speaking population in the U.S.," Mr. Ballestero says.

But that very figure arouses the most ire among Hispanic radio executives and the most questions among media buyers. Media is a numbers game, and Spanish-language radio has a tough time coming up with hard numbers that the stations and the researchers are happy with.

"We have felt Arbitron cannot reflect the accurate Hispanic numbers," says Lori Miller, operations manager for WOJO-FM, Chicago. "We think there's a much larger population base not included; undocumented workers are not counted in the census, but they still spend lots of dollars."

According to WOJO's vp-general manager, Athena Sofios, "Very little research is conducted for the Hispanic market, and traditional diary reporting for radio has not been executed effectively with this market segment."

WOJO's solution has been to bypass Arbitron Ratings Co. and conduct independent telephone surveys. WOJO says its surveys concluded that it had the highest listenership of any Hispanic radio station in Chicago.

But a station's own research always is scrutinized by media buyers, and the vast majority of Hispanic stations still live by Arbitron.

Mr. Ballestero, whose company represents close to half the Hispanic stations in the nation, has more faith in Arbitron. "I want to be very clear that we feel Arbitron is doing a fair to good job, but that it can be improved," he says. "Our stations are growing, so it becomes more important to have accurate ratings."

Arbitron is aware of the controversy and has invested time and money to make the Hispanic ratings more accurate. But even if the numbers are less than stations would like, they portray a listening pattern very attractive to companies targeting the Hispanic market.

"If we used the same research techniques we do with Anglo stations, the response would be lower," says David Lapovsky, Arbitron vp-research. "But over the years, we have spent probably the largest segment of our research on the issue of minority measurement." And though Mr. Lapovsky says undocumented aliens are not included in estimates because the census figures are the basis, he says including undocumented figures would not alter the percentages significantly.

"We've heard that Hispanics won't respond to our research, but we don't think it's true," he says. The reason for his belief is the differential survey treatment that Arbitron uses to test both Hispanic and black radio listenership.

The basic survey technique is not too different from that used for Anglo households. It consists of a seven-day radio diary that each household member fills in, noting stations and programs listened to, as well as where the consumer was while listening. The differences come in the followup.

"First we identify the Hispanic surname household and then call asking them to participate," Mr. Lapovsky says. "If they say yes, they get a bilingual diary that's taken to the house instead of mailed. They get three calls during the week to remind them of their importance to the survey. They also get an upgraded premium for their response."

Anglo households in radio research usually get only one call and are asked to mail in the diaries at the end of the week. With the differential survey treatment, calls sometimes are placed at the end of each day to ensure the household has made diary entries accurately, and at the end of the period Arbitron picks up the diary.

"We've demonstrated repeatedly that we get roughly the same rate of return with these techniques," Mr. Lapovsky says.

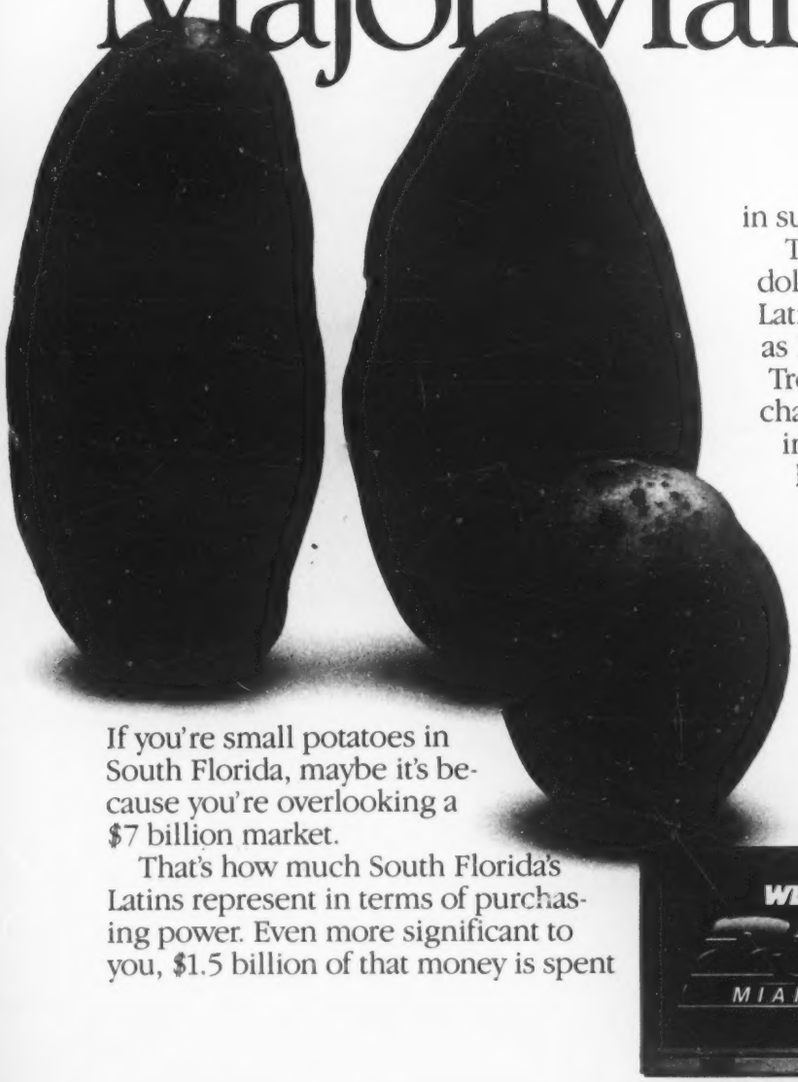
Lynn Berling-Manuel covered the San Francisco Hispanic market in last year's Hispanic Marketing Special Report.

¿Are You Getting Mashed In A Major Market?



If you're small potatoes in South Florida, maybe it's because you're overlooking a $7 billion market.

That's how much South Florida's Latins represent in terms of purchasing power. Even more significant to you, $1.5 billion of that money is spent in supermarkets and grocery stores.

The fact is, over 50% of all food dollars spent in Miami is spent by Latins. Which is why such chains as Publix, Winn-Dixie, Sedanos, Tropical, Food Value and Xtra channel over $2 million a year into advertising on Spanish-language Channel 23. That amounts to over 40% of their entire TV expenditure in South Florida.

They know we can help make the cash register ring like no other station in the area. Call your SIN representative or our Vice President of Sales, Blaine Decker, at 305/856-2323 and find out more about us.

Battling research static

"It's true we're not including anybody not included in the census figures, but in the absence of better numbers, what figures should we use?"

Regardless of what individual ratings may say about stations, both Arbitron and the companies with long associations with Spanish-language radio are convinced the listening patterns are very attractive. In 1985, Arbitron published the report "Radio Today: The Hispanic Listener," which portrays a market segment that can be reached effectively through Spanish-language radio.

Arbitron's sample consists of 3,408 diaries randomly selected from Hispanic participants in eight of the 30 metropolitan markets where Arbitron uses the differential survey techniques. According to the report, radio reaches 98% of Hispanic persons 12 and older each week. The Hispanic listener spends an average of 30 hours a week with the radio.

Listening patterns by dayparts give access to varying age groups, with younger audiences tuning in to overnight radio, while daytime and evening listeners tend to be older.

Whether the official numbers are as exact as they might be is less important to media buyers than what kind of impact brand-aware Hispanic consumers have on the bottom line.

"Companies like Anheuser-Busch, Sears and McDonald's have long associations with Hispanic radio and by combining promotions with radio, they've come to the conclusion that radio is something they want to stay with," Mr. Ballestero says.

"In a local market, retail stores don't look so much at the numbers, they just want to know that their commercial on that station will bring customers to the door," says Manuel A. Escalante, marketing director for Harlingen, Tex.-based Tichenor Spanish Radio Group, which has just expanded to eight stations with the acquisition of WADO (am), New York. The reported purchase price of $20 million would make it the most ever paid for a "stand alone" (non-network) station, Mr. Escalante says.

According to Mr. Escalante, the WADO purchase is another indication of the market's expected growth. He says his group also is interested in acquiring stations in Miami, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The market's growth gives it lots of potential, but it also adds to advertisers' headaches. "You have to understand that Spanish is a language, not a format," says Penny Yamron, director of Los Angeles-based Radio Espanol, a Spanish-language programing service.

Stations' programing uses Spanish as the common denominator, but also must appeal to a variety of nationalities. "I personally feel music is the message in this case," Ms. Yamron says. "But we've had good success with sports events, and we know there's high listenership for news programs."

Hispanic radio is flexible, Caballero's Mr. Ballestero says. "Being able to use Mexican-style music in Los Angeles or Chicago as the background music for a commercial, then being able to change it to Cuban music for Miami, and then again to Puerto Rican for New York, is what makes radio so useful."

Accents also vary widely, although radio executives do seem to agree that there is a "generic" Spanish that can be used in any market. "We have accents in Spanish by area, but we don't really have dialects," says Alicia Martinez-Fontes, president of Miami's Adworks Inc., which handles marketing for WAQI-AM, Miami's most popular Hispanic station.

But marketers must exercise care as they look at specific markets because a market's composition often changes as it enlarges. Ten years ago, San Francisco's large Hispanic population was almost exclusively Mexican, but now has become more heavily Central American with the influx of political refugees.

"As the Hispanic market grows," Tichenor's Mr. Escalante says, "a good part of that will be a more educated, professional group because I think we'll see increasing numbers of political refugees from Latin America."

Another challenge for companies looking at the Hispanic market is that Spanish-language radio is clearly more listened to by an older audience. "What we think," one media buyer says, "is that the younger audience starts listening to popular music and that tends to be on Anglo and even black-oriented radio stations."

"As younger people assimilate more into the U.S., I think you'll see some additional English used in Spanish-language stations," says WOJO's Ms. Miller. "But I know that for us, we're still looking years away."

Tv signal expected to boost Houston market

By Jennifer Lawrence

The nation's seventh largest Hispanic market finally may round out its media players with the addition of a local Spanish-language tv station.

Houston has never had a full-power local all-Hispanic tv channel despite being home to some 700,000 Hispanics. But Pueblo Broadcasting Corp., a team of local Hispanic investors led by J. Adan Trevino, intends to expand its low-power operation and become the city's first all-Spanish tv station as early as next spring.

Pueblo Broadcasting's uhf KXLN-TV is being hailed with a mixture of jubilation, relief and skepticism.

The station will fill a void for advertisers that rely on a strong Hispanic radio market to reach Houston's Hispanic community. Weekly Hispanic newspapers offer an advertising alternative, but many marketers favor radio to reach a larger audience.

Jennifer Lawrence is Advertising Age's Houston correspondent.

Local advertising executives say KXLN-TV will prompt national advertisers to take notice of the local Hispanic market.

Since 1979, the number of Hispanic radio stations in Houston has jumped from one to seven.

They say Houston has lost some national Hispanic advertising to other cities including San Antonio, which has well-developed Spanish-language tv.

The absence of a local Hispanic tv station combined with a growing Hispanic market close to Mexico helped establish local Hispanic radio. Even though cable companies carry SIN Television Network programing and some locally produced Hispanic programing is carried on network affiliates, local advertisers have pumped dollars into radio to reach the Hispanic market.

Since 1979, the number of Hispanic radio stations in Houston has jumped from one to seven, with formats ranging from ranchero to modern Latin beat and Chicano. Total Hispanic radio ad revenues climbed from an estimated $1 million in 1979 to $8 million in 1986. That figure could double to $16 million by 1991, says Ricardo Castillo, exec vp-general manager at KLAT (am), Houston's top billing Hispanic station, owned by Tichenor Spanish Radio, Harlingen, Tex.

The radio stations say they look forward to KXLN-TV's full-power debut, if only to draw attention to the sizable and rapidly growing Hispanic population that could make this the country's third-largest Hispanic market by 1990, according to The Hispanic Almanac, published by the Hispanic Policy Development Project Inc., Washington.

"There is room for all seven radio stations to grow," says Mr. Castillo. "I don't think advertisers will divert ad dollars to tv. I think they will increase their budgets to accommodate tv."

Some industry observers, however, are taking a wait-and-see approach on KXLN. Concern has been voiced over Pueblo's prospects of raising the necessary $3 million to construct the full-power station.

One thing is agreed: Houston has waited long enough for a full-power Hispanic tv station.

When Pueblo applied in 1978 to the Federal Communications Commission for the license to operate KXLN-TV, the eight local Hispanic business and community leaders who formed the company faced competition from two other applicants. Trinity Broadcasting, Tustin, Cal., dropped out, leaving Pueblo and Texas 45, a company formed by Howard Shapiro, president of Weigel Broadcasting, Chicago.

A bitter and costly battle between the two applicants ended last October, when the FCC ruled in favor of Pueblo, partly because the company was new to broadcasting and owned by local Hispanics.

The nearly eight-year struggle between Pueblo and Mr. Shapiro's Texas 45 reflects Houston's Hispanic market potential. Even now, as the oil-dependent city experiences a severe economic crunch, Mr. Shapiro says he still would consider entering the Houston market.

With the FCC appeals process completed and a construction permit in hand, Mr. Trevino, Pueblo president, says the station's financing should be completed by Sept. 1, and the station should sign on with full power in the spring.

Alfonso C. Pena, currently an account exec with Los Angeles-based KMEX-TV, will become KXLN-TV general manager, contingent on Pueblo financing.

Mr. Pena says he expects that after the station goes full power, first-year revenues will be about $3.6 million. It is expected that when the station goes to full-power, it will retain its SIN affiliation.

pleted, Pueblo will continue to operate K45AK, a low-power station in nearby Rosenberg that retransmits SIN programing to some 100,000 southwest Houston households. The low-power station began airing local advertising June 30.

Among the station's first advertisers is Fiesta Mart, a local supermarket chain that has grown to a 9% share of the total retail grocery market by catering to Hispanics.

If Fiesta's 30-second spots on the low-power signal generate response, the supermarket chain could make a major shift in its ad budget within six months, according to Paul Stevens, Fiesta marketing director.

Most of Fiesta's Hispanic advertising budget is placed in radio.

Allan Zadik, vp at Houston's Esmar Advertising, which specializes in Hispanic marketing, predicts, "Hispanic tv here will mean greater penetration and more flexibility to advertisers. Marketers will pay attention to the Hispanic market.

"This will hurt the radio stations short term but help medium term because advertisers will see the market's potential," he says.

For Jack Shirley, president of Houston-based Spanish Television Syndicators, the advent of a full-power KXLN is a mixed blessing. He oversees Television Hispana de Houston, carried on Storer Cable's local origination channel since last fall.

The 10 to 12 hours a day of all-Spanish programing have attracted both local and national advertisers.

But Television Hispana's national ad revenue may be cut by KXLN once it is full power, Mr. Shirley says.

Nevertheless, he says, "People here are dying to have Channel 45.

"Other people will realize in a couple of years that there is no stopping in sight as far as growth here in the Hispanic community.

"This is a gold mine for tv, because when the figures are out on the number of Hispanics, every agency will be champing at the bit to provide advertising," Mr. Shirley says. "But it is a gold mine as long as Pueblo can build a station that is economical."

Publisher seeks to improve 'Image'

By Gary Levin

John Asencio envisions Chicago's Hispanic Image becoming the Ebony of magazines aimed at the growing Hispanic market.

That may seem a lofty goal. After all, Ebony is a nationally circulated magazine, selling an average 1.75 million copies monthly. Hispanic Image is a fledgling local magazine with only 3,000 subscribers and is trying to crack a resistant base of upscale advertisers.

John Asencio, publisher of Hispanic Image, wants the magazine to symbolize the achievements of the Chicago area's Hispanics.

Mr. Asencio, who also runs an ad agency and art studio, sees the magazine as "a symbol of growth, a symbol of achievement," for the Chicago area's estimated 1 million Hispanics.

But he's not after all of them. In a carefully mapped strategy, Hispanic Image will leave the majority of its potential readers to Spanish-language newspapers and broadcast media, aiming instead for the 30% of Chicago Hispanics who earn more than $25,000 and prefer English to Spanish.

"In a sense the magazine has developed a new standard in the Hispanic market," Mr. Asencio says. "Many people have the impression of Hispanics as dragging a burro around and hiding from the immigration people," says the 40-year-old, Cuban-born publisher. "This magazine is supposed to show the segment of the Hispanic population that is very successful at what they do."

Hispanic Image, started by an investor group with $25,000 to $30,000, targets a "new" professional Hispanic audience more sophisticated than that reached by vehicles such as Vista, a Spanish-language newspaper supplement, and several tv and radio outlets.

Mr. Asencio says he attempted the magazine launch this year because "demographically, the Chicago market has finally matured." He estimates that 25% to 30% of Chicago Hispanic households earn annual incomes of $25,000 or more. (Figures reported in the 1980 census, the most recent available, show the six-county Chicago area's Hispanic population has an annual median income of $16,551, 28% less than the city's general population. In 1984, the nation's 16.9 million Hispanics earned median household incomes of $18,833.)

The glossy every-other-monthly, which goes monthly in October, has a visual focus, with large photo spreads, unusual typography and a heavy paper stock. Hispanic Image focuses on the arts, education and culture, seeking to enlighten the Hispanic population about achievers in their own community: Recent issues profiled Chicago Board of Education president George Munoz and general manager Richard Lobo of NBC-owned WMAQ-TV.

Mr. Asencio says the magazine takes a more artful, less literary approach than Miami Mensual, its closest competitor in tone (see story on Page S-26). Like the latter publication, Hispanic Image publishes some articles in Spanish and others in English, seeking to reach its core audience of successful bilingual Hispanics as well as non-Hispanic potential advertisers that can be "helpful to the community."

Articles with wide appeal to audiences—such as profiles of local political or business figures—are generally printed in English, while stories of more parochial interest are published in Spanish. Mr. Asencio says the mix enables him to show non-Hispanic advertisers the quality of the magazine's editorial content and to reach his target audience of Hispanics who prefer speaking English.

Advertisers say they support the new venture, which debuted in February, as a way to increase the stature of Chicago's Hispanic community. But so far, fully paid ad pages have yet to show major evidence of that support, particularly among seven of SIN's affiliate stations to be divested by its parent company, Spanish International Communications Corp., which the FCC ruled had violated the 20% alien ownership limit set by federal regulations.

Insiders say SIN is one of the few accomplishments the industry could point to with pride. At the very least, the FCC controversy is expected to leave a smudge on the image of the Spanish market. (Last month, it was announced that a Chicago-based venture capital group and Hallmark Cards agreed to purchase, for $301.5 million, 10 SICC-owned tv stations, five of them low-power outlets. Included are SIN powerhouses KMEX, Los Angeles, and WXTV, Paterson, N.J., in the New York metropolitan area.)

Much of the Hispanic print medium is being shunned by advertisers as a market not worth addressing because, they say, there isn't a single national Hispanic publication that can reach masses of people.

"An advertiser can probably reach more Hispanics by putting one ad in the New York Daily News than by placing ads in all five New York Spanish papers," says marketing consultant Jacqueline Da Costa, former media director at Ted Bates Advertising/New York, who recently formed JDC Communications in New York.

Ms. Da Costa says her largely negative appraisal falls in the minority opinion. Others hold that, while there are stumbling blocks, things are improving steadily.

Ms. Da Costa isn't convinced. "We have no more or better research. If anything, we're in a state of chaos because of the SIN divestiture. Spanish radio has made no great leaps, either. Print's at a plateau. All in all, it's been rather disappointing.

"On the other hand, we have come a long way. No one would have thought Hispanics would have a tv network in place."

For all the negatives, advertisers are latching onto the Hispanic market because it's a force to be reckoned with, especially in the large Hispanic enclaves of Houston, Miami, Los Angeles and Chicago.

Advertisers are using whatever avenues are open as they try to expand their share outside the general mass market. Many marketers have reached a plateau in the general market, and this is one area they can expand into to increase their share, says James Alexander, media director of the Bravo Group at Young & Rubicam, New York.

"We have to jump obstacles everyday to make it work," says Carlos Barba, president at WNJU-TV in New York, a leading Hispanic station, and of NetSpan, a tv programing and sales network. "But the media are growing more sophisticated in all areas—sales, promotion, research and programing."

Mr. Barba is not the only one pinning great hopes on the future. "The market is growing, growing, growing, what with the constant immigration of legal and illegal Hispanics," Mr. Alexander says. "We have enough first-generation Hispanics coming into the country to keep us growing for the next 10 years."

A 1985 Naisbitt Group Trend Report titled "Hispanics in America: The 'Sleeping Giant' Awakens" concludes there is no consensus on the 1980 U.S. Census Bureau figures, which place the U.S. Hispanic population at 14.6 million, or other studies, which estimate the numbers of Hispanics at upwards of 18 million. But the Naisbitt Group does predict the numbers will continue to stagger the imagination.

The Washington-based research group says if current high birth rates prevail and immigration patterns remain the same, Hispanics will continue to be the major cause of any national growth spurts.

It's clear the influx of Hispanics is being noticed and acted upon by advertisers. Hispanic Business reported advertisers in 1981 spent $166 million in Hispanic media, and by 1984 that had jumped to $228 million.

Today, it's estimated that at least $300 million a year is spent in the Hispanic media, says Ms. Da Costa, who adds this caveat: "Remember, that figure is relative. Approximately $100 per 1,000 of population is spent in the general market while it's more like $11 per 1,000 in the Hispanic market."

That seemingly small nugget in the bucket is a sore spot for those within the industry who complain that the big-name rating services aren't helping to paint a true picture of Spanish-language tv viewing.

Mr. Barba of WNJU-TV says he stopped using Arbitron Ratings Co. last year after four years of requests that the service "accurately measure" the Hispanic population brought no results.

"In New York, for example," he says, "Arbitron has discriminated against the Spanish community by placing only 39 of its 500 tv meters in the home of Hispanics. The meters they placed are in homes along Park and Fifth avenues, where the upscale viewers spend a lot of their time watching American tv. We recommend they put at least 100 meters in the New York area, including sections like the Bronx and Brooklyn, where Hispanics live."

The rating services counter by saying they need more Hispanic media subscribers before they can invest in more intricate research. Mr. Barba and several Hispanic ad agencies are using numbers provided by Strategy Research, a Miami-based company that has been estimating Spanish-language tv viewing since 1977.

Strategy Research is as good as anybody, says Jesse Wilson, exec vp for San Jose & Associates, an ad agency in Chicago, who says his clients, including Coca-Cola Co. and Sara Lee Corp., don't have a problem with the numbers provided.

"Any major agency can buy Hispanic tv with no problem," Strategy Research president Dick Tobin says, adding that the company has virtually all the subscribers in the Hispanic market.

SIN vp-director of sales John Pero bristles at some advertisers' suggestions that Strategy Research may not always provide good numbers. "In some instances, I'd say their numbers are low," he says.

"It's just a big fallacy that there's not enough research out there to support the Hispanic buy," Mr. Pero says. "It's a growing market and it continues to grow. Advertisers could do a little audience research themselves in the Spanish market."

Eduardo Caballero of Caballero Spanish Media, a New York company that represents 82 Hispanic radio stations, says most people in the radio industry agree the major rating services are not measuring the markets as well as they could be.

Mr. Caballero and a pool of Hispanic ad agencies and major advertisers formed the Spanish Radio Advertising Council to see if they could do something about that.

"We went into this project, which is costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, so that advertisers can be in on the ground floor of telling us what they want as far as research goes. We don't want to provide ratings that advertisers question," Mr. Caballero says.

Last month, the council selected Information & Analysis, Hicksville, N.Y., as the research company to handle the project. Other candidates were Arbitron and Strategy Research. Plans call for a pilot project in Chicago this fall. Chicago was chosen, Mr. Caballero says, because of its cross section of Hispanics.

Ms. Da Costa would take the radio council idea one step farther and form a consortium of tv and radio stations to pay for research that "no one can individually afford," she says. "We need all media forms, and not just tv. We need to get together."

Until solid research is in hand and the status of SIN's stations is ironed out, she fears the market will remain in limbo.

Others are more hopeful. "We're growing and continue to grow," says Mr. Pero of SIN, "but it will take some time before we gain total advertiser acceptance.

"There are still many advertisers leery of using the Hispanic media. I don't know if they're reluctant to take a chance or if they feel the audience research isn't adequate, but, either way, we still continue to get new advertisers every year, and advertisers are spending more money in the Hispanic market every year."

Mr. Wilson of San Jose & Associates may sum it up best. "I guess the answer for all of us is to use the best thing we have going at the moment, and that's what we're doing," he says. "This is a young and growing industry with many exciting times ahead."

'Mega' tide keeps rolling

Midsize shops react

By STEWART ALTER

Four ownership changes of midsize agencies last week gave further evidence that the 1986 megamergers are now causing shops of all sizes nationwide to rethink their growth strategies.

• Della Femina, Travisano & Partners, New York, whose chairman earlier acknowledged that there was "more interest in us" by potential acquirers following the megamergers (AA, Aug. 11), has agreed in principle to sell the agency to Wight, Collins, Rutherford, Scott, the publicly owned London agency that recently purchased HBM/Creamer.

• Jordan, Case, Taylor & McGrath, New York, one of the more vital midsize independent shops able to compete with the large agencies because it is made up of former top agency executives working directly on client business, strengthened that position and sent what it considered "a dramatic signal to advertisers" by attracting Burton Manning as a principal (see story below). As chairman-ceo of J. Walter Thompson USA, Mr. Manning is widely credited with turning around its creative reputation.

• Hal Riney & Partners, a San Francisco-based agency with national ambitions fueled by its high creative profile, agreed to sever all ties with its Ogilvy Group parent because of stricter client conflict policies following the megamergers.

• Martin Agency, Richmond, Va., a regional agency with a growing creative reputation, followed hot Minneapolis shop Fallon McElligott in linking up with Ogilvy subsidiary Scali, McCabe, Sloves. That move reflects post-megamerger strategy rethinking by Scali as a midsize agency and Martin as a strong regional shop.

"The whole playing field has changed" and ambitious regional agencies "want to get in the game," said John Connors Jr., presi-

By LENORE SKENAZY

Long a favorite of greeting card and calendar makers, 69-year-old artist Andrew Wyeth and his work have suddenly captivated the jaded art world—not to mention the consumer press. Newsweek and Time blast his "secret" obsession with maid/model Helga across their covers—a double whammy usually reserved for world wars and Bruce Springsteen.

With his wife as business partner, Mr. Wyeth has become hot property—a genius in mixed media: Watercolors, print and tv.

The media is delving deeply into a newly revealed secret cache of paintings of a mysterious Helga, many of them nudes, done over the past 15 years. Though Wyeth told Art & Antiques about them last September, and though in April the Chester, Pa., Delaware County Daily Times reported the sale of same, it wasn't until last week that anybody seemed to care

Manning shift puts Metter in JWT post

By STEWART ALTER

In search of a "totally different kind of challenge," Burton Manning, chairman-ceo of J. Walter Thompson USA, has traded in that post for a significant equity position, his name on the door and a chance to work on advertising again at an agency about one-seventh JWT/USA's size.

Mr. Manning, chairman-ceo of the largest agency in U.S. advertising billings since it was formed as a separate unit in 1980, is joining Jordan, Case, Taylor & McGrath as a principal and chairman of the executive committee, a new post. The name of the $231 million shop is being changed to Jordan, Manning, Case, Taylor & McGrath.

Succeeding Mr. Manning as chairman-ceo of JWT/USA is Bert Metter, who, like Mr. Manning, has a creative background. Mr. Metter, once creative director for JWT's Ford Motor Co. business (the agency's largest client), has most recently been vice-chairman, spearheading the agency's successful new-business drive.

Wilson to cede RJR Nabisco ceo slot; will retire

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C.—RJR Nabisco chairman-ceo J. Tylee Wilson, 55, will relinquish the ceo title to F. Ross Johnson, now president-chief operating officer, effective Jan. 1. Mr. Wilson will take early retirement Jan. 1, 1988. Sources say the move confirms long-circulating rumors, while analysts believe the succession might have been agreed to during last year's negotiations that led to the merger of RJR Industries with Nabisco Brands. But a company spokesman says the agreement did not specify terms of succession of a particular chief executive. Mr. Johnson, 54, was vice-chairman/ceo of Nabisco at the time of the merger.

Hardee's a hit with Southland 4
Southland Corp.'s experiment in selling Hardee's hamburgers at some 7-Eleven stores seems to have helped—rather than hurt—sales of 7-Eleven's own food items. The test is the beginning of a lengthy effort that will see 7-Eleven through at least four full seasons with Hardee's and a growing roster of other national fast-food companies testing joint efforts with Southland.

VF Corp. has not decided yet how to reorganize its advertising after its acquisition of Blue Bell, but the deal already has put one rival on the offensive. When VF picked up Blue Bell for $800 million, it augmented its Lee jeans business with Blue Bell's Wrangler and Rustler brands, bringing its total sales up to almost $3 billion and giving it nearly a 25% share of the $8.5 billion jeans market.

U.S. auto makers plan for long haul 36
Anticipating lower U.S. market share during the next decade, each of the Big 3 auto makers intends to cut production costs and improve product quality, diversify into related fields and broaden its international base. The "white knights" brought in to save Scientific American Inc. from a takeover bid last year helped precipitate the company's sale this year. Nets' strategy leaves nothing for the others

By LARRY G. COLLINS and ROBERT RAISSMAN

New York—Client and agency megamergers are playing a role in reversing most recent broadcast sales trends.

Already hit by a flat prime time upfront market that forced cost-per-thousand rate rollbacks, the networks also adopted a new strategy, especially for sports. With an abundance of unsold time, the networks during the past few weeks have offered double-digit cpm rate cuts to build a bigger share of the total tv sports spending. The volume would leave the networks with fewer scatter units—which last year often turned into opportunistic buys—and a tighter inventory might firm up prices.

And while it has been painful for the nets, the strategy has worked.

In the past two weeks, CBS and NBC each reported selling out at least two full weekend National Football League games in September—at 10%-to-15%-cpm-rate cuts and mixed with other programing packages—and expect to sell out the remaining two weekends.

"Based on what we are seeing, it's not going to be that bad," said Jerome Dominus, vp-sales, CBS-TV. "We still have a sick patient, but he may not be terminal. All the talk about the softness in the market. . .flushes out the money and then we find that there's life in the old girl yet. But I wouldn't go crazy."

Buyers at most major agencies said that network sports and other daypart efficiencies have been so attractive that very little money remains.

At the same time, certain network daypart prices have come down, forcing syndicators—who traditionally price their shows below network cpm rates—to

L.A. staffs shuffle

A host of changes riffled through senior creative personnel at Los Angeles agencies late last week. Chiat/Day experienced two more defections of key staff as vp-associate creative director L. Brent Bouchez and associate creative director Thomas Cordner Jr. moved to Ogilvy & Mather as co-creative directors, effective in mid-September. The departures of Messrs. Bouchez and Cordner follow the earlier exit of copywriter John Stein and art director Jean Robaire, who, with Mr. Bouchez, won the Los Angeles Advertising Club's 1985 top Sweepstakes award for their work on Pizza Hut. Messrs. Stein and Robaire joined Doyle Dane Bernbach/West as vp-associate creative directors (AA, July 21). Della Femina, Travisano & Partners experienced similar trauma, losing co-creative director John Armistead to D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles. Mr. Armistead will become executive creative director, succeeding Ken Berris, who will become a commercial director, affiliated with River Run Films. Vp-director of broadcast production Shannon Silverman also is leaving DFT&P, with future plans unannounced. The agency has not named replacements yet.

RJR ruling may 'open up' issue advertising

FTC to hear appeal in November

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

A ruling by a Federal Trade Commission law judge in a case involving advocacy advertising by R.J. Reynolds may, if accepted by the FTC commissioners, lay out fresh criteria for distinguishing between commercial speech and expressions of corporate opinion.

The FTC can move against the truth and accuracy of commercial speech, but pure opinion, truthful or not, is protected by the First Amendment.

The ruling by administrative law judge Montgomery Hyun was that R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s "Of cigarets and science" ad is outside the FTC's jurisdiction (AA, Aug. 11). It is under appeal by the FTC staff, and the commission is not expected to rule on the appeal until November at the earliest, according to a spokeswoman.

The ad in question ran in consumer publications from March to June, 1985, and was the last in a series of RJR ads that discussed various smoking issues, including advertising to children, effects of passive smoke, smoking in bed and others. It was prepared in-house, with the help of FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York.

In ruling for RJR, judge Hyun said the ad differed from earlier "landmark" cases—the Supreme Court's Bolger ruling against pamphlets about contraceptives from Young Drug Products Corp., and the FTC's own 1976 decision against issue ads about cholesterol by the National Commission on Egg Nutrition.

Unlike in the Bolger case, he said, the RJR ad does not: Name any brand name; list prices; discuss desirable attributes of a product, or show where the product may be purchased. It differs from the Egg Nutrition case, judge Hyun said, because it contains no "express promotional language or any statement which is even remotely comparable to the express and implied claims found in the NCEN ad."

That raises the possibility that an ad might be so constructed as to be deemed an editorial and, hence, outside the FTC's regulatory authority for accuracy and truth. Judge Hyun, in fact, raises the very question himself in his order. "Admittedly, proper classification of Reynolds' ad is not an easy task. The thought that it may be possible to craft promotional messages in the guise of an editorial gives us pause."

John O'Toole, American Assn. of Advertising Agencies exec vp, said the judge's ruling "seems to legitimize issue advertising." He also said it could "open up a lot of avenues for chicanery" if, for example, a beer marketer began placing ads arguing for a drinking age of 18, commensurate with the age for voting or joining the military.

"But I'd rather have that freedom than the opposite," he said.

Gil Weil, general counsel to the Assn. of National Advertisers, said the administrative law judge's decision, if upheld by the same commission that voted 4 to 1 to issue the complaint against the Reynolds ad, could make a difference, especially to advertisers in controversial markets.

See editorial, Page 17.

"I suppose that in particular situations—tobacco, alcohol and eggs, for example—this could be important because it gives advertisers the opportunity to get their story out to the public on controversial issues free of government censorship that would have a chilling effect," he said.

New York attorney Floyd Abrams represented RJR before judge Hyun. Mr. Abrams said a basic problem with the FTC staff argument was the untenable position that RJR, by virtue of its role as a major tobacco marketer, was proscribed from expressing its views on the question of smoking.

"They were forced to say that every ad by RJR with a position on smoking was necessarily commercial speech," said Mr. Abrams. "That's the same as saying a General Motors ad for cars and auto safety—without touting GM cars—that was part of the national debate over the 55mph speed limit, would be commercial speech."

FTC attorney Judith Wilkenfeld acknowledged that the RJR ad was in a gray area between purely commercial speech and expressions on public issues, but zeroed in on the connection between the messenger and the message.

The ad satisfies three court-established standards for determin-

Surprise,

At Don Jagoda Associates,
the extras are a pleasant surprise.

In the wonderful world of promotion, where the lure of something for nothing rules supreme, some promotion planners do nothing about some things that need doing, because they're "not in the agreement." Taking care of such extras is one of the professional hallmarks of Don Jagoda Associates.

Extra creative. Turning a deluxe trip to London into one guided by a great-great-grandson of Charles Dickens himself to make a "Dickens of a Christmas" sweepstakes extra memorable. Not contracted for. Added because we could, and we cared.

Extra care. Winners in an international Sweepstakes/Premium program received their gifts wrapped carefully with a big ribbon attached—"Reaction great—response terrific." We turned prizes into presents.

Extra attention to detail. Why should you pay for several P.O. Box rental cycles, when for a slight fee, we can reserve them in advance for the exact time required and save you money? Just a detail. No big deal. But multiply by 100 details and it becomes important.

Extra dedication. Filling, in one night, 640 4-foot and 6-foot Christmas stockings with Ideal toys and shipping them to supermarkets that same night, to meet Christmas deadlines. Our staff caught the spirit. And delivered.

Extra professional. We control all of our own facilities: creative, administrative, legal, prizes, verification, reporting and fulfillment. We do it all to be sure there are no "shortcuts." We stay in control every step of the way.

Extra. Extra effort on our part, not extra cost on yours.

Here are "extra" ways for you to become acquainted with Don Jagoda Associates:

- Sweepstakes
- Contests
- Games
- Refunds/Rebates
- Premiums
- Incentive Programs
- Club Management
- Fulfillment

CORRECTIONS & CLARIFICATIONS

- Given Saatchi & Saatchi Co.'s reports of more than $7 billion in world billings, a loss of "well below 1% of world billings" owing to client conflicts when it acquired Ted Bates Worldwide should have translated to less than $70 million (AA, Aug. 11, P. 59).
- General Cigar's share of the cigar market in 1985 was 18.4%. It was incorrect on a chart (AA, Aug. 4, P. 26).
- Before its reformulation, Procter & Gamble's Puritan oil was made of a blend of 20% soybean oil and 80% sunflower oil. Puritan did not contain corn oil (AA, Aug. 4, P. 1). Advertising/promotional campaign information was provided by P&G's pr agency, GreyCom, not P&G spokesman Donald Tassone. Information about the separation properties of rapeseed oil was incorrectly attributed to Mr. Tassone; the source was a marketer of private-label oils.
- Credit for the design of the book, "The Unpublished David Ogilvy," was incorrectly listed (AA, July 21, P. 82). The designer is Robert Smith, a retired Ogilvy & Mather art director.
- Gallup & Robinson, Princeton, N.J., is the correct name of the organization that conducted consumer tests on both award-winning Joe Sedelmaier commercials ("Hassle free" and "Auto teller") for General Motors Acceptance Corp. (AA, June 30, P. 45).

Fido? He's the past, the future, the t-shirt

If you step outside any time in the near future, odds are you'll be bumping into Fido Dido, or Video Dido, or even Fido Ditto (a quartet of Fidos). He's hard to miss. His head is shaped like an inverted triangle, his features are simply dots and dashes, and his hair sticks up to there, thanks, no doubt, to the liberal application of stiffening gel. Fido is very au courant.

Who is this Fido Dido character? Possibly the face of 1986. A cartoon-like image, whose benign countenance appears on everything from t-shirts to underwear, and who right now is blowing out of stores as disparate as New York's Charivari, Macy's and Urban Outfitters.

Fido Dido is the brainchild of Joanna Ferrone, the owner of a photographic library, and Susan Rose, an art director at J. Walter Thompson USA, New York.

Though it's a long way from the ad business to the rag business, Fido was actually conceived somewhere in between—scribbled on a napkin over cocktails, to be exact. (Incidentally, Rose says the rag business makes the ad business seem calm.) Why did they get into it then? Ferrone and Rose believed Fido Dido's image was a strong one and a marketable one.

They originally thought of Fido as having indeterminate gender, but calling the creature "it" felt awkward. So "it" became a boy. A loss for nonsexist politics turned into a gain for marketability: Now they can create a second character, a female version.

Ferrone believes Fido is successful because "he's the all-American melting-pot boy." And in his various guises, he's everything from an executive, with shirt, tie and glasses, to a sailor in uniform, to, get this, his own dog. Another factor that might explain Fido's success is the very style of the drawings. Highly graphic, they are hand-drawn, very funky and have an appeal not unlike that of Keith Haring's drawings.

And—shades of the '60s—there also is "The Fido Credo" printed on every piece of Fido merchandise:

"Fido is for Fido.
Fido is against no one.
Fido is youth.
Fido has no age.
Fido sees everything.
Fido judges nothing.
Fido is innocent.
Fido is powerful.
Fido comes from the past.
Fido is the future."

And Fido is making two young woman very happy.

Players who don't find Condomoneyum indescribable could win a Florida condo.

Condomoneyum gives players a chance at winning the house

Sure, you can buy and sell chunks of real estate in Parker Bros.' Monopoly. But the new Condomoneyum game gives players a crack at winning a piece of real real estate —a $300,000 Miami Beach condo.

The man who came up with this game plan is Eric S. Medney, president, ESM Marketing Group, a 5-year-old sales promotion and sports marketing shop in Garden City, N.Y. He describes his game, which has been on sale in department stores since March, as combining elements of "advertising, real estate and Lotto."

In another relatively unusual angle, Medney sold "advertising" space on 31 game board squares at $25,000 a piece, for total ad revenues of $775,000. Among the largely upscale corporate or brand names on the current board are American Express Publishing Co.'s Travel & Leisure magazine; Eastern Airlines; Subaru; Frusen Gladje; Molson beer; Newsweek, Prudential Insurance Co.; the Ford Model agency; Remy Martin; Fontainebleau Hilton hotel, and USA Today.

The response from the public and the advertisers (some of whom are using the game as a premium or incentive) is strong enough to warrant his beginning sales pitches for the sponsored squares on the 1987 edition. The edition will be unveiled next March, when his "value-added product" will have added value: A chance to win a $400,000 condominium. A $500,000 sweepstakes promotion began this month and will run into October, with USA Today, Subaru, Eastern Airlines and 800 Cellular participating, says Medney. Six entrants will be chosen to compete in a Nov. 7 game, and the winner will receive a products-filled Subaru XT, he says.

This is apart from the condo contest, for which consumers must submit a definition of the term "Condomoneyum" in 100 words or less. Six finalists will play the game in March to win the Jockey Club III condo.

The objective of Condomoneyum is to build a six-room condominium. Each player begins with $100,000 and attempts to earn more money as he moves around the board by investing in stocks, challenging opponents for corporate advertising accounts and the like, all the while trying to avoid—as in real life—problems with the IRS.

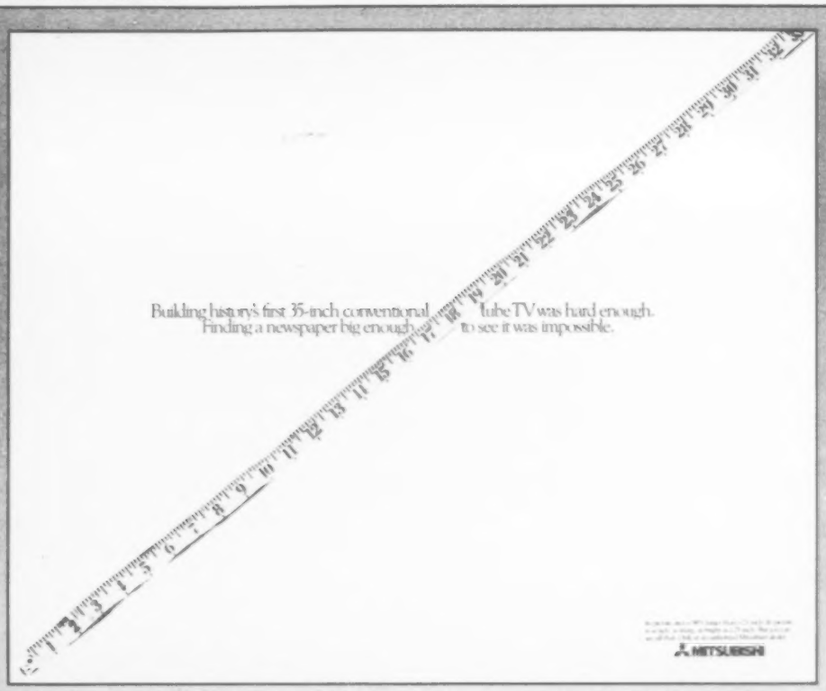
BEST OF PRESS



Building history's first 35-inch conventional tube TV was hard enough.
Finding a newspaper big enough to see it was impossible.
MITSUBISHI

This ad for a new Mitsubishi Electric tv via Chiat/Day represents a classic use of spot color and a good visual to graphically demonstrate a product benefit. Creative director: Lee Clow; copywriters: Bill Hamilton, Phil Lanier; art directors: Rich Boyko, Andy Dijak; photographer: Dennis Manarchy.

This July 4th/Liberty Weekend ad from Scali, McCabe, Sloves was the best of the ads prepared to salute the Statue of Liberty. It hammers home the meaning behind the statue and does a good job of positioning the agency. Creative director: Ed McCabe; art director: Sam Scali; copywriter: Marvin Sloves.

This public service ad, one in a series now being run in Times Mirror Co.'s Newsday and New York Newsday, uses a strong visual and a strong headline to dissuade potential users of crack, the highly potent, smokable form of cocaine. The ad was created by Newsday's promotion department. Copywriter: Jack Squire; art director: Bob Delboy; photographer: William Senft.

Best of Press selections are made by a committee of three: Hank Simons, vp-creative director of the Newspaper Advertising Bureau; James Dunaway, vp-information at the bureau, and William F. Gloede, Advertising Age's newspaper industry reporter. National System Inc., St. Louis, provides tear sheets to the Newspaper Advertising Bureau for much of this work.

Agencies, clients and newspapers are invited to submit ads. Submissions should be sent to Mr. Gloede in Advertising Age New York bureau.

It's hard to miss the point of this ad for Yankelovich Clancy Shulman's new LITMUS-based market-testing system from Friedman Benjamin Inc., New York. Creative director and art director: Tony Benjamin; copywriter: Stephen Friedman; photographer: Barry Schein.

This ad for Volkswagen dealers from Doyle Dane Bernbach effectively used type—in this case Japanese type—to make a point about prices. Creative director: Bonnie Foister; art director: Ron Crooks; copywriter: John Roficki.

May spending climbs 7.8%

New York—Advertiser spending in major-market daily newspapers climbed 7.8% in May from the same month last year, according to the Flash Report of newspaper advertising prepared for Advertising Age by Media Records Inc.

Total spending rose to $312.8 million across the 16 categories measured in the report.

Only three categories showed declines from May, 1985, spending, with the biggest losses coming in the national and local computer equipment and services advertising. The computers, equipment and services general category was down 37.4%, to $3.3 million; the computer stores and supplies retail category was off 12.6%, to $4.2 million.

More than offsetting the decreases were gains in the amusements category, up 26.5% to $31 million; department stores, up 8.3% to $99.4 million; general merchandise stores, up 10.2% to $47.5 million, and radio-tv-phonograph-record retailers, up $11.8% to $19.5 million.

Among other gainers were food stores, up 2.4% to $31.3 million; alcoholic beverages, up 5.9% to $3.3 million; camera-photo supplies and services, up 71.7% to $862,810; public service utilities and commissions, up 14.7% to $7.5 million; cigarets, up 29.4% to $3.1 million; airlines, up 23% to $18.6 million, and new passenger cars, up 27.2% to $19.1 million.

The Flash Report is based on measurements by Media Records in 29 daily and 23 Sunday newspapers in 15 major markets.

And Doyle Dane Bernbach's ad for another client, 375 Spirits Corp., uses color, an arresting headline and a good copy line to promote Chivas Regal scotch. Creative director: Charlie Piccirillo; art directors: Bill Arzonetti, Matt Rao; photographer: Alan Vogel.

Pet food category off its feed, but snacks gain

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

Last year was a mediocre one for the pet food industry, up close to 2.4% in dollars compared with 6.7% last year.

The continuing trend was the increased sales of cat food (up 5.7%) to the detriment of dog food (up only 0.5%). This relates to demographics; cats are easier to take care of than dogs. Thus we believe the dog population is rather flat, with cats growing about 4% to 5%. We believe this will be a continuing trend for the foreseeable future.

This, of course, has had adverse ramifications for some companies' share. Ralston Purina has been losing share, as it is more in the dog food area than the cat food area, where Carnation and Heinz have been gaining share.

As we indicated last year, 75% of all pets in the U.S. now eat some type of commercially prepared food. Obviously, with 55% of wives working and frozen dinners being more the rage, this points to increased use. Moist dog food, despite aggressive marketing by Quaker Oats, was flat.

In terms of unit trends, the canned dog food market was down about 3% over-all, with maintenance products down 6%. The premium canned food area was off slightly and continued that trend through early 1986. Dry dog food was also off about 2% with premium being flat and maintenance down about 6%.

Dog treats were up almost 2%. This area has come from almost nothing 10 years ago to being the third-largest product in the dog food area. Moist dog food was about flat, with soft-dry food down a little over 2%.

In the cat food area, the biggest growth came from canned cat food, up 7% over-all, with all the growth coming from the gourmet segment, which comprised about 85% of the canned cat food division. This segment had a gain of 9% in 1985 against 9% in 1984.

As far as company performance goes, Gaines appears to be the main loser, in seventh position last year out of the top seven companies we follow in detail.#

Foreign strength saved shops' 2nd quarter

Interpublic up 19%, Ogilvy off 13.8%

By STEWART ALTER

Taken at face value, the second-quarter results for the public advertising agencies seem to present a mixed picture, as earnings ranged from the Interpublic Group of Cos.' impressive 19% gain to the Ogilvy Group's 13.8% decline.

But there is more consistency to the second-quarter results than meets the eye, for all agencies are experiencing a softening of U.S. ad expenditures masked by excellent results overseas.

And those foreign results are themselves somewhat disguised: While there is real advertising growth abroad, the weakened U.S. dollar has multiplied those results several times.

The most disturbing results—and those of most general interest and relevance—are domestic revenues, which indicate that U.S. ad spending has continued to soften as the year has progressed. Uncertainty about the economy is leading advertisers to delay or trim spending, lowering agency profits since agencies generally budgeted 1986 expenses for a revenue level that is not materializing.

Not all of the public agencies release separate U.S. and international figures. But among those doing so as well as those providing ADVERTISING AGE with a specially requested breakdown, the picture is clearly not all that bright for U.S. ad spending.

Thus, some agency ceos are not all that optimistic about the second half of '86. JWT Group chairman Don Johnston observed that "given the uncertain outcome of the proposed U.S. income-tax changes, the sluggish economic environment and lower network television prices, the outlook for an improvement in our U.S. clients' advertising spending levels in the second half is doubtful."

Some domestic revenue results show the first half worsened as it went on; the second quarter indicated that spending softened as the year progressed. Foote, Cone & Belding Communications reported a 4.2% decline in U.S. revenues in the second quarter, compared with a 1.3% increase for the entire first half. Ogilvy's U.S. commissions and fees dropped 1.1% to $78.6 million in the second quarter, in part due to the TWA Airlines account loss, while first-half revenues rose by only 0.9%. Even JWT Group's J. Walter Thompson USA, which turned in an exceptionally strong first quarter (AA, May 19), saw second-quarter growth moderated to 7% vs. 9% for the half.

The chief financial officers of Interpublic and BBDO International, the two agencies that reported the best over-all results, provided a domestic/foreign breakout that confirmed the effects of the U.S. ad-spending slowdown are quite widespread.

Interpublic, excluding the Sieber & McIntyre acquisition that helped boost 1986 results, reported U.S. revenue increases of 2% to 5% for the first half, said chief financial officer Eugene Beard. And BBDO International, excluding the results of its Ingalls & Associates purchase this year, would have reported domestic revenue gains of about 7% for the first half and 4% for the second quarter, according to chief financial officer Jim Cannon. Both Messrs. Beard and Cannon indicated that clients' apparent wait-and-see attitude is affecting their spending levels.

But since most of the public agencies are also the large multinational operators, they have their overseas offices to thank for improving financial results. And while there was real foreign growth in ad spending, favorable currency translations to the dollar were a big help.

The most puzzling results were those of FCB, which restated its 1985 and 1986 results to include Leber Katz Partners, which was acquired as of June 30. The restated first-half figures for 1985 are higher in revenues, as expected ($150.7 million with LKP versus $140.2 million without), but lower both in pretax income ($12 million with LKP versus $12.8 million without) and in net income ($6.9 million with LKP versus $7.3 million without), suggesting LKP was operating at a loss.

An FCB spokesman explained those results by noting that "because LKP was a private business its objective was not to maximize net income, but, as with most private businesses, to reduce taxes to the ownership" and "second and even more important, LKP historically has made most of its money in the fourth quarter."

Agency financial results

The second quarter results were mixed, with net income gains as high as 18.8% for the Interpublic Group of Cos., and declines as much as 13.8% for the Ogilvy Group. But a closer look indicates that all are struggling with a slowdown in U.S. ad spending and enjoying overseas growth that is magnified by favorable currency translations. [1]Results for both 1985 and 1986 restated to include Leber Katz Partners, acquired June 30. Bay Area

J. Walter Thompson USA keeping the $100 million US Sprint Communications Co. account after a review (AA, July 7) and new companies adding to the agency cash box and Worlds of Wonder, marketer of Teddy Ruxpin, has boosted Chiat/Day's billings $12 million.

But agency executives are concerned the area's over-all client base has begun to wither.

Among big accounts to flee is Dole Food Co., which pulled $30 million in billings from Allen & Dorward/San Francisco and JWT and consolidated them at New York shop William Esty Co. (AA, April 28). RJR Nabisco transferred an estimated $25 million in Del Monte USA billings to Lowe Marschalk, New York, from the agency's San Francisco office.

"They've cut down the big trees and taken them back East. I'm worried because those things are not easily replaced and I'm not sure how business is going to make a comeback," said Ron Berman, Cole & Weber creative director.

Several smaller trees also were felled. Foster Farms moved its $5 million account from McCann-Erickson to Chiat/Day, Los Angeles (AA, Aug. 11), and specialty retailer Aca Joe awarded its new $1 million account to Los Angeles agency Keye/Donna/Pearlstein.

Two products closely identified with the city—Rice-A-Roni and Ghirardelli chocolate—may not remain with Vantage Advertising & Marketing Associates. The shop is primarily an in-house operation for family-owned parent company Golden Grain Macaroni Co., which Quaker Oats Co. expects to buy later this year.

Another $12 million in Bay Area ad billings are in limbo following Marriott Corp.'s sale of Saga Corp. restaurant divisions (AA, Aug. 11). The Washington-based hotel chain is selling Grandy's, Spectrum Foods, Stuart Anderson's and the Velvet Turtle restaurant chains to a group of investors. Saga's Straw Hat Pizza and Spoons divisions remain on the chopping block, analysts say.

Riney handles the $5 million Stuart Anderson's and Spectrum account; Goodby picked up Saga's $3.5 million Velvet Turtle and Spoons account (AA, July 28), and Evans/Lynch Rockey handles Straw Hat's $4 million account.

"You have to check the paper every day to see who owns [Saga]," said one industry observer, underscoring one of the problems plaguing San Francisco agencies.

"The weeping and gnashing of teeth isn't imagined. There's a tremendous number of people out of work," said Andy Berlin, principal of Goodby, Berlin & Silverstein.

Jose Reynaldo, a principal of Comsearch, Lake Oswego, Ore., said unemployment among San Francisco agency personnel is the worst he has seen in nine years as a West Coast headhunter. People are taking "jobs they would not have looked at twice before," he said.

Many of the city's biggest corporations, including Castle & Cooke, Crocker National Bank, Crown Zellerbach Corp., Genstar Corp., Pacific Lumber Co. and Southern Pacific Transportation Co., have left the market.

According to the city, small entrepreneurial ventures, retailing and service companies are growing, but agencies consider these businesses less desirable because they often have smaller budgets and require constant attention.

The flight of big clients may leave local agencies no option, however, said Jeff Manning, Ketchum Advertising/San Francisco senior vp. "Instead of one $10 million account, you may need to get four or five $2 million accounts." He predicts San Francisco ad agency survival will hinge on a horse player's ability to pick winners: "Which $1 million account is going to grow into a $5 million account?"

Pitching smaller accounts has its advantages. Don Dorward, president and ceo, Allen & Dorward, said he thinks independent shops such as his will have new growth opportunities in the wake of agency and client megamergers.

D. Dorward R. Colnett

Jerry Gibbons, president-ceo of Doyle Dane Bernbach/San Francisco, said his agency's impending merger will provide more financial freedom, easing the day-to-day pressure for profits and giving his operation the ability to "take the longer view."

In the long term, creative strength may help parlay San Francisco into "the Florence of the ad industry," said Millie Olson, Ketchum's creative director.

Until then, thinning staffs may represent an additional burden. Ron Colnett, chairman, DFS Dorland, San Francisco, believes some of the city's hard-hit agencies are understaffed. "The remaining clients begin to suspect you are no longer committed," he said. "They become unsatisfied and look elsewhere."

He warns fellow agencies to resist giving in to what may be a temporary downward spiral.

"It's premature to say it's the end of the line for San Francisco," said Daniel Cohen, ceo at Lowe Marschalk, who was transferred to the agency's New York office as an exec vp to continue work on Del Monte. "I'm told things are not exactly popping in Los Angeles or New York."

Lower tax=high hopes

Positive impact on media seen

By WILLIAM F. GLOEDE

The tax bill approved by the House and Senate conference committee likely will be a boon to the media business, which historically has paid taxes at or near the highest corporate rate.

The elimination of investment tax credits will smart a bit at first, especially at those media companies with major cable tv operations, or at newspapers and magazines that have made substantial capital investments recently. But in the long run, analysts and media brokers predict media businesses will benefit greatly from the new tax structure.

"It's part of the reason the media stock prices have been up

Financial field shifts into high

By PATRICIA WINTERS

New York—The financial-services industry is wasting no time transforming tax reform into one of its biggest marketing opportunities in years. The industry is gearing up to promote its investment expertise, while new products are under development to replace those eliminated by the tax changes.

While reform ultimately may hurt the industry because many investment opportunities tied to tax breaks will be eliminated, it also has created a marketer's dream: A captive audience searching for new ways to invest money. Individual companies are generally mum about their marketing plans, but analysts expect more ad spending and a wave of new

Agencies eye compensation

By STEWART ALTER

While generally beneficial because of a drop in the corporate tax rate, tax-law changes may have their biggest impact on agencies by forcing a reexamination of executive compensation practices.

Private agencies, in particular, will have to explore ways to raise working capital other than selling stock to their own executives.

Tax rate changes in themselves are unlikely to influence anyone to succumb to megamerger fever, but an agency already in negotiations might quit bargaining for that extra nickel and sell this year, when the capital gains tax rate is

GE's Wright bringing new agenda to NBC

By VERNE GAY and WAYNE WALLEY

New York—General Electric Co.'s appointment this week of GE Financial Services president-ceo Robert Wright as chairman of its NBC unit will bring an active new agenda to the tv network.

Former colleagues predict Mr. Wright believes his mission has four goals: Expand the businesses of NBC; lessen the network's reliance on Hollywood; weaken the studios' ability to control programing costs, and make GE's $6.4 billion acquisition of RCA and its NBC subsidiary look good.

Those who know him say Mr. Wright will give top priority to pressing for repeal of the Federal Communications Commission financial interest rule, which prevents tv networks from getting into the lucrative tv syndication business.

Total repeal of the rule could bring the networks hundreds of millions of dollars in new revenues; even a partial repeal could expand network revenue potential.

At the same time, NBC has programing chief Brandon Tartikoff under contract for three more years. As part of Mr. Tartikoff's new contract, he will run a new movie studio that will make about five films a year at an average budget of $6 million each.

In addition, Mr. Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment, will oversee the production of more in-house programing, especially made-for-tv movies.

While these film production assignments were seen as "golden handcuffs" to keep Mr. Tartikoff in the NBC fold, the deal also gives NBC a new in-house studio to develop and perhaps the most respected programer in tv to run it.

Clients should reap merger benefits: Smith 3

The new megamerger ad agencies should invest the savings of their efficiencies "in the creative side of the business," said Roger Smith, Advertising Age's 1985 Advertising Man of the Year, in accepting his honor at the AA Creative Workshop Aug. 18.

Terror tampers with marketers 3

Once limited to over-the-counter drugs in capsule form, product-tampering threats have spread to some of the nation's largest package-goods marketers. The cost to marketers is in the millions of dollars and nobody knows exactly what to do about it.

Slump continues for many magazines 20

The single-copy sales slump plaguing many consumer magazines eased somewhat in the first half of 1986, but total paid circulation continued to drop for many major titles. The Audit Bureau of Circulations' semiannual FAS-FAX report for the January-through-June period revealed total paid sales dropped for seven of the ten largest magazines.

Competition lowers prices: Coke 25

The competition between Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola has been so intense that the price of Coke today is 90% lower than 85 years ago, in 1900 dollars. That's one of several statistics revealed in court papers by Coca-Cola Co. in supporting its now-aborted effort to acquire Dr Pepper Co. from Forstmann Little & Co.

In the cigaret business, anyone who manages a brand into the top 10 will never have to worry about mundane things like career growth. That's because a top 10 cigaret brand is bigger than many entire companies. The smallest in the top 10—R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s Vantage—racked up sales of more than $600 million last year, according to industry estimates.

FTC reviews Commodore ads for Amiga

By BRIAN MORAN

The Federal Trade Commission is investigating Commodore International Ltd.'s advertising claim that its Amiga personal computer can run IBM-compatible software.

An FTC spokesman said the probe is in response to complaints from several Amiga retailers that ads created by Ted Bates Advertising/New York misrepresent the computer's ability.

Executives of West Chester, Pa.-based Commodore did not return phone calls.

The complaining retailers reportedly accuse Commodore's ads of failing to disclose that only a handful of IBM-compatible programs can run on the Amiga via a special add-on cartridge. The complaints also allege that the Amiga requires additional software attachments to run IBM-compatible software at acceptable speed.

Commodore is already under an FTC order barring it from misrepresenting the performance or availability of its products. That action followed an FTC probe into a 1982 campaign, via Ally & Gargano, for Commodore's C64 computer. The FTC ruled that an advertised C64 feature that allowed the machine to run programs compatible with the CP/M operating system was not available for sale until nearly a year later.

Commodore's ads for the Amiga have claimed that the machine is IBM-compatible. However, it was not until early this year that the company finally introduced a peripheral software attachment, dubbed Sidecar, that provided compatibility.

The Amiga has been a disappointment for Commodore, though the company said the powerful computer had its strongest sales yet in the quarter ended in June.#

Ad ban pulls plug on smokeless

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—Ads for smokeless tobacco make their final appearance on tv and radio this week before following cigarets into exile from the electronic media.

The federal ban on tv and radio ads for chewing tobacco and snuff takes effect Aug. 28. It will leave cigars and pipe tobacco as the last tobacco products with access to tv and radio advertising.

After Feb. 27, 1987, labeling and the remaining ads for smokeless tobacco products must display one of three health warnings, on a revolving basis, mandated by the federal government.

The ban pinches particularly hard at Ted Turner's WTBS superstation. Red Man, a chewing tobacco marketed by Swedish Tobacco Co.'s Pinkerton division, Owensboro, Ky., has been a major sponsor on WTBS. The Bloom Agency, Dallas, handles.

Spending about $4 million this year, Red Man was a high-visibility sponsor of Atlanta Braves baseball and college football, said WTBS vp-sports sales Jim Trahey.

Ford's advertising slips in consumer recall poll

But it stays No. 1 among car makers

By JULIE FRANZ

Ford Motor Co.'s advertising may say it makes the best-built American cars, but that is making less of an impression on consumers.

In June, Ford started a new print attack in its continuing battle over "quality" claims with Chrysler Corp.

The two auto marketers' ads are quarreling over which has the least number of reported defects.

But ADVERTISING AGE's July adWatch survey found that fewer consumers named Ford first from among all the auto and truck advertising seen, heard or read in the past 30 days.

Ford's share of first mentions among auto makers fell 3.8 percentage points to 18.4%, still the highest figure among auto advertisers but Ford's poorest score since last August.

Chrysler's share of ad awareness remained steady at 3.7%, keeping it in fifth place among car and truck ads.

Ford's advertising could be losing out to the Japanese. Both Toyota and Nissan gained in their share of first mentions but not enough to be considered statistically significant.

Toyota's ad awareness score rose to 9.1%, putting the brand's advertising in third place, while Nissan's score rose slightly to 5.1% for fourth place.

Rounding out the car and truck category is General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet, No. 2 with 13.2% of first mentions.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb.

Ad awareness is measured by asking a nationally projected sample of consumers to name the advertising that first comes to mind —over-all and in a variety of product categories—from among all advertising seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days.

During July, 1,000 consumers were polled by telephone.

Under adWatch methodology, an increase or decrease of 2.8 percentage points is considered to be statistically significant and attributable to more than sample variation.

July's 10 best-recalled ads (without respondents being asked for a specific product category) were, in descending order: Pepsi-Cola, Coca-Cola, McDonald's, Budweiser/Bud Light (Anheuser-Busch), Burger King, Marlboro (Philip Morris Cos.), Miller/Miller Lite, Jell-O, Ford and Coors.

More than 56% of those queried said "don't know" or "none" when asked to name any advertising they'd seen, heard or read from the previous month, up slightly from 54% in June.

Among other significant changes in advertising awareness during July:

- General Foods Corp.'s Jell-O brand remained among the top 10 brands in unaided advertising awareness almost three months after an anonymous prankster warned he had tampered with the product. No actual tampering was discovered.

The brand, with star presenter Bill Cosby and a pint-size backup group singing the praises of its products, scored 0.8% of first men-

Ford ads boast 'best-built'

New strategy stresses quality, design

By PATRICIA STRNAD

TORONTO—Ford division is borrowing Ford Motor Co.'s corporate "best-built American cars and trucks" ad claim for its own 1987 advertising.

The corporate theme has been modified for the Ford division to "best-built American cars, six years running," part of a new marketing strategy to emphasize the quality, value and design of Ford products. Ads also will include the long-running slogan, "Have you driven a Ford lately?"

Ford's use of the "best-built" claim has drawn fire from Chrysler Corp. chairman Lee Iacocca, who earlier this year challenged Ford's corporate quality superiority positioning and claimed a Chrysler survey of 1986 domestic vehicles put Chrysler ahead of General Motors Corp. and Ford (AA, May 19). He threatened to ask the Federal Trade Commission or tv network review committees to force Ford commercials off the air.

A Chrysler spokesman last week declined comment on the new Ford advertising, but said, "We believe our data. We think our data are correct."

Ford division said it isn't worried about the dispute. "Chrysler's study was based on one year, for 1986 models," Robert Rewey, vp-general manager of Ford division, said in an interview at the company's annual dealer show here. "Our study takes '81s that have been in service for five years and so forth all the way up. It wasn't just on how good a vehicle is coming out of the factory, but on how it holds up."

Mr. Rewey said Ford started to assess its quality status in 1980 by measuring the number of "things gone wrong" and, by 1986, Ford quality had improved by 64%.

Ford's 1987 advertising, via J. Walter Thompson USA, Detroit, will emphasize individual products and design features to "let the products speak for themselves."

A full-line spot on Ford design uses close camera angles of aerodynamic curves and features. An ad for the Thunderbird Turbo Coupe, which gets a redesigned front end and will be sold as a separate model in the Thunderbird line, calls it a "whole new category of automobiles." Another spot focuses solely on that car's intercooled turbocharger "to establish its credentials," said Ross Roberts, Ford division marketing manager. The F-series pickup truck, which has a heavily redesigned front end, is touted as the "new shape of tough."

Ford also showed dealers the Festiva, a minicar designed by Mazda and built by Korean auto maker Kia. It will be introduced in the spring of 1987 as a 1988 model. Festiva probably will beat to market GM's Pontiac LeMans, a 1988 subcompact built by Korean auto maker Daewoo that will be introduced in late summer or early fall of 1987.

The division is continuing a strategy of simplifying its product offerings and more clearly targeting the market for each vehicle. For example, Ford equipped Thunderbirds in 160 versions in 1985. For 1987, it will offer only 16 variations by prepackaging frequently ordered options, Mr. Rewey said.

Ford and Lincoln-Mercury divisions also are moving farther apart in the marketplace, as each goes after more distinct market segments. L-M will continue to pursue luxury car buyers, while Ford places greater emphasis on trucks. Mr. Rewey, who last year predicted that 1986 would be the first year in which trucks would outsell cars at Ford, said "it's a real horse race." Ford hopes to capture a 20% share of the U.S. car market and 30% for trucks. It now has about 18% and 29%, respectively.

Metter takes tough path to summit

Accepted JWT jobs 'nobody wanted'

By STEWART ALTER

NEW YORK—Bert Metter's climb to the top of the agency world as new chairman-ceo of J. Walter Thompson USA has taken far from the usual or glamorous route.

A man who describes his career at JWT as one of "taking jobs nobody wanted to mess with because they were tough or seemed unrewarding," Mr. Metter defies the definitions of how agency careers are supposed to progress, as well as what people at his career stage are supposed to be like.

"He's very smart and very strategic," said James Patterson, JWT/New York's exec vp-executive creative director, stating a frequently heard assessment of Mr. Metter, who moves up from the post of vice-chairman. "And he continues to be hungry. He's 59 but a very young 59."

Mr. Metter turned 59 on Aug. 14, the day he was named to succeed Burton Manning, who left to join Jordan, Manning, Case, Taylor & McGrath (AA, Aug. 18).

He started out at JWT 26 years ago as a direct-response specialist when that branch of advertising had none of its current mystique.

The Brooklyn-born Mr. Metter, whose father was in the handbag manufacturing business, graduated from Brooklyn College with plans to become a reporter. But the M.A. in English literature he subsequently received from Columbia University made him overqualified for a job as a copyboy, he said.

Mr. Metter did eventually break into the newspaper business, rising to copy chief at the now shuttered New York Mirror, but shifted to marketing, in the direct-response field, as copy chief in the circulation department at Newsweek.

JWT hired Mr. Metter in 1960 to help try to win Ford Motor Co.'s direct-mail business. With that effort's success, Mr. Metter moved into general advertising via a process that involved working progressively in various Ford groups.

BERT METTER

He made his name on the Ford account, the agency's largest worldwide, and took on the job of creative director on the account in 1978.

A decade ago, under Lee Iacocca, Ford was "a wild scene," Mr. Metter said. "When they said they wanted to see new advertising, they meant the next morning, although it was late at night. People were reluctant to work on that business."

In 1982, after the Ford creative work was moved to Detroit and Mr. Metter opted not to make that move, he was named executive creative director of JWT/New York.

For various reasons—chief among them, sources say, that Mr. Metter was not the executional whiz that the agency needed at that time—he was only in that role for two years. But his reputation as an excellent strategist was untarnished. And it was at new business that he continued to excel, helping land a string of new accounts, including Miller Brewing Co.'s Miller High Life and Lowenbrau beers, Emery Air Freight, Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s Discover card and IBM Corp.

His secret, he said, was "knowing how to slide the cassette into a videocassette player and pressing the start button"—in other words, letting the quality of the work speak for itself.

As for the challenge that Mr. Metter faces in running the agency, his predecessor, Mr. Manning, believes it is maintaining "the creative momentum that has been established and to make sure that the profound cultural changes [that led to the creative changes] are truly institutionalized."#

Success still difficult to 'Discover'

Next 3 years may decide its fate

By STUART J. ELLIOTT

NEW YORK—After being interviewed at the Time & Life Bldg. about Discover's dilemmas, Gilbert Rogin, managing editor of the troubled science monthly, walks a reporter to the elevators. There they meet James Hayes, Discover's publisher, whom the reporter interviewed earlier.

"I told him we'd never make it," Mr. Rogin jokes.

"Until when?" Mr. Hayes replies.

That exchange typifies the philosophies of the two top executives: "Jim's an optimist," said Mr. Rogin, "and I'm a skeptic."

Nevertheless, both are making their best efforts to answer to Mr. Hayes' question.

"We're willing to try anything," Mr. Rogin said. "We work as closely as any publisher and editor in this building, because it's a desperate battle—it's really daunting."

With Discover's September issue, out today, Time Inc. starts its latest efforts to boldly go where no publisher of a consumer science magazine has gone before—into the black.

It's estimated Discover has lost close to $50 million since its October, 1980, introduction.

This is the first issue to be sent to the 525,000 subscribers of Science 86 since that rival was folded by the Washington-based American Assn. for the Advancement of Science and its list sold to Time Inc. (AA, June 30, et seq.).

Subtracting duplicate subscribers and the 30,000 Science 86 readers who asked for a cash refund—fewer than the 50,000 Mr. Hayes budgeted—Discover has about 425,000 in new circulation, of which Mr. Hayes hopes eventually to keep about 300,000.

Science 86 readers are being delivered to Discover advertisers with no change in the rate base of 850,000 until next July.

Until January, when Mr. Hayes plans a "single-digit" increase, ad rates are unchanged at $11,840 for a b&w page and $17,175 for a color page.

Not included in the circulation picked up from Science 86 is the list Time Inc. is buying from Science Digest, the Hearst Magazines monthly that, with Discover and Science 86, comprised the now-defunct category.

Unlike the demographically desirable subscribers of Science 86, who were offered either Discover or cash refunds, Science Digest's 417,786 subscribers are being offered Time or Discover or cash. The only ones Mr. Hayes would "like very much to get the bulk of" are SD's 160,000-odd long-term renewers.

These moves, said Mr. Hayes, profile has greatly improved [and] we're a lot stronger case for a lot of ad categories: Automotive, consumer electronics, corporate advertising, liquor, travel," Mr. Hayes said.

Taking on the "somewhat higher-quality audience" of Science 86, amid some bitterness over its folding, is "our big gamble," Mr. Rogin said, to "convince advertisers this is a good magazine and Publisher James Hayes (l.) and managing editor Gilbert Rogin have high hopes for Discover now that, effective with the September issue, it has acquired the subscribers of Science 86.

and the "pretty damn good" editorial and advertising results from last year's much-ballyhooed "September commitment" (AA, June 10, '85, et seq.), mean that "now we really have a clear shot at the kind of success this magazine deserves. . .We've cleared away a lot of the reasons for skepticism and questions."

The addition of Science 86's readers means "our demographic these are the people you should reach."

Getting these readers to stick with Discover will "really be crucial," he added.

Messrs. Hayes and Rogin agree a "high-quality" 1 million circulation would be just fine for Discover, versus its 877,806 for the six months ending June 30.

The cost of acquiring Science 86's list—$3.75 million upfront, $2.25 million over five years and a bonus of up to $1 million for expired Science 86 subscriptions renewed for Discover—will be paid for by suspending Discover's own twice-yearly mail drops and agency sales, Mr. Hayes said, "so we've improved our [profit and loss] for the next two years."

His perspective on Discover is a bit longer than that.

"The ultimate answer [on the new moves] will be three years from now, when we see how healthy Discover is," Mr. Hayes said, for by 1989 is when its executives will "really have an understanding where we're going."

And if the new moves don't help?

"I think down the road we'd very definitely reassess everything if we didn't make any progress," Mr. Hayes said. "We'd have to make some hard decision on it."

"This is our shot," Mr. Rogin said. "We'll never have a better opportunity than we do now."#

Critics turn guns on tv ads

Siskel, Ebert mix pans, praise at Workshop

NEW YORK—Film critics Roger Ebert and Gene Siskel, best known for their biting tv jabs at movies and at one another, drew almost continuous laughter when they turned their guns on tv ads at the ADVERTISING AGE Creative Workshop's closing luncheon Aug. 20.

Reviewing randomly selected tv commercials, each of the stars of syndicated tv's "At the Movies" gave four stars, the highest rating, to a different spot. Mr. Siskel's favorite was a Cheerios commercial he labeled "terrific" that stresses the cereal's unsinkability. Mr. Ebert's was the Frusen Gladje commercial that features a young woman admitting she ate an entire carton of the superpremium ice cream—and would do so again.

"I love that smirk," Mr. Ebert said of the woman's look, adding that the spot deserved four stars because it attempts to sell the ice cream with truth.

Mr. Ebert almost agreed with his partner about the perfection of the Cheerios spot, which he gave 3½ stars; this made it the highest-rated commercial reviewed. Mr. Siskel, however, did not share Mr. Ebert's enthusiasm for Frusen Gladje's guilty young woman, saying, "The more I watched the spot, the more I hated her."

The spot rated lowest over-all was for Caress soap. Mr. Siskel, calling it silly, gave it one star, while Mr. Ebert, saying the commercial tries to sell the product as a "sex substitute," gave it 1½ stars.

Another spot that received a negative review was for Ford trucks. Both men gave it only 1½ stars, as Mr. Siskel said there were too many qualifying words at the bottom of the screen and Mr. Ebert said the two men in the spot talk in ad statistics.

The latest in the series of tough-guy spots for Miller Lite, which features a drill sergeant drinking a Lite, drew 2½ stars from Mr. Siskel; he said he found it difficult to imagine his drill sergeant drinking a light beer. Mr. Ebert was more generous, giving it three stars.

Neither particularly liked a Maybelline commercial for Fresh Lash mascara. Mr. Ebert gave it two stars, saying, "What it didn't sell me on was the humanity of the company." Mr. Siskel gave it 2½ stars, saying, "It's too frantic trying to sell a very simple message: It'll stay on even in water."

Neither gave high praise to a Diet Coke commercial with jazz music and colorful graphics. Mr. Ebert called the spot fun, but said it gets lost at the end, when it makes a plug for caffeine-free Diet Coke. In the give-and-take between the two, Mr. Ebert did not get around to voicing a star rating for the commercial. Mr. Siskel said, "It's just another Coke spot" that will sell more cola than Coke, and gave it 2½ stars.

McD's NFL tie aims at 7-11s

By SCOTT HUME

McDonald's Corp. next week throws for the end zone with a major national promotion tied, for the first time, to the National Football League.

The "Win with the NFL" game promotion, for which network tv advertising support begins Sept. 12, has been pitched to the chain's franchisees as the cornerstone in McDonald's efforts to offset slumping industry sales, widen its sales advantage over fast-food competitors and block an increasingly strong rush from convenience-store chains such as 7-Eleven.

The national promotion is only one element in a multiyear agreement between McDonald's and the NFL, according to sources. For example, local co-ops will be able to give away NFL merchandise after the scratch-card game has ended, and McDonald's will be buying time during local and national NFL telecasts. The chain also will work with NFL Charities, while the league and the Players Assn. have agreed to work with the Ronald McDonald House program (as Major League Baseball players do now).

Expanding to a national scale a promotion run in Chicago during last season's playoffs, the four-week "Win with the NFL" game involves trading cards featuring photos of home-team stars (or All-Pro stars in non-NFL markets). Scratching off a panel on each card reveals one of the 14 games being played in the upcoming week and a designated winning team. If that team does win the game, customers get a buy-one-get-one-free offer

International billings to Y&R or McCann

C-P trims agency list

By PAT SLOAN

New York—Chesebrough-Pond's is preparing to consolidate $50 million in international billings at either Young & Rubicam or McCann-Erickson Worldwide.

The key brands in the review are in the skincare category and include Vaseline Intensive Care and Pond's creams, which account for most of C-P's overseas business and the lion's share of its billings.

The review doesn't involve U.S. assignments for the Vaseline and Pond's brands currently at William Esty Co. and Waring & LaRosa.

Tony Butterworth, president of C-P's international business, and Richard Painchaud, vp-business development, were unavailable for comment last week. But executives at Chesebrough confirmed that the review had been narrowed down to Y&R and McCann. A final decision is expected to be announced within "a month or two," said one source.

Not all categories will necessarily be affected by the review, executives said.

Household products, concentrated in Italy and handled by McCann, will probably not be shifted regardless of the outcome.

Currently, C-P employs a number of agencies overseas, including Y&R; McCann; Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide, and J. Walter Thompson Co.

By consolidating a majority of its overseas billings at one agency and trimming its roster, an executive said C-P should be able to get the "synergy we feel we're not getting and think we should be getting. It's clear to

Omnicom deal sealed, shops turn to business

By STEWART ALTER

New York—The battle among the biggest advertising agencies for client business worldwide has escalated as Omnicom Group officially joins their ranks as a major superpower.

Omnicom, dubbed the "Big Bang" when three major agencies proposed its formation last spring (AA, April 28, et seq.), was born as a $5 billion agency when shareholders of BBDO International and Doyle Dane Bernbach Group approved the transaction at separate meetings in New York Aug. 28. Shareholders of the third partner, privately held Needham Harper Worldwide, gave their approval Aug. 12.

At BBDO, 77.4% of shares voted "yes," while at DDB, the ayes totaled 79.05%.

The formation of Omnicom and the acquisitions this year that have made the U.K.'s Saatchi & Saatchi Co. the No. 1 agency group are creating a new and unpredictable era in the agency business.

In an interview, Allen Rosenshine, BBDO's president-ceo who now becomes president-ceo of Omnicom, said rapid consolidation and multinational growth among cli-

GM triggers new round of finance cuts

By PATRICIA STRNAD

Detroit—U.S. auto makers moved to clear out 1986 models with promotions of rock-bottom financing incentives.

General Motors Corp. is offering 2.9% annual percentage rate financing, backing it with its largest-ever incentive ad campaign.

Chrysler Corp. responded by undercutting GM, offering 2.4% financing on 24-month loans on most cars and trucks.

At press time Aug. 29, Ford Motor Co. had yet to announce its plans to match its competitors, but Thomas Wagner, vp-general manager of Ford's Lincoln-Mercury division, said, "They [GM] are calling the shots. We'll keep our dealers competitive any way we have to."

"We're out to ignite the market with this sweeping six-week program," said James Vorhes, vp in charge of the GM customer sales and service staff. "If anyone has been waiting for GM's final closeout of 1986 models, this is it."

Buick dealer Carl Fischer of Troy, Mich., said he sold 29 Buicks the first day of 2.9% financing, compared with a usual daily average of six or seven. "If anything is going to move the mountain, it's 2.9. But I'm a little concerned over what will happen in October" when the incentive program ends, Mr. Fischer said.

A GM spokesman declined to give ad spending for the campaign, but said, "It's pretty big, certainly the largest concentrated advertising program for any incentive activity in our history. All GM divisions will do their own campaigns with their own agencies tying into the Big one theme, and we expect very heavy local dealer advertis-

Nike fast-talks walking shoe

By BRIAN LOWRY

Nike Inc. will snap off a series of weighty one-liners in a new print and outdoor campaign for its walking shoes.

Ads in October issues of People and Reader's Digest will show the company's $54.95 walking shoe, the EXW, and suggest that consumers "Try one on for thighs," "Make your wife lose her lunch" and "If you love your mother, make her leave home."

Outdoor boards take a similar approach, with bus boards reading "This bus isn't worth the weight" and "Walkers have no guts."

The Beaverton, Ore.-based athletic apparel company also will make its point in an old-fashion way. Walkers sporting sandwich boards will stroll the streets of New York, San Francisco and Boston beginning Sept. 15. Messages will be tailored to the city, with "Walk Nike" as the punch line on the back of each board.

In Boston, near Harvard University, the board will suggest "Exercise some intelligence." At historic Beacon Hill: "The walkers are coming, the walkers are coming." And on San Francisco's bar-laden Union Street: "Walk it off."

The campaign, created by Wieden & Kennedy, Portland, marks Nike's first general-market push for its walking shoes.

Corporate sponsors join starting lineup

By Ed Fitch

Companies long have been called sweatshops, usually in a not-too-endearing tone by employes. Yet sweat marketing is in, and more boardroom meetings may as well be held in locker rooms as corporate America plays up its involvement in sports sponsorship.

Although reporting supporting statistics is tough—estimates range from $1 billion to $4 billion, indicating the field's youth—those involved agree sports sponsorship is booming. They also say the lineup will accommodate many more players.

Despite tremendous growth, says Ray Benton, president, ProServ, a Washington-based sports marketing company, the field is only one-third filled. The growth will be in two arenas: Sponsorship of new sports and creative packaging and utilization of existing sports.

No sport is so mighty it has been able to ignore the marketing rookie's presence. "The cost of ad time on the Big Three sports is so high advertisers sought other opportunities within them," says Howard Wishner, president, Wishner Communications, New York.

This demand in part led to the creation of divisions like the National Football League's NFL Properties, which allow advertisers an opportunity to get involved without buying time. "The leagues are happy because they get the dollars, and the corporations are happy because they can associate themselves with the sport without picking up the tab of advertising," he says.

Corporations are interested in going beyond media buys in identifying themselves with sports, says Tom Osenton, associate publisher of Westport, Conn.-based Sports Marketing News. They want to extend the value of their sports activity over a longer period of time, he says, "a case of 30 seconds versus two months or two years."

In addition to the association factor, corpora-

NFL scores with national marketing game plan

By Thomas L. Moore

Professional football has sacked its reliance on a conservative marketing game plan. The New York-based National Football League once again is moving the ball, having been forced to punt in 1982 when the players went on strike.

The time to become aggressive couldn't be better. Last season was the NFL's best in terms of attendance, tv ratings and sales, all of which had previously dropped below 1981 levels.

A lot of this had to do with the Chicago Bears. Not only did they deal the New England Patriots the most crushing defeat in Super Bowl history, but the club also racked up 20% of all NFL merchandise sales, vaulting from the No. 8 slot to No. 1 last season. Had the Bear's William "the Refrigerator" Perry been a team, he would have edged out 10 teams in merchandise sales.

The beneficiary was not the Bears, however, but the NFL. The Bears fared no better than the Buffalo Bills because all revenue is kicked into a kitty controlled by NFL Properties, the league's national licensing, marketing and publishing arm. All 28 clubs own an equal share of the company, which controls league funds.

The Bears aren't bothered too much by the arrangement. Considering only six teams have repeated as Super Bowl champions, winning teams don't gripe too loudly because their fortunes—and sales—eventually will falter.

Thomas L. Moore, a former sports writer, profiled Patrick Ewing's endorsement activities and the sports marketing agency business in last year's Sports Marketing Special Report.

"You can't do all your marketing on your own," says Bill McGrane, the Bears' director-marketing and communications. "The philosophy that runs NFL Properties is no different from the philosophy that runs any team: To keep all of the teams strong."

In 1963, commissioner Pete Rozelle convinced the then 14 NFL team owners to pool their marketing resources. "The beginnings of the company are related to souvenir merchandise and a desire to get quality under control," says Bob Carey, NFLP president.

Mr. Rozelle wanted the clubs to concentrate on football, adds John Bello, exec vp-marketing. "It didn't make sense for clubs to go out and license products. It detracted from their primary purpose."

Mr. Carey says the centralization, which is based on the same concept as pooled tv rights, strengthens the teams. "It's equal sharing, equal investment and equal benefit."

A smaller market team does not suffer at the expense of a franchise in a prime media market, says Bob Eller, director-pr, Indianapolis Colts. "It benefits everybody, otherwise the big markets would dominate."

Rarely plagued by the problem of filling stadium seats, the NFL's move to merchandising was natural. Now 125 licensees manufacture some 350 articles, ranging from t-shirts to helmet-shaped easy chairs.

"When you sell out 92% of all your seats, marketing becomes a lot more than trying to sell tickets," says Rusty Martin, NFL Properties' director-club relations. "Our inventory situation and our ticket situation is totally different from all the other major sports."

Promotional licensing, third-party agreements with major corporations, now accounts for 50% of the NFLP's gross revenue.

Retail licensing racks up 33%, and publications pick up the remaining 17%. The retail and promotional licensing segments each account for 45% of operating profit; publishing garners 10%.

"Our business is expanding from the exclusive use of trademarks on actual products to the use of trademarks by big companies in sweepstakes, promotions and contests," Mr. Carey says. "That still fits our mandate."

More companies are shifting ad budgets into promotions, he says, triggering a lot of competition for dollars. "You're easily forgotten if you're not visible."

NFLP is tackling promotional involvement through a concept called "power marketing," Mr. Bello says. "The marketing structure in the NFL is national in scope and local in impact," designed to help companies meet any marketing objective.

In addition to the heavyweight marketing efforts, companies have sound reasons to line up with the NFL. A 1985 Louis Harris Survey reported 70% of adult men and 49% percent of adult women follow NFL action, eclipsing all other sports.

NFL games carry airwave clout as well, pulling the highest ratings for sporting events among all age segments, including teens and children, according to the 1985 Nielsen Television Index. More than 30 million households tune in to at least one NFL game weekly. "Monday Night Football," with a 19.7 rating last season, outscored the average prime time show.

To capitalize on this market dominance, NFLP targeted and filled 20 product and service categories, such as airlines and auto and food marketers, for promotional agreements. "Food companies tend to spend most promotionally," but product managers view football as male dominated and their products as women oriented, Mr. Bello says.

The league developed "Fun, Food and Football," a 24-page free-standing insert, "to bridge the gap between football and the female."

The annual food-oriented promotion—the biggest themed fsi, he says—penetrates 40 million households and carried a sweepstakes promotion last fall that netted average response levels of at least 6%, more than triple the norm. According to a Parade Starch Analysis, 92% of readers noted the section, and individual ads pulled readership scores as high as 62%; the average is 43%.

Deals like the inserts and sponsored activities allow a company to attach its name to a high image sport without the "high dollar ad money," says Alan Markow, director-communications planning for Phoenix-based GTE Telephone Operations. NFL marketing also offers sponsors access to league speakers, sales force incentives, including trips to games and visits to training camps.

Jim Millman, president of New York-based Omnicom's sports marketing subsidiary, Millsport, says NFL Properties' success rests on it providing one-stop shopping. "Once you reach an agreement with NFL Properties, they can deliver the promotional value and services on behalf of all 28 teams. We make the decision to work with the local clubs at the local levels where it makes sense."

This helps take the sting out of sharing the burden with less profitable teams. "Obviously, when you have a good year, you can't reap a lot of cash benefit from it," the Bears' Mr. McGrane says. "But we have more latitude with in-stadium programs."

Some teams think they could make more money marketing themselves, Mr. Carey says. "But when you sit down and talk with them, they realize it doesn't work that way."

The NFLP brings a lot to the party, Mr. Bello says. "We put a big accent on taking a national client and having him do things at the local level."

"We couldn't come anywhere near locally what they can do for us nationally," says Bill Harpole, marketing director for the Denver Broncos. The best marketing tool is a great team, he says, "but you can't control that."

To protect against soft times, the Broncos wrap 70 local pages—65% of which are ads—around "Game Day," the national program put together by NFLP and distributed to the teams at no expense. In addition, the Broncos are offering six in-stadium corporate-sponsored promotions.

Despite having sold out the 60,000-seat Hoosier Dome, the Colts also are pursuing corporate promotions. "Our marketing objectives are to defray the cost of our

McMahon passes up some offers

Chicago Bears quarterback Jim McMahon proved one point in the Super Bowl. He can play football like a man possessed.

Mr. McMahon also demonstrated he can garner an epic amount of media attention and do a superb job of imitating corporate signage. His pregame antics dimmed the Refrigerator's light in terms of media coverage, and his changing headbands during the game drew more comments than did the play of the New England Patriots.

But media skeptics wondered if his stunts would endear him to advertisers. Corporations obviously are not as thin-skinned as the skeptics.

"We've had a ton of offers since the Super Bowl from a wide cross-section of companies," says Steve Zucker, head of Stephen Wade Zucker Ltd., Mr. McMahon's Skokie, Ill.-based agent. "But we're going real slow."

Messrs. Zucker and McMahon will limit the scrambler's advertising endorsements to three this year. Two down, one to go. In addition to the spot he did for American Honda Motor Co.'s motorcycle division, in early August Mr. McMahon agreed to star in a spot for Taco Bell, which will appear early this month. "We'd already turned down two other fast food companies," Mr. Zucker says.

Mr. McMahon will endorse only products he uses, and "he's a Taco Bell freak so it was a natural," he says. "He's immensely loyal to the companies he contracts with." Mr. McMahon's well-publicized arrival at training camp on a Honda was not staged, only an extension of his affinity for the product, Mr. Zucker says.

boards must be approved to make sure they don't portray the star as "too radical. It's not Jim. Sure he's his own man, but he's not the lunatic some people would take him for," Mr. Zucker says. His self-assuredness and the fact that he's not motivated by money make him a very credible spokesperson, he says.

Limiting his endorsements also makes him attractive to agencies looking for a strong tie between product and sports figure.

"We're trying to be low key," Mr. Zucker says, "as low key as you can be with Jim."

promotions and to improve public relations," Mr. Eller says.

Many local marketing efforts are community related. "If a sponsor wants to use our logo," he says, "we explain the benefits to NFL Properties, and nine times out of ten they waive the royalty rights fee." The return is that sponsors often buy broadcast ads, which provides an additional bargaining chip when radio and tv rights are renegotiated. Another advantage is NFL-related promotions are, in a sense, ads for the league.

Another ripe area for growth is overseas licensing, which now accounts for a surprising 12% to 15% of retail licensing sales. "As Europeans convert to commercial tv, it's inevitable that we will get more exposure," he says.

NFL visibility in Britain has been heightened by a 75-minute weekly highlights show. With not even geography or cultural barriers blocking them, NFLP marketers appear poised to run up the score.

Another arrow in Chiefs' quiver

The Kansas City Chiefs have a lean and hungry look. It's been 14 long years since the club last saw any postseason action and fan interest has waned.

That's not good news for a club that plays in 78,000-seat Arrowhead Stadium, one of the biggest stadiums in the NFL, and one that is located in a market that ranks ahead of only Green Bay and Indianapolis in terms of population among NFL franchise locations. Unlike most clubs, the Chiefs' No. 1 challenge is to get people into the stands, says Mitch Wheeler, the Chiefs' director-promotions and group sales.

To help meet that objective, Mr. Wheeler draws his weapons from a diverse marketing arsenal, including an 80,000-piece direct mail campaign promoting group attendance, which filled 70,000 seats last season; community relations, and corporate sponsorships. "Frankly, we have learned from the Kansas City Chiefs," says John Bello, exec vp-marketing, NFL Properties, New York. "They are extremely innovative."

In an attempt to vault the Chiefs' won-loss record, the marketing theme is "Come celebrate the weekend with us," which highlights not only traditional action shots, but also marching bands and fans enjoying the game. "We're in the entertainment business," Mr. Wheeler says. "From the time people drive into our parking lot until the time they leave, we want to have the best production possible."

The production would rival any small-scale David Wolper effort. The Chiefs have their own marching band, co-ed cheerleaders, entertaining scoreboards and half-time shows.

"Our goal is to put together a first-class program," he says. "Hopefully, if the team doesn't win, people still will feel as though they got their money's worth." With an ad budget of $200,000, the Chiefs have taken their message to the public through local newspapers and electronic media. "People think our budget is much larger because of our exposure level."

Mr. Wheeler also works with 35 to 40 companies to increase attendance through promotions and in-stadium giveaways. Sponsor Lee Jeans, for example, passes out a ticket with each purchase of a pair of jeans.

The Chiefs also look to corporate sponsors to chop expenses. "We look at all of those things we have to do and identify those we can take to a sponsor for a promotion tie-in to defray our costs." Oscar Mayer Food Corp., for example, put its logo on the Chiefs' pocket schedule, helping to offset printing costs.

As a result of Mr. Wheeler's strategy, average attendance at Arrowhead hit 50,000 last season. While this is a far cry from the glory days in the late '60s, he's had a lot less to work with lately.

STRIKE GOLD IN ALASKA.
IF YOU'RE SEARCHING FOR UPSCALE MEN, THE GREAT ALASKA SHOOTOUT IS MONEY IN THE BANK.
The 1986-87 college basketball season gets off to a blazing start this November on ESPN. For openers, there's a series of exhibition games between the Soviet National Team (featuring 1st round NBA pick Arvidas Sabonis) and top American college teams.
Then the real fireworks begin. The Great Alaska Shootout, college basketball's premier early season tournament. When defending national champion Louisville and seven other powerful squads start shooting it out up North, upscale men everywhere will be rushing to ESPN for action they can't catch on the broadcast networks.
And these men know the real thing when they see it. For instance, ESPN's typical college basketball viewer buys 37% more imported cars, 36% more life insurance and does 44% more business travel than the national average.*
Without ESPN, your television budget is underdelivering these upscale men. Just 10% of your national TV budget allocated to ESPN will dramatically increase its effectiveness. You'll be reaching the men who spend and do more. And you'll be doing it at a much lower cost-per-thousand.
So give us a call at (212) 661-6040. You supply the message, we'll help you strike gold.

made sense for us to kick off the fall tour with the Kodak Invitational here in Rochester."

But while all seems right with the PBA, bowling in general continues to struggle to get its image out of the gutter. The National Bowling Council and its agency, Baltimore-based Eisner & Associates, have decided to attack the problem with national advertising. Although the council produced limited national campaigns in the past, some featuring spokeswoman Mary Lou Retton, the focus had been on spots for local proprietor use and promotional tie-ins with companies.

Now comes "Superbowlin' Saturday," supported by a $3.5 million national ad campaign. Breaking next month and starring Ms. Retton, the ads invite children ages 6 to 12 to bowl during three-hour supervised events staged on four successive Saturdays starting Oct. 11.

"It's the first time we're marketing the sport with long-term benefits in mind," Mr. Schoenberg says. "Just maybe it will get the kids interested in bowling and they will keep it up."

If successful, the council expects to double its ad spending in 1987, while targeting senior citizens. Other campaigns are in the works, but not everyone is convinced the council is properly positioning bowling.

George Allen, author of "Bowling Industry Trend Study," insists the sport needs a new image. "Whoever is setting the advertising and pr policy for the National Bowling Council should totally change it because [the policies] are the reason for the low image and low integrity of the game," he says in Bowlers Journal.

Mr. Allen points to the "Bring a blob bowling" campaign. "A blob. What the hell does that do to the image of bowling? The most recent [campaign] featured people who were bored to death wondering what to do when a bowling ball drops out of the air into their hands. The implication is, if you're bored to death, go bowling. But don't go if you've got anything worthwhile going," Mr. Allen says.

"I would change the whole thrust," he says. "I would look for social trends out there that bowling can appeal to. It offers a lot of things for a lot of people."

While bowling may be hitting strikes in the tv sales and sponsorship game, Mr. Allen says that at least in terms of image it needs to get more on the ball to knock down the Archie Bunker mentality.

Participation sport may be on a roll

In many metropolitan areas, the most familiar sign on bowling alleys is the one that reads "For sale or lease." Bowling centers seem to be closing their doors at a rapid clip.

Property values in many areas have risen dramatically, giving owners more reason to sell. And many older alleys have opted to close rather than remodel.

But at the same time, larger, modern centers are opening, balancing the losses. According to the American Bowling Congress, 10,883 centers operated 157,013 lanes in 1962. Today 8,148 centers operate 152,876 lanes—a mere 3% drop in lanes.

"It's starting to come back," says V.A. Wapensky, executive director, Bowling Proprietors Assn. of America. "The two things bowling needs now is more advertising and the modernization of centers."

Perhaps the most telling sign of bowling's health is Beaverton, Ore.-based Nike's entrance into the sport, having recently introduced its first line of bowling shoes, apparel and bags via print ads. "Bowling is something we just couldn't ignore anymore," spokeswoman Mary Marks says.

"We looked at different sports, and bowling showed the greatest potential. It's a $4 billion-a-year industry in the U.S. and it can grow."

Nike brings legitimacy to bowling, says Joe Schoenberg, Washington-based National Bowling Council's vp-marketing. "It's a promotion-minded company able to infuse cash into the sport."

If the company's move succeeds, others may follow. "I hope Nike throws in a ton of money to promote its products," says Clay Donner, manager-advertising sales/promotion, Brunswick, Muskegon, Mich. "It will help everybody by actively promoting the sport and improving its image, which is exactly what bowling needs."

Ahead of the competition. Out in front of the running movement. That's The Runner, where serious enthusiasts find the quality information that keeps them running fitter and faster.

The Runner leads in spotting new trends. First to promote low mileage training and life-long running. First to recognize and encourage "total fitness," now the standard approach to staying in shape.

Contributing editors such as Dr. George Sheehan, Frank Shorter, Bill Rodgers, Nancy Clark and Marty Liquori—plus many others with international reputations—are a big reason why The Runner is the most respected magazine among today's runners. When it comes to persuasive editorial, there's just no substitute for having the best writers in the field.

No wonder dedicated runners trust The Runner. And so do advertisers. In the past year's race for running-related advertising, The Runner beat the other running magazine hands down. 45% more running shoe ads...48% more running apparel ads...and a whopping 149% more fitness equipment ads.

Good reasons why your advertising should run with the winner.

first few days," he says. "Most problems did get resolved in time, but the fact of the matter is that we paid a not insignificant amount of money, but we had significant problems."

New York-based SIN Television Network, which broadcast all 52 final games in Spanish, sidestepped audio problems by announcing its play-by-play from San Antonio, Tex.

Like all those involved, however, Mr. Schanzer now points to the successes. "It was a very, very special event even though we were frustrated by production problems. We would have liked a better share for the final."

The final pulled a 4.1 rating, 13 share, putting the U.S. audience in the range of 6 million to 8 million households.

Because much of its audience is transplanted from countries playing in the finals, SIN delivered an audience of 2.7 million Hispanic households for the final, three times the amount estimated, says Mal Karwoski, director-sports publicity.

The same factor that helped SIN hurt NBC. "Without an American team included it was harder to sell to the American public," Mr. Schanzer says.

Despite the technical problems and the absence of a U.S. team, Gillette's Mr. Kalan says NBC shares the blame for the low rating. "NBC bought this thing and didn't know what to do with it. There was no promotion of the World Cup as an event."

Gillette and Italian sponsor Cinzano took advantage of the event by renting an Acapulco hotel for guests and shuttling them to Mexico City for the contests, a move that resulted in an unmatched customer relations coup, he says. "When you buy this kind of sponsorship, really all you're buying is an opportunity.... Now we can run promotions virtually anywhere around the world based on the World Cup."

Perhaps anywhere except the U.S., where interest in international soccer is comparatively low, although the National Sporting Goods Assn. reports more than 8 million Americans participate in the sport.

Regardless, the World Cup offers a chance for multinational corporations to highlight their international side every four years.

"Each of the World Cup sponsors has been given first option on 1990 [in Italy]," ISL's Mr. Breen says, "and it looks like they will all be back."

There are hints the U.S. will try to stage the 1994 tournament, although Brazil currently is the front-runner. None of the sponsoring U.S. companies admits to being part of such a push, but the U.S. Soccer Federation indicates the corporations will have a big part in helping the Federation Internationale de Football Assns., soccer's international governing body, decide where to place the event.

FIFA has called the U.S. a "sleeping giant" that could take soccer to higher levels—a goal increased corporate dollars would help it attain.

tions are racing toward sponsorship as another form of narrowcasting, says Steve Lesnik, president, Kemper Sports Management, Northbrook, Ill. Because the data are in on who watches and attends which sports, he says, it now is viewed as an effective way to target market.

As segmented marketing caught on, companies looked for less costly and more efficient alternatives to broadcast advertising. "The dollars that had been put into broadcasting are being put into sports, special-interest magazines, cable, special events," Mr. Lesnik says.

Mr. Wishner agrees, saying, "The growth is coming at the expense of traditional advertising," partly because companies discovered sports marketing can be used to foster corporate image.

But sponsorship is not about to sideline sports advertising, Mr. Benton says. The shift is from nonsport vehicles, he says, reiterating sponsorship is a good tool to target market segments in the face of rising national media costs. "It's a matter of taking a stronger commercial message to smaller audiences. A $500,000 investment in sports marketing buys a company a lot of visibility."

The press is packed with articles claiming sponsorship will usurp sports-related advertising. These opinions are out of bounds, according to Lesa Ukman, executive editor, "Special Events Report," Chicago. "Sponsorship is a drop in the bucket compared to advertising." Most companies advertise their sponsorship, so the boom in events generates more local ad revenues, she says.

Although tv is not down for a 10-count, the networks are aware of their competitor's clout. "Tv is coping by joining," Mr. Lesnik says. "Instead of saying, 'Oh no. That money has to go into a 30,' tv and agencies are looking at corporate sponsorship as a support activity rather than as something that siphons resources from advertising."

On-air presentations and sponsorship deals tied into time buys are becoming common. CBS now requires companies to pick up 25% of available time slots if they want to receive on-air credit as an event's sponsor.

"The networks are concentrating less on selling time and more on marketing involvement with sponsors," Mr. Osenton says. "They've made these moves for their own health," particularly as they tackle the problem of soft sports programing sales (AA, Aug. 4).

Teaming advertising and sponsorship allows companies to cover the bases. Event participation provides an opportunity for intensive on-site activities ranging from pr efforts, such as hospitality tents and VIP programs, to product sampling and research. "The overlay of paid advertising provides the broad-based coverage," Mr. Wishner says. "The question is whether companies will continue to be satisfied with having to buy ads in addition to sponsoring events."

Conjuring up creative programs for existing sporting events often garners more on-air coverage than an ad could supply, he says. Mr. Wishner's company designed a contest for

Ceo no longer writes the rules to game

Historically, sports sponsorship deals had all the sophistication of a slush fund. If the company chairman or president was an avid golfer, corporate dollars suddenly would be linked to golf tournaments, complete with a few private rounds between corporate hierarchy and top players.

"This was more of a factor when sports marketing was in the fun and games region," says Steve Lesnik, president of Northbrook, Ill.-based Kemper Sports Management. "But the field is far beyond that."

The money involved is pushing companies toward making more educated choices, says Howard Wishner, president, Wishner Communications, New York.

Although, "the guy sitting in the head office still has a lot to do with which sports the company becomes involved in," he says. This is not all bad because there's nothing like the chairman's presence at events for pr value.

Although more decisions are being made on the marketing level, the field will continue to suffer the "ceo syndrome," says Lesa Ukman, executive editor of Chicago-based "Special Events Report." "Events are too sexy. Everyone from the top on down wants to get involved."

Purolator Courier Corp. that recognized the fastest pit crew during the Indy 500. "It added a new segment to the coverage, and the media is always looking for a new angle on an old event."

Other winners are the sports themselves, which had knocked network rights fees out of the ballpark. ABC recently reported its about $560 million 1984 to 1989 Major League Baseball contract would result in million-dollar losses annually, and the network pushed for renegotiation. "With tv revenues flat and the size of the gate and concession limited," Mr. Osenton says, "the natural option was corporate involvement."

The increased involvement has generated its own set of problems, the main one being clutter. "It's as hard to stand out in sports marketing as it is in advertising," Mr. Benton says.

The solution is to become sole sponsor of an event and heighten corporate-sport association, observers say. This means jumping into new sports or events, because the cost of sponsoring pro sports is as high as ad rates, Ms. Ukman says.

The public's fickle fascination with specific sports makes sole sponsorship a bit of a gamble, particularly when long-term continuity is the way to cement the corporate-sport association factor. "What's hot and what's not changes from year to year," Mr. Benton says.

Marathons, once a hot ticket, are common. Sources say sports to watch in terms of sponsorship are road rallies, triathlons, dogsled racing, mountaineering, orienteering, boardsailing, cycling, yachting and volleyball.

Not surprisingly, the No. 1 criterion is to go out for a sport that complements other marketing activities or fits the corporate personality. "Otherwise the credibility factor goes out the window," Mr. Lesnik says.

Increasingly, sponsorship activities are defining corporate personality. Two French boardsailors recently landed on a Florida beach, having crossed the Atlantic Ocean under Timex Corp.'s sponsorship, "a perfect example of how a company can change its image with an event," Mr. Benton says. Boardsailing was not only cost efficient, he says, but glamorous. "Consumers might expect Swatch to do something like this; it generated excitement for Timex."

Image-altering types of involvement obviously carry greater risks. But even the outcome of the most well conceived sponsorship cannot be guaranteed. "It might rain or there could be a major scandal involving the sport at the last minute," Ms. Ukman says.

The very things that make them attractive to sponsors—visibility, spontaneity, life-style imagery—make them perilous ventures, she says.

Predicting a shakeout in sponsorship action, Mr. Lesnik says, "People who aren't doing it for sound reasons will drop out."

Although not always a hit, sports sponsorship can be a critical addition to marketing plans. "It can be the cheapest and most visible form of sales promotion," Ms. Ukman says, which explains why more companies are taking their turn at bat.

Corporations and sports share goals

Sports involve conflict. But conflict of interest is a relatively new addition to the sports arena. As sponsorship becomes more critical in determining whether a sport lives to run another day, the corporate-sport relationship borders on being incestuous.

"Sports are hypocritical," says Lesa Ukman, executive editor of Chicago-based "Special Events Report." "The federations control most of the amateur sports, and there is some controversy as to whether they are doing what is good for the sport vs. what is good for the sponsor."

The two goals need not be opposing. Without sponsors, many amateur sports would be left in the dust, she says.

The sponsorship tie-in doesn't break any rules, says Ray Benton, president of Washington-based ProServ, as long as it doesn't break the rules. "Short of changing the rules, it does not destroy the integrity of a sport if it is called the Volvo Tennis Tournament or if a player wears a patch with Avis on it."

Sports have been a form of recreation and entertainment, he says, now it's a form of marketing with corporate sponsorship as an integral part of its economic base.

Businesses wo't tinker too much with a sport's anatomy. Interfering with a sport's substance would only alienate the people the company was trying to reach, Ms. Ukman says.

The issue may abate as the number of events relying on corporate dollars increases. "The number of events is growing," says Tom Osenton, associate publisher, Sports Marketing News, Westport, Conn., "but so is the number of events owned. Soon all college bowl games will have title sponsors, for example."

The whole situation could turn into a vicious circle, however. The proliferation of events is being paced by a larger pot of dollars. "But that pot is limited," he says, "so there will be competition among sports for a piece of that pot." As the dollars dwindle, it will be interesting to see how far some sports will let their sponsors determine the rules of the game.

—Ed Fitch

Methods of keeping score for advertisers

In sports marketing, it's not so much how you play the game, but whether you win or lose. The trouble is, companies don't have a handy score card to measure the outcome. "It is as sophisticated as the so-called measured media and uses the same methods: The number of impressions vs. the cost of generating those impressions," says Ray Benton, president of Washington-based ProServ.

Measuring impact is still very visceral, agrees Lesa Ukman, executive editor of Chicago-based "Special Events Report." Companies are not demanding much research anyway, she says. "If you have 150,000 people at an event and the corporate name on a banner, you don't need to spend money on research to determine if the sponsorship was effective."

It is naive to judge an event's success by comparing media exposure to the cost of placing a spot, Ms. Ukman says. "You can't say the fact that a corporate name appears 20 times has the same amount of effectiveness as a tv commercial because you can't control the message the way you do in a tv spot."

Sports sponsorship carries a better message because it is nonpaid promotion, says Steve Lesnik, president, Kemper Sports Management, Northbrook, Ill. "Commercials do sell soap, but the public feels nonpaid forms of product promotion are more credible." Although sponsorship used to be evaluated on the same terms as advertising, he says, "now it's a combination of advertising, pr, quantitative data and gut feeling."

An accepted means of measuring effectiveness will have to be developed to prove event marketing's clout and keep it from being one of the first areas trimmed from budgets, Ms. Ukman says. "The way to prevent this is to make it self-liquidating," selling products at an event or having a financial stake where a percentage of the revenue generated is kicked back to the sponsor. "The best judge is a combination of the number of people reached on-site and the amount of the cost that is self-liquidated."

Ms. Ukman suggests it is irrelevant who is reached on-site. "At a Virginia Slims tournament, for example, it's not important to reach the 2,000 people attending the event." But it is essential the public associate the company with the event, she says.

The balance sheet is the best score card, says Mr. Benton. "Volvo has found the number of cars sold goes up after an event, and the people at Virginia Slims have long maintained sales increase after an event."

Advertisers cut spending pace

The nation's top 100 advertisers slowed their spending in 1985 to $26.67 billion, up only 2.7% from a restated $25.97 billion in 1984, according to Advertising Age's 31st annual 100 leading national advertisers report.

The small gain returns the top 100 to the single-digit growth rates of the late '60s and early '70s when the U.S. economy was experiencing slow growth, a condition reflecting today's market. Media, taking a cue from the national economy, have held the lid on rate increases without experiencing pain because of low inflation.

Advertisers became preoccupied with the economic downturn, fighting tender offers, restructuring business lines to become less cyclical in nature, while searching for means to attain greater ad economies.

Gone were the big percentage gains in ad spending by medium. Network tv, the big-ticket item for the top advertisers, dropped to $6.34 billion, a 2.6% decline from the year earlier. Network tv still accounted for 43.4% of the $14.57 billion spent by the top 100 in 11 measured media categories, up 4.4% from 1984.

A big dynamic in the market that probably led to less efficient advertising in 1985 and early 1986 was the impact of the consolidation among both the media companies and leading advertising agencies, where the buyout fever was just as strong as among leading marketers. The trend led to countless account conflicts as advertisers changed agencies in midstream.

Still commanding the top rung among spenders was perennial leader Procter & Gamble with estimated ad spending of $1.6 billion, up 9.6% from a restated $1.46 billion in 1984. P&G faced a strong challenge from No. 2 Philip Morris Cos. with $1.4 billion, up 4.9% from a restated $1.34 billion in 1984. RJR/Nabisco, No. 3, had spent $1.09 billion, down 8% from restated $1.18 billion in 1984.

Events and issues facing the big three advertisers were symbolic of currents that ran deep into the top 100, leaving few untouched. Primary among those issues were the need to continue momentum and to grow in a stagnant economy. Acquisitions were the answer.

P&G bought Richardson-Vicks, gaining a foothold in pharmaceuticals to add to its dentifrice, detergents and diapers segments. Continuing their diversification, Philip Morris bought General Foods and R.J. Reynolds Industries acquired Nabisco Brands. Each partner acquired was among the top 100 national advertisers in the 1984 report.

These acquisitions and others throughout the top 100 list encouraged Ad Age to reestimate ad spending levels for 1984 to reflect a historic reading of the companies as they currently are assembled. In several cases, estimates have been recalculated for advertisers to reflect new knowledge about their spending in unmeasured media—promotion and special events, couponing, sampling, trade incentives, co-op, newspaper inserts and so on.

Selloffs occurred for various reasons, but centered on growth—divesting unprofitable businesses or selling assets to retire debt incurred in a buyout. Corporate restructuring, often a statement of the economy and a company's ability to compete, promoted a number of divestitures.

Restructuring, which forced marketers to look more closely at growth margins, meant the search was on to hold down expenses. This not only translated into major layoffs at leading advertisers, like No. 39 CBS and No. 98 Cap Cities/ABC, and streamlining of the executive suites, but also fine tuning of the advertising budget. This often led to shifting to less expensive forms of media, moving media planning and buying in-house, and increasing the use of below-the-line advertising, merchandising and promotions that cost less than media.

RJR/Nabisco Broadcast was formed to handle network broadcast media buying at RJR, which already handled print and outdoor buying in-house. Joseph E. Seagrams & Sons, No. 76, formed House of Seagram Media to handle buying of magazines, newspapers and outdoor. Busch Media Group was formed to oversee the purchase of national network tv and radio for all brands at Anheuser-Busch, No. 10.

General Motors, No. 5, took GM divisional advertising and media negotiation in-house to improve its bargaining clout. It left the actual media purchase to the ad agencies representing the divisions. Before forming this unit, GM squeezed additional efficiency out of ad dollars by reducing agency commissions to 13%, but it had mixed results when it sought special preference from magazines.

The megamergers among ad agencies caused their clients to shuffle their agency decks by firing their agencies because of "account conflict." Particularly affected were agencies that merged into Omnicom (BBDO, Doyle Dane Bernbach and Needham Harper Worldwide) and into Saatchi & Saatchi plc.

In the ad media mix, network tv's 2.6% dollar decline from 1984 among the 100 bore the brunt of change. The medium is virtually at the mercy of spending trends set by the 100, which in 1985 represented 76.2% of the spending in that medium.

The networks showed the effects, registering their first aggregate slip in sales since cigaret spots were banned. CBS and ABC networks took it on the chin as NBC surged to No. 1 in prime time. CBS was preoccupied with unfriendly suitors, though managed to emerge intact but scathed. To recoup its losses, the company bought blocks of stock to thwart takeover attempts and adopted cost-cutting measures that included sizable layoffs at the executive level. ABC did its own belt-tightening by thinning out the job redundancies created by its merger with Capital Cities Communications.

NBC's ratings success made it the one exception to negative growth among networks. But even NBC was the subject of a buyout in June, 1986, when No. 24 General Electric took over its parent, RCA Corp.

Although network tv continues to struggle, in early 1986 it was beginning to build back its lost revenues, and the other media were meeting with similar growth. Total measured advertising on the medium in the first quarter of 1986 was $2.04 billion, up 4% over first-quarter levels in 1985.

Spot tv was the major dollar volume benefactor among the top 100, which spent $3.07 billion in 1985, up 9.5% from 1984 when spot tv rose 8.5% from 1983. Advertising in spot tv in the first quarter of 1986 of $1.57 billion for all advertisers represented an 11% growth over the comparable quarter in 1985.

Network radio, relatively inexpensive, was the big media percentage gainer, rising 77.3% to $272 million among the top 100, which account for 61.4% of all network radio spending. Network radio continued to grow, rising 35% in the first quarter of 1986 over the similar period in 1985. Magazine advertising among the 100 grew 6.4% to $2.38 billion. Magazine advertising is up 6.8% in the first quarter over the corresponding period in 1985.

Apple Computer, which dropped network tv spending from $42.7 million to $25.8 million, let others in on its strategy in a reportedly "fictitious" memo printed as artwork in its annual report: "Reduce expensive network tv advertising; increase less expensive and more targeted advertising, such as radio and local newspapers; support dealer advertising aimed at increasing store traffic."

The 1986 first-quarter revival is being stimulated by more new product introductions than ever. The number increased 14.5% over the corresponding period in 1985 when new product entries hit an all-time high, according to "New Product News" publication produced by Dancer Fitzgerald Sample, New York.

Static media spending during 1985 reflects in part the maturation of a number of brands. When this occurs, the need to boost about product attributes with trade media dollars is minimized, and monies begin to flow into lower cost nonmedia promotions such as incentives and coupons. This kind of unmeasured advertising rose to $12.09 billion, up a marginal 0.7%.

A number of brands did get new life by finding new "authoritative" selling pegs: Alka-Seltzer and Bayer aspirin got mileage out of a Food & Drug Administration ruling that aspirin, a major ingredient in Alka-Seltzer, was effective in preventing heart attacks; No. 25 Kellogg's All Bran played up the National Cancer Institute's endorsement of a high fiber diet as a cancer preventative.

Brand advertising surged in several hot categories. While total beer, wine and liquor advertising was up a meager 1.3% in measured advertising spending in 1985, it was up a composite 3.9% for the six companies among the top 100 in that classification. Cause for much of the budget expansion among the top 100 was the hotly contested wine cooler market.

Brown-Forman Co., No. 87, purchased 1985 market leader California Cooler, backing it with $11.7 million in measured spending. While thriving, it has since lost its market lead to to E.&J. Gallo Winery's Bartles & Jaymes, boosted by $17.2 million in only a half year on the market in 1985. Seagram launched a liquor-based cooler, adding peach and citrus flavors this June in a $10 million campaign. Stroh Brewery Co., No. 74, tested White Mountain, a malt cooler, and went national in four months.

Anheuser-Busch, No. 10, seemed to step to a different drummer in the category by launching a poorly received champagne-based cooler called Baybry's and then coming out in June, 1986, with Dewey Stevens Premium Light, a light cooler. The fuss on the wine cooler side was balanced by lower wine case sales among the major producers. Market leader Gallo, for example, dropped 6.1% in liter cases in 1985.

On the volume side, the only two brewers in the top tier to expand their market share in 1985 were Anheuser-Busch and No. 83 Adolph Coors Co. Growth among brewers came in the price beer segment, the rung just below the popularly priced category.

Comparative advertising reached new heights among airlines, particularly No. 91 Eastern Air Lines, whose bid to be bought out by Texas Air Corp. was nixed temporarily by the government. It did takeoffs on No. 88 Delta Air Lines slogan ("Delta gets you there") with "Eastern gets you there for a whole lot less." It jabbed at People's "Fly smart" slogan by captioning Eastern's ads, "Fly smarter."

Auto marketers claimed superiority over their named competitors and tried to lowball the other with better finance charges—a tactic that left many of the major companies with strong sales and negative earnings. No. 5 General Motors late this August offered a 2.9% annual interest rate charge designed to sweep clean its inventory of 1986 models. Chrysler, No. 22, and Ford, No. 7, joined in, while continuing to bicker about who was and is the best pickup truck producer.

Calcium cropped up in everything from supplements to food products. General Mills, No. 14, added calcium to its Gold Medal flour; No. 21 American Home Products introduced Posture, and No. 18 Warner-Lambert launched Suplical and Theracal in the calcium supplement market.

Milk and milk products were in, attested by the inclusion this year of the American Dairy Assn., No. 69, as a top 100 advertiser. The ADA says milk consumption in 1984 and 1985 grew by 3.3% and 3.6%, respectively. Previously, there had been only two years between 1950 and 1984 in which market consumption eked out a 3% gain.

The over-the-counter analgesics market is passing through the darkest moment in that category's history with more deaths attributed to tampering episodes involving No. 20 Johnson & Johnson's Tylenol and No. 26 Bristol-Myers' Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules. Both companies withdrew their capsules from the market and reentered with caplets. Big stories are just unfolding for 1986: Marketers with FDA backing are unleashing a host of preascription drugs onto the otc market; the expiration of the ibuprofen patent is encouraging new market entries that should help build the segment from 9% to 15% of the market by yearend.

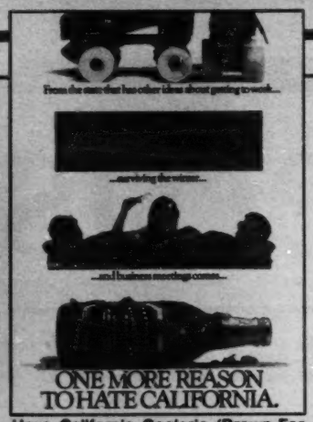
Cigaret marketers borrowed a page from the brewers in appealing to the consumer masses in directing products at the price-conscious. The big gainers were generic and price/value cigarets —the 25-cigaret packs for the price of a 20-piece pack. Among the top 10 cigaret brands in 1985, only No. 54 Loews' Newport from its Lorillard division and Philip Morris' Marlboro increased in volume.

In food marketing, "lite" is right, witnesses the labels for No. 32 Heinz ketchup and french fries from its Ore-Ida subsidiary, No. 38 Campbell Soup Co.'s reformulated Swanson tv dinners and No. 70 CPC International's Hellmann's and Best mayonnaises. Fiber also is in vogue, from No. 48 Schering-Plough's diet and weight control Fibre-Trim import from Denmark to Kellogg's All Bran with extra fiber.

Convenience has not left the food market, but it has caused major marketers to reconstitute major lines. In a single category—muffins—Sara Lee, No. 29, is going national this month with a frozen convenience food, Sara Lee Hearty Fruit muffins. P&G reportedly is deemphasizing its Duncan Hines cake mixes to concentrate on brownies and muffins. This pits P&G and Sara Lee head-on with General Mills' Betty Crocker, who got a new look in 1985, perhaps more symbolic of the board room than the kitchen.

In personal care products, No. 42 Beecham thrilled the '50s generation by reviving the old Brylcreem tag: "A little dab'll do ya" for a mousse Brylcreem; No. 16 PepsiCo again signed Michael Jackson to promote Pepsi—although the contract says he is not required to touch a Pepsi can—and advertisers covered the airwaves with Mary Lou Retton for No. 9 McDonald's Corp., Mary Lou Retton for Eveready (now with No. 12 Ralston Purina), and Mary Lou Retton for Mattel, No. 93.#

Chevrolet led auto marketers in appealing to the "emerging" women buyer, only a year after Ford upset focus groups with its infamous (as far as women are concerned) "pink truck" ad.



Have California Cooler's (Brown-Forman) beachy and hot tub ad renderings helped heat up the competition for the wine cooler market, now led by meteoric Bartles & Jaymes, promoted with the most down-home style imaginable?

Canon entered the 8mm camcorder vcr sector, and with Sony, Kodak (Matsushita-made), and Polaroid (Toshiba-made) reached a 5% to 10% share of market. Paramount enhanced the 8mm rush by creating video for Sony.

Mickey D's is the place to be among blacks, says the jive from McDonald's ad copy. Soul singers Jerry "Iceman" Butler and Aretha Franklin also appeared in McD.L.T. spots by Mickey D's black consumer agency, Burrell Advertising.

"Ok, as long as you stay in the neighborhood."
His Dad suggested,
"Go someplace where you'll feel welcome and comfortable."
His wallet pleaded, "Take it easy man, easy."
He smoothly stated,
"And after the movie, we'll go to Mickey D's."
IT'S A GOOD TIME FOR THE GREAT TASTE

Caffeine Free diet Coke's market share rose to 1.1% in 1985 as cases increased to 80 million, up 23.1% from 1984. Coca-Cola's share of the diet soft drink sector looks to be infused with the kryponite this ad suggests is not present in Coke. All Coca-Cola diet soft drinks accounted for 44.1% of the diet category, up from 43.5% in 1984. During 1985, the industrywide diet category accounted for 21.6% of the total market, up from 19.8%, according to analyst John C. Maxwell Jr.

The consumer is calorie-conscious, cholesterol-shunning, right. Maybe so, but the consumer now seeks out calcium in everything from General Mills Gold Medal flour (recently fortified with calcium), American Home Products' Posture additive, and just plain milk. Milk (read: Calcium) got its big boost in 1983 when Congress approved a levy for milk promotion to be administered by a number of associations under the American Dairy Assn. auspices.

Comparative ads proliferate in the analgesics market, ranging from this "Two little Nuprin (Bristol-Myers) can stop headaches better than Extra Strength Tylenol (Johnson & Johnson)" to Bayer's (Sterling Drug) "desert island" claims. Nuprin and Advil (American Home Products) are fueling the ibuprofen surge in analgesic market which grew to 9% of market in 1985, up from 3%, and could reach 15% this year as a host of other ibuprofen entries join the market.

American Brands experienced a positive turnaround in sales from its cigaret and cigar divisions in 1985, but despite the improvement, the divisions suffered an across-the-board decline in market share among lead brands—Pall Mall, Tareyton and Carlton.

American Brands seems tied to the annual performance of its tobacco divisions, which in 1985 grew 3.8% in sales, helping push over-all sales up 4.5%. This compares with a 4.3% drop in cigaret and cigar sales in 1984 and an over-all drop of 1.4% for the parent company.

The divisions had combined sales accounting for 60% of total company sales, and drew 58% of all measured media ad spending at American Brands.

American Tobacco Co., incorporated as a separate operating subsidiary in January, saw its share of the total cigaret market decrease in 1985 from 7.9 to 7.4, with its largest seller, Pall Mall, recording a 3.5 market share, down from 3.8 in 1984.

Pall Mall, the seventh best-selling cigaret in the country, is the industry leader in the nonfilter cigaret market, and American Brands spent less than $100,000 in measured advertising on the brand.

The Pall Mall brand family began receiving more substantial ad support in 1986 with the national rollout of Pall Mall 25s, a full-per-unit-priced convenience packaging.

American Tobacco's Carlton family, which now includes 11 products, was expanded in 1985 with the addition of Carlton Menthol 100's box. AB spent $24 million on the Carlton brands in the seven media measured by Leading National Advertisers last year, nearly 41% of all the money it spent in measured media.

American Tobacco spent more than $7 million on its Lucky Strike brand, a brand family that, although steeped in tradition, has presented the best growth opportunity for AT in Lucky low-tar filters and Lucky Lights, mid and low-tar entries. The Lucky filters line is backed by the sometimes controversial yet well noted "Light My Lucky" campaign. The two brand styles posted a whopping 41.2% unit sales increase and moved to a 0.4% market share, slightly below the 0.5% considered to be the breaking point for a sustainable cigaret brand, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., tobacco analyst for Furman Selz Dietz Mager & Birney, New York.

The company's Tareyton brand continued its long-term sales decline and ended 1985 with an 8.7% drop in volume. At yearend, the brand held a 1% share of market, according to Mr. Maxwell.

American Brands' other tobacco division, American Cigar Co., rolled out several new products in 1985, including American Sweets, a moderate-priced, full-bodied cigar. American Sweets is American Cigar's first entry into this popular cigar category. The new product has a suggested retail price of 60¢ for a package of five.

The leading national advertisers spent $26.67 billion in total advertising in 1985, up from a restated $25.97 billion in 1984. Spending broke out into $14.57 billion, up about 4%, in 11 measured media, representing about 53% of all national expenditures in those media, and $12.1 billion in unmeasured advertising, up 0.7%.

Cigars in the five-for-60¢ category account for more than 45% of U.S. cigar sales. Trade promotion and consumer sampling for American Sweets is being handled by SSC&B, which handles American Brands' other cigars, as well as Pall Mall and Tareyton cigarets. American Cigar also introduced Whiffs Tip cigars, an extension of its La Corona Whiffs brand. SSC&B is handling the limited advertising.

However, American Brands in July, 1986, sold American Tobacco to Mac Andrews & Forbes, Camden, N.J. That divestiture will affect the third quarter, 1986, results. American Brands will take a one-time $100 million, after-tax writeoff in the quarter to reflect charges in connection with the sale. The writeoff also involves expenses related to the closing of Durham, N.C., and Richmond, Va., plants.

American Brands has closed its 100-year-old cigaret making plant in Durham and moved production to a new high speed facility in Reidsville, N.C., about 45 miles away. Many of the 1,000 employed in the Durham facility were transfered to Reidsville. The company's Stemming facility in Richmond, Va., will be closed during the first quarter of 1987.

American Brands for the first half, 1986, reported net income of $216 million, up 11.3% from the same six-month period in 1985, on record sales of $4 billion, up 17.7%. Operating income for the same period was $477 million in 1986, up 45.2% from 1986. American Brands traditionally generates about half of its operating profit from cigarets.

AB's distilled beverage division, James B. Beam Distilling Co., increased its sales over last year by only 1.6%. This compares with a 2.2% increase in sales in 1984. The company's flagship brand, Jim Beam bourbon, remained the best-selling bourbon in the country, despite an industrywide decline in bourbon sales.

Beam must still contend with the macho image that many consumers associate with its bourbon and that company executives would like to escape. To change its image, Beam spent nearly $3 million in measured media advertising that tries to depict the bourbon as a more youthful brand.

Beam made an unusual move in 1985 when it introduced nationally Jim Beam ZZZingers, which mix Beam bourbon in a can with cola, ginger ale and lemon-lime soda. Beam spent $250,000 on the new product line, which is being handled by Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, Chicago. Beam also entered the flavored schnapps market in 1985, with the introduction of Baron Von Scheuters line.

Despite a 2.6% increase in sales for American Brands' food products division, the division ended the year with a slight decline in operating profits. Sunshine Biscuits Inc., which accounts for the largest portion of sales in the division, completed the national rollout of its Sunshine American Heritage line of snack crackers.

In 1985, Sunshine entered the declining soft cookie market, dominated by Nabisco Brands, Keebler and Duncan Hines, with its new Chippy Chews, a soft chocolate chip cookie available in fudge, peanut butter, butterscotch and raisin flavors. Despite company boasts of "excellent consumer and trade support," Sunshine picked up less than 1% of the chewy cookie market last year.

Other products made by Sunshine are Fig Chewies, Krispy Saltine crackers, Hydrox cookies, Vienna Fingers cookies and Cheez-It crackers. Sunshine spent slightly more than $2.5 million in measured media, all in spot tv, for its cookie and cracker products.

Andrew Jergens Co., AB's personal care products division, spent $7.8 million in measured advertising in 1985, more than half of that on spot tv. This contributed to the parent company's growth in spot tv spending from only $804,000 in 1984 to $6.9 million in 1985.

Sales of Jergens products rose 10% to $147.1 million paced by Jergen's liquid soap, currently in third place in that growing category, with a 9.8% share, behind market leading Minnetonka and Procter & Gamble's Ivory. Minnetonka created the category in 1980.

In the hand-and-body moisturizer category, Jergens is No. 2 with a market share of 11%, behind Chesebrough-Pond's Vaseline Intensive Care, which commands a 19% share of the market.

American Brands' hardware and security division, which consists of Master Lock Co., Pinkerton's Inc., Prestige Group of Gallaher, MCM Products and a portion of Swingline Inc., had increased sales of 8.8% over the previous year. This represents the highest increase among all AB divisions. Master Lock spent $1.3 million in measured advertising, slightly greater than in 1984. Master Lock manufactures 250 padlock products.

Consolidated Apex Systems is ranked 51st among the 100 Leading National Advertisers picked by Ad Age in this issue and based on total U.S. advertising spending in 1985, which is reported in this box either under Worldwide or U.S. bold headings.

Consolidated Apex Systems is based in Garden State Estates, N.J.

CAS reports on a calendar basis like most of the top 100. However, should a company report on a fiscal basis, the years heading the column would read, 1986 and 1985, if the fiscal year closing date occurs before this issue was published.

The advertising figure is a composite of CAS's media spending, both measured and unmeasured, contained in the tabular breakout at the end of the text in each profile. See "Where Ad Age got its data" on Page 16 for an explanation of the the tabular breakout.

Division sales are the business segments as defined by CAS and their sales for comparable years. However, should CAS have too many divisions to fit into the box, the editors combined those segments into "other." In this case, CAS segments for its specialty meats and chicken broiler production—both providing minor contributions to its strong industrial base—were merged into "other."

American Cyanamid's main emphasis in 1985 was the march toward restructuring that is taking it from bulk chemicals and fertilizers and other commodity businesses toward higher technology areas and more consumer products.

The metamorphosis is beginning. Gone is the Formica, the titanium dioxide and phosphates. In are the high-tech surgical instruments, solar cells and consumer products like Combat roach control.

In 1985 the company sold its Formica decorative laminate business (except for small operations mostly in Latin America) for $200 million to a new organization formed by members of Formica management and Shearson Lehman/American Express. The titanium dioxide business went for $5.5 million. American Cyanamid is discontinuing the mining of phosphates, a fertilizer ingredient, at its Brewster, Fla., site.

In this drive for restructuring, American Cyanamid is like any number of other U.S. companies—Union Carbide Corp., Dow Chemical Co. and Black & Decker Corp.—reshaping themselves, whether it be to cool down the hot boiler of production closer to tepid consumer demand, to fend off takeovers or to cope with the strong dollar, foreign trade imbalance and sluggish or cyclical market for unbranded bulk commodity product.

No subtleties underlie the moves toward corporate remodeling. Earnings in 1985 dropped 40.2% as sales rose only 0.4% for the year. Only Shulton, the consumer products division, showed gains in both sales (up 2%) and operating income (up 0.8%), the latter representing $25.7 million out of a total operating income of $251.5 million. The only other segment in the plus column in either category was the big medical group. Its sales were up 10.3%, although operating income was down 6.9% to $145.1 million.

The outlook, however, was brighter for the first half of 1986. Sales were up 39% over the comparable period the prior year, to $1.27 billion. Net income for the first half rose 41%, to $105.6 million.

For 1985, the agricultural and chemical segments were both down in sales, 3.8% and 7.1%, respectively, and down in operating income, 34.6% and 53.4%. An American Cyanamid spokesperson listed the litany of reasons earnings fell: "Our agricultural group sales and earnings were down especially because foreign exchange—the strong dollar—hurt throughout the year. Medical group earnings were down because of cost containment in hospitals. The agricultural group also suffered from higher manufacturing expenses, largely because of the increasing cost of natural gas used in fertilizer production.

American Cyanamid's response in measured media advertising spending for 1985 varied among its business groups. Agricultural spending for its herbicides and insecticides, such as Prowl and Thimet, was up 37%, to $6.6 million in 1985. Medical Group spending for Lederle Laboratories' Centrum and Stresstabs vitamins and Caltrate calcium supplement dropped 38%, to about $12.1 million. The Shulton Group, with the bulk of American Cyanamid's consumer products, slipped a bit to total ad spending of $39.5 million in 1985 from $40 million.

Creativity in American Cyanamid's advertising and promotion knew no bounds. The company's new Combat roach control system was brought to the war against possible cockroaches in the U.S. Capitol.

Combat also appeared in an ad series called "Intimacies," which also promoted Pine Sol cleaners, Old Spice toiletries and Centrum multivitamins. Each 30-second product message was introduced by a 60-second slice of life monolog. Sister Arts, New York, prepared the 24 monologs.

Spending to support Caltrate, the calcium supplement recently introduced by Lederle Laboratories, was off about 11% in 1985, to $5.4 million. In the new calcium supplement market, estimated at about $125 million, Caltrate is ranked the second largest seller, behind Marion Laboratories' Os-Cal brand. Its agency, Carrafiello Diehl & Associates, Irvington-on-Hudson, N.Y., put more weight in magazines for Caltrate in 1985, spending more than $2 million in print compared with $1.4 million in 1984. Network tv was $3.06 million in 1985, down from $4.1 million.

Other Lederle spending also was down for 1985, with Centrum vitamins falling 42% to $6.2 million. And at $484,000, Stresstab 600 spending, all of it in magazines, was less than one-fourth of the previous year's $2.3 million expenditure.

By contrast, Shulton Group nearly tripled spending for Breck hair products, almost all of it for new Breck styling mousse, rising to $3.6 million from $1.2 million in 1984. Two-thirds was in network tv and much of the remainder in magazines.

Shulton also has introduced three line extensions of its patented insect bait tray product, the Combat roach control system; the Combat ant control system, Combat large roach control system and Combat fire ant killer.

The Combat entries received $2.9 million for their battle in the ant-and-roach-killer market, reportedly near $640 million annually, most of it aerosol sprays. S.C. Johnson's Raid holds an estimated 50% share of the market (including a 10% share for Raid Fogger and 9% for Raid Ant and Roach Killer), American Home Products' Black Flag's Roach Ender roach spray holds a 20% share, Sterling Drug's d-Con, 20%, and Combat, 3.4%.

The eight lines of Old Spice brand of men's toiletries received $13.4 million in measured spending, down 15%. As in 1984, preference was given to network tv, where spending totaled $6.5 million, compared with $4.3 million for spot tv. But in 1984 the preponderance for network was much greater, reaching $11.7 million compared with $3.9 million for spot.

Another big piece of the Shulton Group, Pine Sol cleaners, was almost even in measured ad spending—nearly $9 million in 1985 vs. $9.7 million in 1984. Among its competitors in the $200 million pine oil cleaner segment of the surface cleaning industry, Pine Sol ranks fourth, with 14% market share. Procter & Gamble's Mr. Clean and Spic 'n Span Pine have 21% and 20%, respectively, and Sterling Drug's Lysol, 20%. Almost all of the Pine Sol spending in 1985 was for tv—$5.6 million for network and $3.1 million for spot.

Gone from the Shulton Group is the Ultra Swim line of soap, shampoo and conditioner for which Shulton had obtained the license in 1984 from the Eljenn Co., Newton, Mass. Shulton found demand for the products, formulated just for pool swimmers, too narrow and gave up the license, which since has been acquired by Chattem Co., Chattanooga, Tenn. Shulton's 1984 ad spending of $1.2 million for Ultra Swim dropped to only $103,100 in 1985.

In its allocation of spending by medium in 1985, American Cyanamid had increases in all but network tv, which fell 33%, to $28.4 million. The biggest percentage increases were for radio, where spot radio rose 54%, and network radio, also up 54%.

In moving toward specialty types of business and products, American Cyanamid is looking for growth to both its internal operations and to acquisitions that rely on research and development.

American Cyanamid operates 12 research laboratories worldwide and in 1985 spent about $251 million for "research and process development," up 8%. Other recent moves show American Cyanamid's emphasis on research and development to shape its future.

Already a supplier of nutritional and health preparations to animal husbandry, the company in 1985 acquired 49.9% of the stock in Langford Laboratories, Canada's only maker of veterinary biologicals. Early in 1986 the company formed the Venture Chemical Division in its Chemicals Group with the goal of developing new product areas for American Cyanamid in chemistry.

One of the first steps taken by Venture Division was to acquire Applied Solar Energy Co., City of Industry, Cal. Applied Solar makes solar cells for use by the National Aeronautics & Space Administration and the aerospace industry to supplement other power sources.

The Medical Group, too, is looking for expansion into basically three areas, orthopedic, ophthalmic and cardiovascular. So far in 1986, two companies have been acquired for the medical segment: Acufex Microsurgical, Norwood, Mass., which makes arthroscopic surgical devices for joint repairs, and Storz Instrument Co., St. Louis, also a maker of surgical equipment.

In 1985 agency changes, the account for Scepter, Aastar and Thimet agricultural chemicals, reportedly worth $4.5 million, went to Miller Meester Advertising, Bloomington, Minn. The Thimet advertising left Tucker Wayne Co., Atlanta, but American Cyanamid's newly developed Assert herbicide for wild oats was placed with that agency. U.S. approval for European-tested Assert is expected by 1987. The $2.5 million budget for Niki De Saint Phalle fragrances, from the Jacqueline Cochran division of the Shulton Group, left Peter Rogers Associates, New York. No replacement has been named.

During 1985, Robert Hiatt, formerly president of Kentucky Fried Chicken's international division, joined the Shulton Group as group vp with international responsibility. Iain A. Forsythe became president of Jacqueline Cochran, moving over from Shulton's British and Asian operations where he was chairman-managing director.

American Cyanamid, the subject of government investigations and pressures on waste spills, water pollution and alleged emissions at plant sites in New Jersey and Connecticut, spent about $67 million for pollution control, and in 1986 plans $25 million more in pollution-control expenditures.

The new-found advertising dollars —a 258% increase from 1984 to 1985 —for the American Dairy Assn. are an example of how legislative fiat can energize an industry.

The bigger budget for the ADA resulted from lobbying by the nation's steadily slumping dairy farmers that produced the Dairy & Tobacco Adjustment Act of 1983, which authorizes a national program of dairy promotion, research and nutrition education paid for by a mandatory assessment of 15¢ per hundredweight on milk produced by dairy farmers.

Administering this program is the National Dairy Promotion & Research Board, consisting of 36 dairy farmers selected by the U.S. secretary of agriculture from nominees submitted by dairy producer organizations across the country.

Of the 15¢, up to 10¢ can go to local and regional dairy councils or other bodies for dairy-product promotion and education; 5¢ can be used by the national board.

For the promotion of dairy products in 1985 and through August, 1986, this meant the influx of an additional $68 million to advertise milk, cheese, butter and ice cream. These funds were contributed to the ADA by the Dairy Promotion Federation Assn. and the NDPRB; all three joined in coordinating the big promo nationally. The ADA and its principal agency, D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Chicago, planned and bought the media.

The American Dairy Assn. is the marketing/advertising arm of the United Dairy Industry Assn., Rosemont, Ill., a dairy industry umbrella organization to promote the consumption of dairy foods. The other two main areas are Dairy Research Inc., or DRINC, which sponsors research and development of new dairy technologies, and the National Dairy Council, which provides education, encourages and administers nutrition research in scientific, medical, dental institutions and universities to promote dairy product use.

UDIA, the world's largest commodity promotion organization, says its representation covers 95% of all U.S. dairy farmers and 85% of all milk marketed in the U.S. The organization had its beginnings in 1915 with the chartering of the National Dairy Council, formed to teach children about good eating habits. This was followed in 1940 with the founding of the American Dairy Assn., set up to begin aggressively advertising dairy products when the need for such promotion was first being recognized. Three decades later, in 1969, Dairy Research Inc. was started to assure continuing dairy market growth by developing new milk-related products, and in 1970 the UDIA was established to pull all these functions together in one coordinated dairy promotion program.

Support and promotion of the U.S. dairy industry is so complex that UDIA is only one of a panoply that also includes the International Assn. of Ice Cream Manufacturers, the National Promotion and Research Dairy Board, the Milk Industry Foundation, the DPFA, the NDPRB and the dozens of member and affiliated regional and local dairy organizations such as the South East UDIA, Wisconsin Milk Marketing Board and the New England Dairy & Food Council.

Even the UDIA continues to proliferate. Late in 1985, it formed a new group, the Dairy Industry Foundation, to raise $1 million for fighting world hunger. Relief is channeled through Church World Hunger/CROP and Catholic Relief Services.

While other areas of UDIA in 1985 dealt with crisis-management tasks in the year's cheese and milk salmonella contaminations, the ADA had its own problem to solve—the chronic malady of stagnant milk sales for many years. Continuing marketing promotion over the years and now the sharp upturn in ad spending for 1985 and 1986 appears to be helping. From 1950 to 1984, annual milk-product sales increases exceeded 3% in only two years. But in just the past two years sales jumped 7%, rising more than 3.3% in 1984 and 3.6% in 1985.

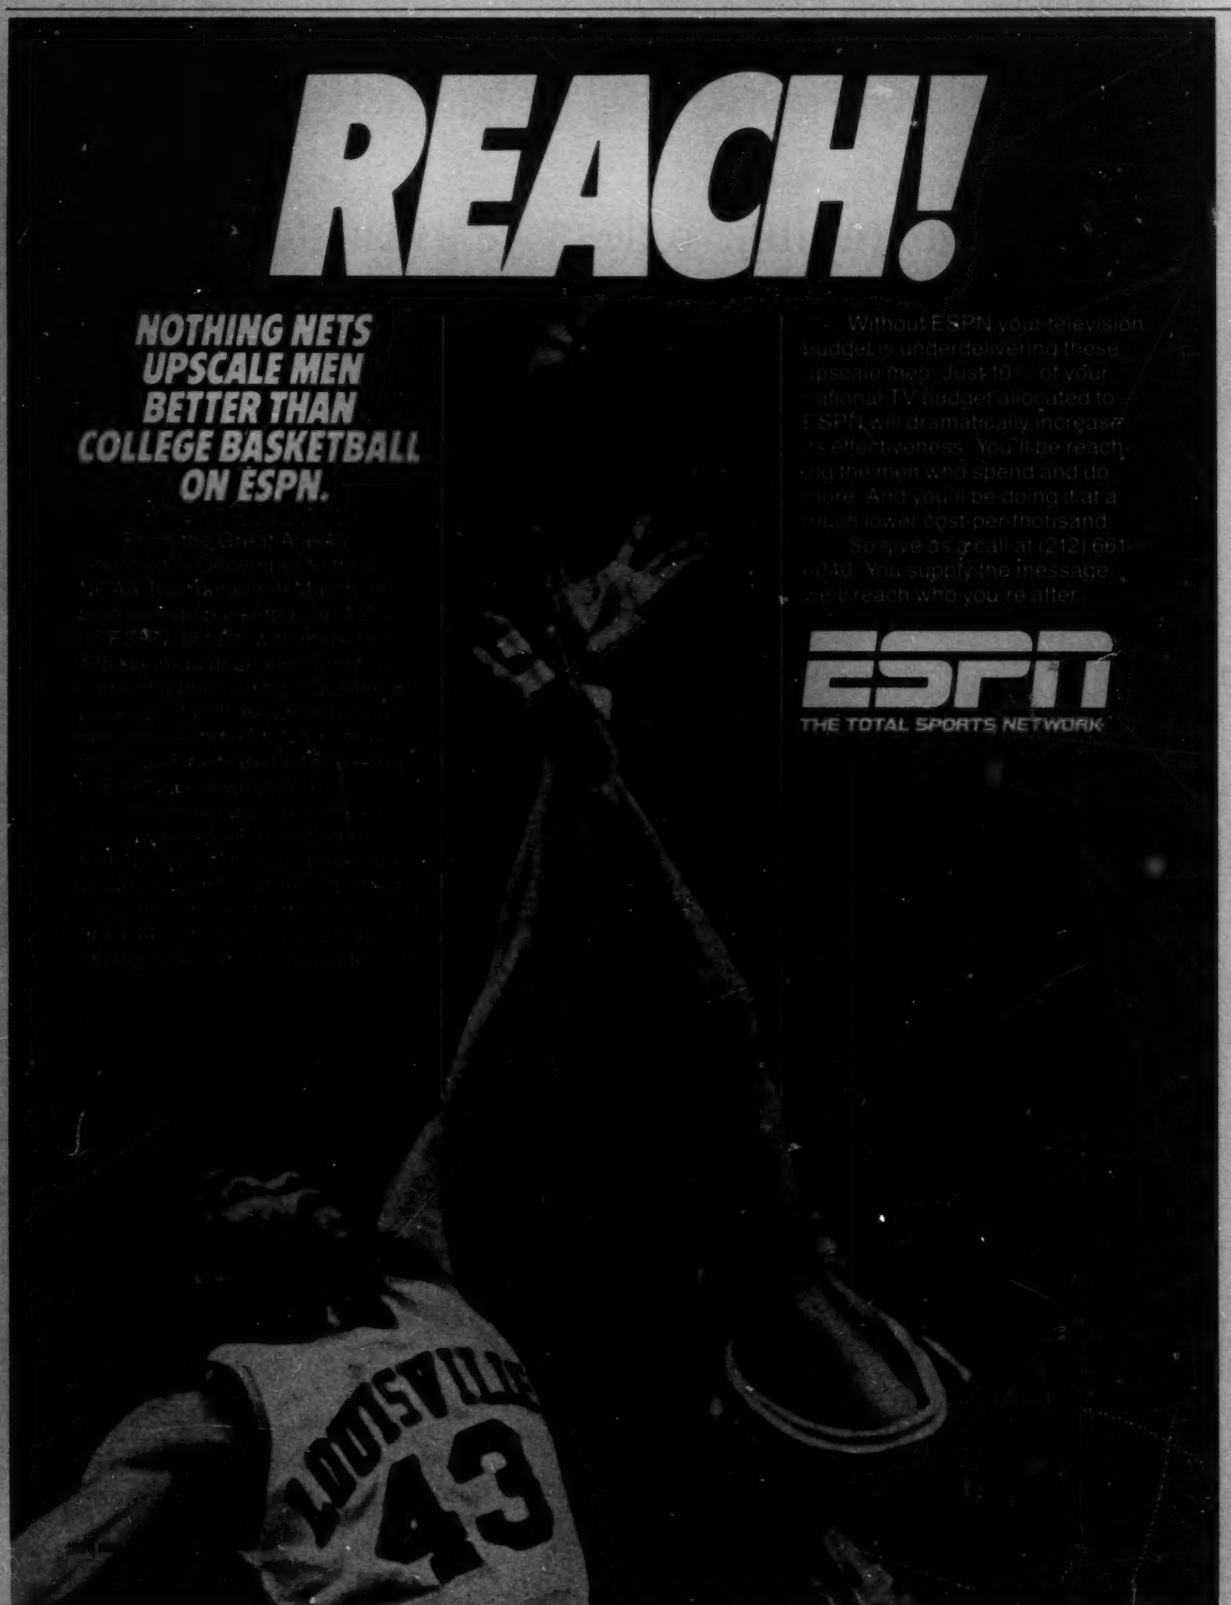
More unified action by the dairy industry is said to be the major factor in in this success. Aided and abetted by both the Dairy Promotion Federation Assn. and National Dairy Promotion & Research Board, the UDIA's ADA and the West Coast dairy promotion group, COW Dairymen—the acronym for California, Oregon and Washington—mounted major advertising programs to sell adults on milk, cheese, butter and ice cream. The 15¢ assessment from the new Dairy Promotion Program added up to the major surge in 1985 spending by ADA.

The Leading National Advertisers seven measured media figure alone was $99.4 million for 1985, compared with $23.7 million in 1984. The additional $3 million spent for unmeasured advertising went for point-of-purchase kits and installations, according to Donna Arcus, ADA director of advertising services.

In addition to planning and coordinating the UDIA dairy advertising program, a second ADA promotional effort is the Food Publicity Program which promote the use of dairy products singularly or as used in recipies. Another publicity phase is developing personal contact with food editors. The third area of ADA promotional responsibility is the foodservice program, aimed at increasing use of dairy products by distributors that supply foods to hotels, restaurants, schools and other institutional outlets.

A prime element of ADA advertising in 1985 was a big surge for what always has been a heavily supported product, fluid milk, which got $36.5 million in the LNA seven measured media. With the theme "Milk. America's Health Kick," the ADA targeted young adults, 18 to 34, and in six 30-second tv commercials, three radio commercials and two outdoor board designs showed them enjoying active sports and good family living. Four radio spots on milk were aimed at teens. Breakdown of the milk spending was $23.3 million for network tv, $13.1 million for spot tv, 4.5 million for radio and $25,900 for outdoor.

Five new 30-second tv commercials bore the general theme "Make Your Meals Sing With Real Cheese." All were aimed at adults, 25 to 54. In this series for the first time the ADA used cable tv networks, including USA Network, CBN and Lifetime, and the WTBS superstation. Also, the cheese campaign included three spreads that ran in national women's, household, cooking and general magazines.



Total seven-media spending for the cheese promotion was nearly $34 million, including $31.1 million for network tv and $1.6 million more for spot tv.

Under the aegis of the ADA, additional 1985 measured spending for combination advertising of milk, cheese, yogurt and cottage cheese totaled about $12 million, including $8.8 million for network tv, $2.04 million for spot tv, $1.02 million for cable. Advertising by regional dairy groups in the mid-Atlantic, Midwest and Pacific coast states added another $2.4 million to the total.

Butter received heavy backing in ADA measured spending through 1985, beginning early in the year with a tv commercial, "America Loves Butter," and extending into two radio spots for local campaigns. Still later, a new butter campaign took on margarine by stressing butter's flavor and "natural origins" versus oleo's qualities.

The ADA launched the new campaign, "What butter brings to everything is gold," early in 1986 via tv and magazines.

Working with the ADA on the campaign was its newly selected butter agency, Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago. In mid-1986, TLK resigned the account because of possible conflicts with work for a major client, R.J. Reynolds, whose products include Fleischmann's and Blue Bonnet margarine and Hawaiian Punch.

ADA measured spending for butter in 1985 was $5.13 million, with $2.78 million of that in spot tv, $1.3 million in network radio and $770,500 for magazines.

An additional multi-million support for dairy-product marketing also is provided through cooperative promotion tie-ins between the ADA and a host of co-partners. Co-partners, offering purchaser premiums of dairy products, were Quaker Oats Co. with Aunt Jemima pancake mixes and syrup, Cap'n Crunch cereal, Chewy granola bars and Dipps; Nabisco Oreo cookies and Nabisco Honey Maid graham crackers; Libby Lite fruits; General Foods Jell-O puddings, and Nestle Morsels.

Ralston Purina, Kellogg, Post and other cereal makers also joined with the ADA in offering rebates on milk and other dairy products on submission of proof-of-purchase seals from their cereal boxes. For every participant, Kellogg also kicked in $1 to the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island restoration project.

Underlying all of this advertising were two themes long a part of ADA promotion—use of the "REAL" seal for all dairy products and generic or nonbrand advertising of fluid milk.

The ADA says that as of 1985 about 90% of all potential users of the REAL seal are using it.

During the year, the ADA released two new REAL commercials using spokesman Vincent Price and the message: "Welcome to the Real World of Dairy Goodness."

Even with milk volumes increasing because whole milk sales, where the money is, are declining while less profitable fat-reduced milk sales are rising. Karen Roepken, ADA senior vp, marketing and economic research, reports that in 1980, total whole milk sold in the U.S. was 31.75 million lbs.; lowfat milk, 16.2 million lbs., and skim, 2.7 million lbs. By 1985, the proportions had shifted to whole, 27.7 million lbs.; lowfat, 20.2 million lbs., and skim, 3.1 million.

By vigorously promoting the sale of all dairy products the ADA helps its dairy farmer constituents cope with this problem of a calorie-conscious, cholesterol-shunning—but now calcium-seeking—world.

In current personnel changes, Edward A. Peterson became the new UDIA chief executive officer, and Elizabeth G. Walsh was named ADA director of food publicity.

American Express Co. juggled the spending weight it gives the various advertising media in 1985 as it altered its business segments by selling its cable operations and dramatically reducing its ownership in Fireman's Fund—both money losers.

Media spending by the company in 1985 involved major shifts in dollars from network tv, which dropped 27.5% to $40.4 million, and spot tv, off 13.3% to $19.8 million, largely in favor of magazines, up 62.6% to $33.5 million, according to Leading National Advertisers, which monitors seven major media.

Travel Related Services, including credit cards and travelers checks, experienced an increase of 19% in net income to $461 million on a 17% increase in sales, as the number of cards in use rose 10%, to 22.2 million. The charge volume jumped 16.7% to $55.4 billion.

Credit card service, the largest advertised item at American Express, received $56.8 million, up from $39.5 million in 1984, according to LNA, which showed across-the-board increases in magazines, network and spot tv.

This July, Travel Related Services broke a campaign supporting its new Global Assist program, a worldwide 24-hour medical and legal referral hotline with information on visas and inoculations. Services include transmission of urgent messages and interpreter services, among other things.

NOTES: Dollars in thousands. Sources: Magazine and newspaper supplements as reported by Publishers Information Bureau; network tv, spot tv, network radio and network cable as reported by Broadcast Advertisers Reports; outdoor as reported by Institute of Outdoor Advertising and Outdoor Advertising Assn. of America; except U.S. Government all spending, from agencies of the federal government. See Page 12 for breakout of media not monitored by Leading National Advertisers. For further explanation, see Where Ad Age got its data, Page 16.

While spending on credit card advertising increased, results were static or lower in other categories. LNA figures for travelers checks showed a decline of 38% to $10.9 million, virtually all reduced spending occuring in network tv, down from $12.2 million to $6.6 million. The checks are still being promoted with Karl Malden's grim warnings about potential vacation chaos using the theme, "It could happen to you."

Shearson Lehman Brothers, marking the first full year of operations following the merger with Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb, moved ahead sharply, with net income up 95%, to $201 million, on an increase of 42% in sales.

Shearson Lehman over-all media spending dropped from $16.9 million to $7 million in 1985, the biggest media reduction coming in spot tv, from $8.1 million in 1984 to $58,300 in 1985.

The company explains the drop as a sort of down time between shifting the marketing focus from individual to institutional investors. The 3-year-old ad campaign, themed "Minds Over Money," continues to run as does the "Weekly Newsletter" ad, appearing in the Wall Street Journal Monday edition. Ad creative and production is via Ira Madris, Bruce Nelson & Colleagues, a subsidiary of McCann-Erickson.

IDS Financial Services' reported net income of $76 million, up 23% on a growth of 40% in revenues. IDS advertising fell 45.5% to $7.2 million in 1985, most of that coming from network tv, which dropped from $11.4 million to $1.1 million in spending. Reed Saunders, senior vp-marketing for IDS, says the company is continuing an umbrella awareness campaign using actor Jason Robards, with tax reform and planning strategies a key theme.

The campaign has been using more print to cover the complex topics in more detail.

In February and March, 1986, IDS ran booklet inserts in news and financial magazines, pulling 75,000 inquiries. Another insert appears in September. Ogilvy & Mather handles. Mr. Saunders places current spending at $7 million.

Besides marking the integration of 1984 acquisitions, Lehman Brothers and IDS Financial Services, into American Express, 1985 saw the company moving away from other businesses. In August, it sold its half interest in Warner Amex Cable Communications to partner Warner Communications for $450 million and assumption of $550 million in debt. The company acknowledged it was a mistake to invest in cable systems. Cable's potential as a distribution channel for financial and travel services never panned out, the company says.

American Express continued to extricate itself from Fireman's Fund Corp. In an initial public stock offering in October, it pared its interest to 41%, and by May had reduced that to 29%. The initial sale brought American Express about $910 million. American Express retained Fireman's Fund American Life Insurance Co., a life and accident-health insurance company, as a part of Travel Related Services.

Renamed AMEX Life Assurance Co., this service has signed on Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco, as its agency.

Changes in the executive suite included the resignation of Sanford I. Weill as president and his replacement by Louis V. Gerstner Jr. Mr. Gerstner remains chairman and ceo of Travel Related Services.

Aldo Papone, formerly vice-chairman there, moved to president-chief operating officer of Travel Related Services.

On the magazine front, American Express Publishing Co. and Newsweek Inc. entered a joint venture to publish Travel & Leisure Asia. Jay Harris became publisher, leaving a position with Newsweek International. In March, Marianne Howatson, previously with the Magazine Publishers Assn., became publisher of Travel & Leisure, while James Berrien became publisher of Food & Wine, up from associate publisher.

So far in 1986 "the company has clearly stabilized," says Nancy Young, financial services analyst for Cyrus J. Lawrence Inc., New York, who does not expect any more surprises. She cites the Fireman's Fund divestiture as a surprise.

Ms. Young, however, questions American Express' ability to retain its position in credit cards, because of increased competition from bank cards and other credit cards. Travel and entertainment cards are reaching out to consumer markets as shopping cards, while more mass cards are reaching up for travel business. "The distinctions are diminishing," Ms. Young says, adding American Express has adjusted its advertising to portray its cards in shopping situations.

American Express could lose the higher fees individuals pay on green cards as it continues its push to get corporations to issue corporate cards to employes, says Ms. Young, who questions the company's logic that customers will continue to carry both.

Looking ahead to 1986-87 media planning, marketing execs say American Express might make some changes in the mix, reflecting the "buyer's market" in tv and magazine rates.

Sales at American Home Products Corp., which produces and markets brands ranging from Advil, Anacin and Inderal to Brach's and Chef Boy-Ar-Dee, are expected to improve from an over-all 4.4% growth in 1985 as new prescription drugs and brand extensions reach the market this year.

Improvement started in the first quarter of 1986 when sales hit $1.27 billion, up 4.8% from the prior year period and higher than any quarter in 1985.

AHP, showing marginal growth increases throughout its product segments domestically but flat sales abroad in 1985, had the greatest sales growth from its most heavily advertised segment, packaged medicines, which grew 7.2% worldwide and 9% domestically.

In that group, over-the-counter analgesics gained 18% in sales, led by the ibuprofen-based Advil, which completed its first full year on the market. AHP holds an estimated 6% share of the huge $8.1 billion U.S. nonprescription drug market. Advil, Anacin and Dristan—all from AHP's Whitehall Laboratories division—accounted for $97 million in measured media.

Close to $42 million was spent on the Anacin line, which includes both aspirin-based and acetaminophen-based adult and children's products. Despite the spending on the aspirin-based line of Anacin, which continues

Where Ad Age got its data for this 31st annual report

ADVERTISING AGE's 31st annual ranking of 100 leading national advertisers includes 100 profiles and 16 charts. Profiles list marketing executives, current agencies and account personnel, as well as advertising expenditures, sales and earnings figures, market shares and other data.

Advertising expenditures are for U.S. only and reflect calendar 1985 and 1984. Total estimates include measured and unmeasured spending.

Leading National Advertisers supplies measured expenditures in the following seven media: Magazine and newspaper supplements as supplied by Publishers Information Bureau; network tv, spot tv, network radio and network cable, as supplied by Broadcast Advertisers Reports, and outdoor as supplied by the Institute of Outdoor Advertising and the Outdoor Advertising Assn. of America.

Other media expenditures listed include newspaper as supplied by Media Records, business publications as supplied by Rome Reports, farm publications as supplied by Agricultural Marketing Information Services (AGRICOM) and spot radio as supplied by Radio Advertising Bureau.

PIB monitors 141 consumer magazines and New York Times Magazine, Parade and USA Weekend. BAR monitors ABC, NBC and CBS tv networks; 319 tv stations in 75 top markets with continuous monitoring in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles; CBN, CNN, ESPN, USA, MTV: Music Television and WTBS cable networks, and 15 radio networks. IOA and OAAA measure gross sales from more than 200 national poster and paint advertising plants in markets of over 100,000 population. Rome Reports monitors about 600 trade and professional publications. Media Records monitors 202 daily and Sunday newspapers.

Measured media expenditures for 1985 and 1984 are restated to reflect corporate structure as of Dec. 31, 1985. Companies acquired prior to that date are included in parent company ad spending for full calendar 1985 and 1984 totals. Likewise, units spun off before the end of calendar 1985 are subtracted.

One exception occurs: General Electric and RCA Corp. are treated as one company because any other editorial treatment ignores the advertising clout of the company as it exists at press time. Also, U.S. Government ad spending figures are supplied by agencies of the federal government rather than measured-media sources.

Unmeasured advertising figures are estimates and include direct mail, promotion, co-op and couponing. AD AGE beat reporters and corporate sources assisted in providing the unmeasured advertising.

Sales and earnings figures are taken from public documents. Where private companies will not divulge this information, an estimate or an "N/A" is used.

to lead that segment of the analgesics category with a 10-plus share of the market, it suffered a 2 percentage point drop in share. Anacin sales were bolstered by the introduction of coated caplets.

The company spent $35 million in measured media to back Advil, which debuted in 1984, much of that going for a Young & Rubicam campaign. The pills met company expectations for a newly launched consumer product, gaining close to a 5% share of the analgesic market, according to Smith-Barney analyst Adele Haley. Among ibuprofen products, it holds the lead against Bristol-Myer's Nuprin, which Ms. Haley says holds about a 2.5% share.

Billed as the "Advanced medicine for pain," Advil also competes against established analgesics like Johnson & Johnson's acetaminophen-based Tylenol, which dominates the market with its close to 30% share. With the expiration of the ibuprofen patent this fall, competitors like Johnson & Johnson and Sterling Drug are expected to crowd the category with their own ibuprofen clones.

Trendar, a newly formulated version of an ibuprofen-based product for the alleviation of menstrual cramps, was launched nationally in June. Kornhauser & Calene, New York, handles.

Dristan, fighting off a slowly eroding share of market now pegged at 7%, continued to outspend its growing list of competitors in the $800 million cold-remedy market, with close to $20 million in measured media support. In the 1970s, Dristan held a 22% share in the then-as-yet uncrowded category. The segment now is led by Richardson-Vicks' (P&G) Nyquil, with a 12% share, followed by Burroughs Wellcome's Actifed and Sudafed, which together hold a formidable 19% share. Dristan is estimated to remain the No. 1 multi-symptom tablet in the category for year-round use.

Category leaders Preparation H, a hemorrhoidal product, and Primatene, for bronchial asthma, received $11.4 million and $7.3 million in ad support, respectively.

Whitehall Laboratories revamped its marketing strategy for struggling Youth Garde moisturizer in an attempt to gain a foothold on the mass-oriented moisturizer market. Spokeswoman Catherine Deneuve was out at yearend in favor of a health-oriented anti-skin-cancer campaign. Media support totaled $2.7 million, a drop of 37% from the year earlier.

Food & household products, the second biggest ad-supported segment, consists of American Home Foods and Brach candies on the food side—units recording a modest 3% increase in sales—and household products, up 4%.

The bulk of the measured ad spending at American Home Foods went to the Chef Boy-Ar-Dee line of canned pastas. Spending of $18.5 million helped it keep its comfortable lead in its $430 million market, where it has an estimated 50% market share. But canned pasta is a relatively low margin, slow growth product segment. Two line extensions, a Smurf line that complements Chef Boy-Ar-Dee's successful Pac-Man line, debuted in four varieties, while part of the traditional pasta line appeared in a convenient 26-oz. size targeted to "today's smaller families."

The division also targeted the adult market, with its national introduction of the Mamma Leone line of six styles of pasta products in resealable jars. Mamma Leone's estimated $8 million to $10 million campaign was assigned to Young & Rubicam, New York, the agency of record for the Chef Boy-Ar-Dee line.

American Home Foods' entry in the $1 billion popcorn industry, Jiffy Pop popcorn, holds a 16% share of U.S. supermarket sales, along with the American Pop Corn Co.'s Jolly Time popcorn product. Beatrice Foods' Orville Redenbacher popcorn dominates the category with more than 30% of supermarket sales. Jiffy Pop's campaign, measured at $549,000, is directed at the children's market.

American Home Products' second food group, the E.J. Brach & Sons confectionery company, benefited modestly from line extensions, new products, acquisitions and a $6.4 million measured media ad budget.

Pick-A-Mix, Brach's primary merchandising vehicle and the largest such bulk candy, self-service program in the candy industry, introduced Rainbow Bears to capitalize on the popular jelly candy market.

In the packaged chocolate sector, Brach's rolled out Peanut Butter Putters nationally. Last year, Brach's acquired the Gardner Candy Co. of Tyrone, Pa., manufacturer of Peanut Butter Meltaway bar, which Brach's launched last year under the Brach's-Gardner name. A new product development laboratory was completed early this year in Chicago and is now operational.

The household products segment's Boyle-Midway division grew by 4% last year, aided by new products and line extensions, under the leadership of Theodore J. Host, who became the president of Boyle-Midway last year, after serving as vp-marketing at American Home Foods.

A new Woolite cold water wash ad campaign helped push advertising close to $12 million in measured media. Woolite gained in sales and remained the dominant brand in the fine fabric category.

Butter-flavor PAM cooking spray became one of Boyle-Midway's most successful new product launches after a full year on store shelves. The PAM line received nearly $11 million in measured media.

Dry Breezes air and fabric deodorizer also completed its first full year on the market and increased sales, backed by $2.5 million in advertising.

But the biggest new product news occurred in the Black Flag insecticide line. Black Flag holds 20% of the $637 million household insecticide market, a category dominated by S.C. Johnson & Son's Raid line of products, with close to a 50% share.

In May, 1986, Roach Ender was introduced with $15 million in backing and containing the patented chemical, Gencor, which claims to stop roaches from breeding by sterilizing their young and preventing births for four months. The Kornhauser & Calene-inspired print and tv campaign bills Roach Ender as "birth control for roaches."
